In my judgment, neither of these taxes is too high; but the combination of the two is something that the Democratic Party have not thought of or they would make some allowance in this bill for the estates which pay such high taxes under State laws.

Take an estate of a million dollars. The State of New York will collect $36,750; the Federal Government will collect $38,500—a total of $75,000. That is the income for a year and a half from that estate. The rate will be 7½ per cent.

Take an estate of $2,000,000. The State of New York will collect $76,750; the United States will collect $98,000. From this point on the Federal tax grows higher than the State tax. The total will be $174,000.

Mr. President, I am not particularly sorry for the son or the daughter that inherits an estate of $2,000,000 and contributes $174,000 in taxes; but I contend that the collection of such an amount of money as that from one estate in the sight of all men, when 99 men out of 100 are not called upon to pay anything, is a poisonous influence in the community.

Take an estate of $5,000,000. The State of New York will collect $196,000, the United States $336,000, a total of $533,000, or 10 per cent.

In the case of an estate of $10,000,000 the combined taxes will be $1,232,000, or 12⅓ per cent.

Mr. President, it is very easy to draft an inheritance-tax law to be placed upon the Federal statute books when not all the States in the Union tax their people the way the State of New York taxes her people. The people of the State of New York pay $22.80 per head in State taxes every year. We are one of the most heavily taxed communities in this country. We are heavily taxed because we have gone ahead with our internal improvements, and we have enormous burdens forced upon us by our geographical situation; and it does become a serious matter for the government of that State to tell where it is going to get its revenue in the future. Its State budget in 1912 was $52,000,000. The educational system of the State costs the taxpayers, including local taxes, $100,000,000 a year, because we have the most expensive and comprehensive educational system of all the Union. We want the best; but where is New York going to get the money in the future? The imposition of this Federal inheritance tax absolutely estops New York from taking any more money than she is taking now from her own citizens when their estates are transferred.

That does not seem like a serious situation to a Senator who comes from a State that does not tax its citizens heavily. There are States in this Union that tax their citizens only $4.50 a head ad valorem. New York taxes hers $22.80 a head, not including the license and corporation taxes. The ad valorem taxes on property per head amount to $22.80.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has called attention to the fact that one State in this Union contributes $1 of taxation for every $625 of property value. That is the State of Massachusetts. But there is another State that he mentioned that only contributes $1 on $3,700 of value. The State that collects but $1 out of every $3,700 does not mind this direct tax. Of course it does not.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York means to state that the Federal authorities collect that amount of tax, because the State collects even more. The Federal levy of taxes as they now exist amounts to that sum, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the statement was made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and of course the RECORD will contain his statement correctly. I understand now that it is the Federal tax alone.

Mr. President, I shall not continue with figures on the inheritance tax and the effect it will have upon the State of New York, except to say that the figures which I have already submitted will not equal those to be imposed upon the people of that State under the collateral inheritance tax, the collateral rates in New York being higher.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator perhaps is going to refer later on in his remarks to our municipalities—the great cities of New York and Philadelphia. They all need revenue for growing needs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, later on I did intend to refer to that, and to say that the taxes which are imposed by the State are in a large measure so contrived as to give the municipalities, or the subdivisions, some of the benefit. They do not all go into the State treasury. Once again, asserting the seriousness of this proposition, we must remember that the city of New York has a bonded indebtedness nearly if not quite as large as that of the Federal Government, and the sinking-fund and interest charges on those bonds must be paid by local taxation. The Federal Government does not lift its finger to help those people bear their burden. It is not surprising that many good people are alarmed at this indication that the Federal Government is going to come in and duplicate the taxes of the States and thereby deprive them of their sources of revenue. If the policy is to be extended, if the theory and practice is to be permanent, Mr. President, it will be inevitable that the Federal Government will have to take over some of the functions of the States in order to relieve them of that burden.

Now, Mr. President, a word about that provision of this bill which imposes a tax upon the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits of corporations whose capital is in excess of $99,000. Why the figure "$99,000" was set, I do not know. However, having been set at that figure, the tax has a peculiar effect in some of the communities of the United States and with respect to some of the corporations.

The law of New York provides that no fire-insurance company can be organized in that State unless it has a paid-in capital stock of $200,000; so that kind of an organization, of course, falls within the tax provision of this bill. But scores and scores of fire-insurance corporations organized in other States which do not prescribe such a standard can go out and do business and not pay a cent. Why this $99,000 exemption? If some of the States of this Union, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has said, think it wise to force their own fire insurance companies to be of sufficient financial strength to meet the emergencies which may confront them from time to time, why should they be penalized because they are strong and because they protect the policyholders, when scores of smaller companies, of less than $99,000 capital, organized in States that take no such precaution to protect their people from insolvent fire-insurance companies, are exempt from the tax?

There are some very suspicious aspects of this bill with respect to the taxation of industries and forms of business, and I think that particular phase of it is as strange, if not stranger, than any of them. Its effect upon life insurance companies has already been enlarged upon by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] in a very able diagnosis. As I read this bill, a mutual life-insurance company will have to pay a tax upon its contingency reserve, because it is in the nature of a surplus. If I am wrong, I am sure the Senator from Illinois will correct me.

Mr. President, what is a contingency reserve? It is not an asset of the company. In no sense is it a form of wealth which should be taxed. It is a liability. It belongs to the policyholders, and in pursuance of laws or regulations of the States in a large number of cases it is set aside for their protection, to meet some great emergency which may arise, in order that their policies may be worth their face value. Why should it be taxed? This is not a tax on wealth. There seems to be a confusion of thought here as to what wealth consists of. Some people are apt to think, when they read of the assets and liabilities of a great mutual life insurance society or corporation, which has hundreds of millions of dollars of policies, that the corporation itself is like some individual who can be picked out and taxed on the ground that he is rich.

But, Mr. President, those assets in the case of a mutual life-insurance company do not belong to the president and board of directors, if there are such. They belong to the policyholders. Three-fourths of the great life-insurance companies of the United States are mutual companies, and when a tax of this sort is imposed upon the contingency reserve of a mutual life-insurance corporation you are not only imposing a penalty upon prudence, but you are imposing a tax upon the policyholder, not upon the corporation as such.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if these things had been taken into more careful consideration that provision would not have appeared in this bill.

There are many other features here which are susceptible of discussion. I do not, however, at this time care to take the time of the Senate much longer. If we are to have a system of direct taxes imposed by the Government of the United States, I wish some effort would be made to make those taxes truly democratic, so as not to leave the suspicion that they are sectional in spirit, nor the suspicion that they are intended to single out some class of people and relieve other classes of people.

I feel very deeply in this matter. If a system of direct taxation, carried out in the spirit of this bill, is enacted, it can undoubtedly raise the revenue, but it will raise it in such a way as to atrophy the democratic spirit of many a community in the country.

Sometimes I think I am more of an old-fashioned Democrat than some of the men on the other side of the Chamber. Time was when the Democratic Party took a pride in what was termed the doctrine of home rule. Time was when the Democratic Party insisted that there should not be overcentralization of power. Time was when the Democratic Party endeavored to lead us on to believe that the communities of the United States could and should solve a majority of their problems. In some respects I have always had a sympathy with those doctrines. I have always believed—and I believe to-day—that no democracy can live unless its inspiration springs from the farms, villages, small towns, and cities of the country. I do not believe that any democracy can live any great length of time that receives its inspiration or its instructions or its commands from above; and if we are not careful in so distributing throughout all the little communities scattered over this continent a democratic sense of responsibility, if we are not careful to teach the people not only in our schools but through our legislation that they owe something to the Government of the United States, whether it be only a 2-cent revenue stamp or a 50-cent or a $5 payment of some sort, no matter how small it is—if we do not teach them that they owe something to this great Government that protects them we can not survive as a democracy; we will become ruled by classes, and eventually not only the form of government but our whole theory of self-government will collapse.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator to withhold that motion for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withhold the motion?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to submit a resolution and ask that it lie on the table until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 254), as follows:

Resolved, That immediately following the disposition by the Senate of the revenue bill (H. R. 16763), the corrupt practices act (H. R. 15842) shall be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senate is unable to make unfinished business by a resolution of this kind.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the resolution go to the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All right. That is understood.

Mr. SMOOT. Just for the RECORD, I wish to call attention to the fact that it is impossible to make any bill the unfinished business by a resolution. The only way that a bill can be made unfinished business is at the time when pending unfinished business is disposed of and then it can only be made the unfinished business by a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was so informed and so stated.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senate to consider that question when the resolution comes up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be laid on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I give notice that when the resolution comes up I will make a point of order against it; that it can not be received.

Mr. OWEN subsequently submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 255) for consideration:

Resolved, That immediately following the disposition by the Senate of the revenue bill (H. R. 16763), the corrupt practices act (H. R. 15842) shall be immediately taken up for consideration.

EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to insert in the RECORD without reading a letter from Charles M. Galloway, acting president of the Civil Service Commission, to Hon. J. P. Tumulty, of date August 11, 1916, in which he gives a statement as to the increase of offices under this administration.

There being no objection the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 11, 1916.

Hon. J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

MY DEAR MR. TUMULTY: I am in receipt of your letter of August 9, asking for information regarding a query contained in a letter which was inclosed.

The letter referred to is from Mr. H. E. Gregory, Briarcliff Lodge, New York, in which he requests to know whether the statement in the platform of the Republican Party that under the present administration 30,000 offices have been created is true, and also whether most, if not all, of such offices were exempted from the provisions of the civil-service law regarding examinations of candidates, etc.

The extract from the Republican platform referred to states that the Democratic Party has created since March 4, 1913, 30,000 offices outside the civil-service law, at an annual cost of $44,000,000 to the taxpayers of the country.

The commission publishes in each of its annual reports a statement of the extent of the executive civil service, classified and unclassified, based upon information officially collected by the Bureau of the Census and other reliable sources, and reports received from the different departments and offices, as required by the civil-service rules. The figures are published merely as approximations, but it is believed they are reliable. These published statements show that the grand total number of employees in the executive civil service on June 30, 1912, was 395,460, and on June 30, 1915, 476,363.

On June 30, 1913, the commission included for the first time certain employees of the Post Office Department, as follows:

Clerks in fourth-class post offices	62,000
Mail messengers	7,725
Star-route contractors	12,432
Total	82,157

When these classes of employees are eliminated the figures show that there has been no increase in the number of employees in the executive civil service. There has been growth in certain branches of the service, but there has been a reduction in the number of employees in other branches. The number of positions subject to competitive examination has increased greatly during the period. The number of exemptions from examination of newly created positions has been small. The largest number was the force for the assessement and collection of the income tax, which was exempted for a period of two years. This number was 630.

Very sincerely, yours,

CHAS. M. GALLOWAY, Acting President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17498) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 6941) granting a pension to Frank J. Conway (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6942) granting an increase of pension to Mary Chapin Buck (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 for labor and material for construction and installation of awnings, frames, and screens for windows and porches at the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum in the District of Columbia intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HUGHES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, and 15.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"The name of Robert Hedrick, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry (subsequently Company F, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry) and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

And the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM HUGHES,
T. TAGGART,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
M. P. KINKAID,
Managers on the part of the House.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 25, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, infinite Spirit, for the sublime faith which enables us to see, back of all that we perceive with our physical senses, a supreme intelligence, a moral order, a spiritual realm. Help us, we beseech Thee, through the glorious example of the Jesus of Nazareth, to adjust our lives to the higher order of things, that in thought, word, and deed we may fulfill our mission here in this world, and pass on triumphantly to the larger life in the realms of eternity. This we ask in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, August 22, 1916, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 17498. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in enrolling the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 15774, the Clerk is directed, on page 43, line 18, of the original bill, to enroll the salary of the janitor of the old Central High School building and annex in the sum of $1,000, and correct the total of the amended paragraph and the total on page 46, in line 14, of the bill, by inserting the sum of $2,680 and $174,470, respectively.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17501. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the President had, on August 22, 1916, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

S. 1159. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, Oreg., both being municipal corporations, for park purposes;

S. 1351. An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and waterholes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same;

S. 5466. An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890;

S. 5976. An act to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896;

S. 6308. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease, for production of oil and gas, ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming; and

S. 6372. An act to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SHIPPING.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the bill H. R. 15455 on Tuesday last there was some discussion as to the proper disposition of that bill. The Speaker ruled that the amendments of the Senate made no charge upon the Treasury, and that, therefore, the bill and amendments were entitled to remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken about what the Speaker held. But whether it was right or wrong, what the Speaker said or held was that, according to the information he had, the amendments were not subject to the rule, and——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That was what I understood—according to the information that the Speaker then had. He had information that there had been no change in the financial status of the bill by the Senate amendments. But the point I make is that there had been a change in the financial part; that the several amendments that were adopted in the Senate changed the financial status of the bill; and, if so, the bill was not entitled to remain upon the Speaker's table, but should go to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Which amendment does the gentleman claim involves a charge upon the Public Treasury?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Well, I will cite them. The commissioners—there were five commissioners originally in the bill, and——

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Number 9. There were two department secretaries on the commission, and there were two commissioners added instead, who would draw compensation, not provided for in the House bill. I have not examined the proposition fully, but I am informed by those who have examined it that there are nine different propositions that affect the financial status of the bill in the amendments which have been adopted by the Senate and which were sent here from that body.

Now, of course, I agree that the Speaker took the information that was given to him. He was like myself, and I did not know anything about these amendments. I was not conferred with, and could not know what the amendments were, only as I happened to notice in the newspaper that there were some amendments. I had no information that there were any amendments offered to the bill of any kind whatsoever, but it is my belief that the amendments offered to the bill were of such a nature that they affected the financial status of the bill. There are propositions in the Senate amendments for repairs of the vessels that may be bought or leased. That expense was to come out of the Treasury. That was not provided for originally in the bill. That is amendment No. 11, and there are several other amendments; enough amendments, at any rate, in my belief, to send the bill to the committee under the rules. Of course if the Speaker had known of the conditions that existed I have no question but that he would have sent the bill to the committee, where I believe it rightfully belongs.

I make no criticism of the Speaker, and I do not wish in any way to offer criticism of his action. He acted in the best light he had. He was told that there were no changes adding burdens on the Treasury in the amendments made in the Senate, but I claim that there are several changes made by these amendments, and without enumerating any more I am of the opinion that these two that I have mentioned are sufficient to send it to the committee. And I make the point of order that it is not properly on the Speaker's table, but should at once be referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, where it may be considered.

And I wish to say, further, while I am on my feet, that I think the practice of bringing any bill from another body to this House and passing upon it without the membership of the House knowing anything about the amendments, or that any Senate amendments should be brought before this body without the amendments being printed for the use of Members and the advantage of information given to the House, is a reprehensible practice. The paper that was printed relative to the amendments is so indefinite in character that it is like looking at a Chinese puzzle to know what is referred to. I sent a messenger for a copy of the amendments, but he returned stating none had been printed. Subsequently the Republican leader furnished me a copy of the Senate amendments. To my mind, that is a very reprehensible practice on a bill that represents the amount of money that this bill represents. The salaries of these men, I will agree, are not paid for out of the $50,000,000 of bonds, but they are to be appropriated for by the House. It goes beyond the $50,000,000.

This increase in salaries provided in the bill—because there are two additional members—changes entirely the status of the bill. Therefore it is not properly on the Speaker's table, and I do not think the Speaker would have so ruled if he had had full information as to the character of the amendments to which he was entitled, and to which this House was entitled.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman refer to the page as to the increase of salaries or increase of membership?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I did not say "increase of membership." There was a Secretary of the Navy and a Secretary of Commerce on the board or commission, two members of that commission who were to serve without any compensation. Those were stricken out in the Senate, and two additional members were added to the bill in the Senate. There is no increase in the number, but there is an increase in the amount of money to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

I may say that I proposed an amendment of that character in the committee myself when the bill was under consideration, but I was met with this proposition: "Do you intend to support the bill?" I said, "I can not tell what the bill will be. I will see what the bill is before I will agree to support it or to support any proposition. I can not promise to support the bill when I do not know what it will be when finally reported. I shall not agree to support anything in advance."

I was told that if I would not support the bill my amendments should not be considered by the committee. Now, we find that the Senate came to the same conclusion that I did, that they would wipe out these two secretaries, who would probably be mere figureheads and probably would not meet with the commission except when their votes were wanted to put something through the shipping board. For that reason I thought no Cabinet officer should be a member of the board. The Senate saw fit to change the board membership, and that I hold adds to the expense; and on that account, without enumerating any other cases, the bill ought to go to the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNER. Before the gentleman from Missouri speaks will he allow me to make an additional suggestion, so that the gentleman may have an opportunity to reply in full?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should like to have the same opportunity.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure that the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is sustained with regard to the commissioners. Since my attention has been called to it, I have not had an opportunity to look into it carefully, but it appears to me that there is no increase in the commissioners, and therefore no increase of demand from the Treasury. That is amendment No. 7.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to another amendment and to the provision of the rule.

The rule, as the Speaker well knows, is Rule XX of the House, which is the prohibitory rule. It is as follows:

> Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Interpreted briefly and without reservation that means simply that if there shall be an amendment put to a House bill by the Senate which in and of itself necessarily increases the amount of the appropriation or increases the amount of the charge on the Treasury, then certainly it must be considered in the House in Committee of the Whole. I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, of the distinction that is made here in the note which follows and says:

> A Senate amendment which is a modification merely of a House proposition, like the increase or decrease of the amount of an appropriation, and does not involve new and distinct expenditure, is not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

I take it that it is not necessary to say to the Chair that if, however, it does necessarily involve a new and distinct expenditure, then in such case it must be considered by the Committee of the Whole. Nor need I say to the Speaker that it need not in terms specify that a larger amount of money shall be taken from the Treasury. If by the terms of any Senate amendment the effect of the amendment will be to increase materially the expenditure in and of itself, and not merely increase any expenditure for any particular object already made by the House, then in such case it would be subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Take the first rule which the gentleman read, Rule XX, where it says "if originating in the House it would be subject to that point." Does the gentleman contend that amendment No. 7 would be subject to any point of order if it originated in the House?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not, Mr. Speaker, and I am not arguing that now. What I have said is not in regard to the objection that has been made, but in regard to the amendment found on page 25 of the bill, to which I call attention, and which is numbered 46.

Now, I want to call attention very briefly to what the bill provides in regard to the duties of these commissioners. They are, first, enabled under the terms of the bill to either purchase or to build ships, and under certain conditions to operate them. Under conditions in other sections of the bill they are allowed to organize the corporations for the purpose of operating and leasing these ships. There are other duties granted to the commissioners. For instance, amendment 28, on pages 12 and 13: They are there given the power to investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries. That particular power is extended, and an amendment has been made by the Senate which adds very largely, or rather suggests very largely, additional duties in the same line as we provided by the text in the House bill.

Then, as illustrating the power and the right of the Senate to amend, is inserted here a long amendment, which, however, is in the same line, and grants further powers to the commission along the same line as that indicated in the text of the House bill. That is not within the rule, and would not require the amended bill to be sent to the committee.

But when we come to an examination of this section 46, we shall find that it imposes upon the commission an entirely new and distinct power and duty, a power and duty that has very little, if any, relevancy to the preceding sections of this act. It says that the commission shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, whenever complaint shall be made to it, to investigate the action of any foreign Government with respect to the privileges afforded and burdens imposed upon vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade, whenever it shall appear that the laws, regulations, or practices of any foreign Government operate in such a manner that vessels of the United States are not accorded equal privileges, and so forth.

There, Mr. Speaker, is a new and independent and an entirely distinct duty, and certainly an enlarged appropriation will be necessary to enable the board to carry it into effect. In fact, I think I am justified in saying that this particular section—this new amendment that is inserted as a new section by the Senate—will entail upon the commission as much duty as all the other sections in the bill. It embraces the whole scope of the foreign trade in the United States. It not only affects the ships which this commission is to purchase, lease, or control, but it also refers to all American ships and American shipping and to the rights of the American in foreign markets.

It can not be done, Mr. Speaker, without entailing a large expense and charge upon the Treasury. It is an entirely separate and distinct proposition. It is an amendment, therefore, that must be considered by the House in the Committee of the Whole. Certainly an important amendment of this kind that must necessarily entail a charge on the Treasury would be outside of the rules of the House, unless it could be considered by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and if so, Mr. Speaker, then, as I understand it, it is the duty of the Speaker to send this bill now on the table to the committee for their consideration, in order that it may be returned to the House and there considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to page 6 of the bill, the eleventh amendment. It adds the power to expend money in a new way by granting the privilege to make necessary repairs and alterations upon such vessels. I would likewise call attention—though it is not a matter of spending money—to the amendment made by the Senate, the last one, on pages 30 and 31, being amendment 48, which would have been held entirely out of order in the House, and as not germane.

The SPEAKER. Which amendment is that?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The last one, pages 30 and 31, a section which is added authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse a clearance when the master refuses to accept freight. That is entirely distinct from anything included in the bill, and would have been subject to a point of order under the rules of the House as new matter.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but, unless it involves some appropriation, it is not an amendment to be considered in this discussion. You can not raise the point of order against the Senate amendment simply because it is not germane or would not have been germane in the House. If that were the rule, we would never get through.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The rule provides that any amendments of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order; that it shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole; and if originating in the House it would be subject to that point. I call attention also, I say, to certain changes which are material as to money matters. One of those is on page 7, which changes the mode of sale, and provides that it must be on competitive sale after advertisement. It is a mode of sale. There is another amendment, No. 20, on pages 8 and 9, which provides that no vessel shall be sold to foreigners unless first tendered to the board in good faith at the price offered by others. Again, on page 11, amendment No. 25, it is provided that the corporation must not engage in the operation of the vessel unless the board is unable to contract with a person, a citizen of the United States, for purchase, lease, or charter, and then provides that public notice must be given that vessels are offered, and the terms and conditions on which the contract shall be made, and that it shall invite competitive offerings. That is a provision with reference to business matters to be carried on by the board in which they necessarily will have to make various expenses and which changes the scheme of the bill with reference to these matters.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is mistaken in his statement that the Speaker was not informed of these amendments.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand what the gentleman says.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I stated that the gentleman from Massachusetts was mistaken when he said that the Speaker was not informed about these amendments.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have the Speaker's own statement to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will clear that up himself. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] brought the bill to the Speaker. Before doing so he talked with the Speaker. The Chair took the bill down to the hotel with him at night, intending to examine it thoroughly, but some one called about other public business and the Chair did not do so. That is the situation. The gentleman from Missouri did his duty, but the Speaker perhaps was lax in his.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And the bill with Senate amendments had been printed and was available to the membership of the House when we met on Tuesday last. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] took the position that the Senate amendments involved financial expenditure. I do not know of any rule of this House which applies to just such a situation as he may have in mind. Just what he meant I do not know, because he did not make himself clear. The bill is properly on the Speaker's table and should only be referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries or to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if it involves one of the following conditions enumerated in Rule XIII. Rule XIII provides that there shall be three calendars to which all business reported from committees shall be referred, viz:

First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue—

Neither this bill nor the Senate amendments belong to that class—

general appropriation bills—

and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

This bill, as reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and as considered in the House, does appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States, and was properly referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and was considered and was reported back to the House and passed.

Rule XXIV, paragraph 2, provides as follows:

Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from heads of departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by Members; but House bills with Senate amendments, which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine.

If the provision above quoted, relating to House bills with Senate amendments, is taken in connection with Rule XX, to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] called attention, it makes it clear that the Senate amendments to this bill are such as do not require to be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Rule XX reads:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Now, taken in connection with paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV it makes clear that the provision of paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV applies to Senate amendments to House bills, and not to House bills with Senate amendments. The language of the rule, "which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole" refers to the Senate amendments only, and not to House bills with Senate amendments.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] says that by the elimination of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce from this board the expenses of the board are increased. Just by what process of reasoning he arrives at that conclusion I am at a loss to know. This bill, as it passed the House, provides that the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce shall be ex officio members of the board and shall serve without pay. The bill further provides for five additional members of the board at a salary of $10,000 each. How the elimination of the Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Commerce from the board would increase the expenditures I do not know.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does this amendment leave the same number of members of the board as when those two Cabinet members were in?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There were seven members of the board with the Cabinet members.

The SPEAKER. Originally?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Originally. The two Cabinet members are eliminated, and there are left five members to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Now, does this substitute two outside members appointed by the President?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it does not change the bill in that regard at all and it does not increase the membership of the board. The House bill provided for five members plus the two Cabinet Members. The Senate strikes out the two Cabinet Members and leaves the five members as provided in the House bill. The Senate reduces their salary from $10,000 to $7,500, and I do not assume that anyone will contend that that involves an increase of appropriation out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. What section is it that provides for these commissioners?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Section 3, page 3, of the bill as it passed the House provides as follows:

The board shall be composed of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce, as members ex officio, and five commissioners, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Now, the Senate amendment strikes out these words, Senate amendment numbered 7—

The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce, as members ex officio, and—

Leaving the section to read:

The board shall be composed of five commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Now, on page 4, section 4, Senate amendment 8 strikes out the words "except the ex officio members," to make section 4 conform to section 3 as amended, and strikes out "$10,000" and inserts "$7,500" in lieu thereof, the effect of which is to reduce the salary of the five commissioners to $7,500.

Now, I will take the other amendments as I come to them. In my opinion none of the Senate amendments can be construed as directly or indirectly appropriating money or property within the meaning of the rule.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] suggests that amendment numbered 11, which provides that the board may make or cause to be made necessary repairs or alterations of vessels purchased or constructed by them, will involve increased expenditures for which provision must be made by further appropriation. The section, as the Chair will note, provides (sec. 5, p. 5)—

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards or navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards, or to purchase, lease, or charter vessels suitable, as far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit, for use as naval auxiliaries or Army transports, or for other naval or military purposes.

Now, the effect of amendment numbered 11 is to provide that they may make necessary repairs on and alterations of such vessels. Now, it is a question of construction whether or not the board under the power to purchase or construct ships, would not have had the power to make alterations or repairs. There can not be any increased expenditures involved on that account by the Senate amendment as I will make plain by reference to another section of the bill. Now, if the Chair will turn to section——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Amendment 11 provides:

And to make necessary repairs on and alterations of such vessels.

Can they make repairs and alterations of a vessel without paying for it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say it is a question of construction whether they had the power to make such repairs and alterations under the provisions of section 5 without the Senate amendment; but, conceding that it would involve expenditures for that purpose, which to my mind is obvious, the limit of the expenditure that the board may make to construct, purchase, repair, or alter vessels is limited in section 13, page 14, to $50,000,000.

Section 13 provides:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11—

Section 5 is the one to which we have just referred—no liability shall be incurred exceeding a total of $50,000,000.

Now, the limitation in section 13 on the expenditures which may be made by the board under section 5 to build or purchase or repair ships is $50,000,000. If the repair or alteration of ships involves expenditures, as it would necessarily, it would limit the sum available to buy or build ships; but section 13 limits the expenditures to $50,000,000 for all these purposes, and that is not changed by the Senate amendment. And by no stretch of the imagination can it be said that the Senate amendment involves an increased expenditure of money within the provisions of the bill, because the bill as it passed the House limited all of the expenditures to $50,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Does not that amendment authorize a new line of expenditure?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not. But suppose it did? There is a limit on the expenditures as it passed the House, and they do not increase that limit. Now, with reference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa that——

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman allow a question in that connection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In just a moment. Amendment No. 28 is the one to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] called attention. Section 13 of the bill as it passed the House provided that the board should investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry.

Senate amendment No. 28 undertakes to extend the powers of the board and provides:

It shall examine the rules under which vessels are constructed abroad and in the United States, and the methods of classifying and rating same; and it shall examine into the subject of marine insurance, the number of companies in the United States, domestic and foreign, engaging in marine insurance, the extent of the insurance on hulls and cargoes placed or written in the United States, and the extent of reinsurance of American maritime risks in foreign companies, and ascertain what steps may be necessary to develop an ample marine insurance system as an aid in the development of an American merchant marine.

That does ostensibly enlarge the powers of the board, so far as investigations are concerned. But it is purely speculative whether that would involve any increased expenditure. I think I could get all that information without the expenditure of any sum of money beyond postage stamps and the cost of correspondence, because this information is available if called for from the proper sources, and the rules of the House provide that in determining whether or not the amendment referred to comes within the rules resort shall not be made to mere speculation. (Hinds' Precedents, Vol. IV, secs. 4809, 4810, 4811, and 4818.)

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I think perhaps the gentleman misunderstood me. I agree that is a proper amendment. I was only using that as an illustration to show what I conceive to be a proper amendment in the extension of the language or powers of the bill, admitting that No. 28 is a proper amendment, but trying to draw a distinction between that and amendment No. 46. I think the gentleman misunderstood my point.

While I am on my feet, I want to call the gentleman's attention to amendments Nos. 30 and 31, to which he alluded just before taking up amendment No. 28. As the language originally stood, Mr. Speaker, it said:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11 no expenditure shall be made nor liability incurred.

That is on page 14. The Senate, however, struck out the language "expenditure shall be made nor," and let the word "liability" remain, so that it reads now under the Senate amendment:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11 no liability shall be incurred.

There is no limitation, then, on the expenditures, according to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I understand the meaning of the two words, "liability" is a broader word than "expenditure," and if no liability may be incurred beyond a certain sum, surely there can not be any expenditure authorized beyond that sum.

The Senate struck out the words "expenditure shall be made nor," because they took the view that the word "liability" was the larger word, and the one that would limit expenditure as well, and that is the common-sense view to take of it.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman thinks that the liability is really enlarged by striking out the limitation on expenditures?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not say so. I say, when you strike out the word "expenditure" and leave in the word "liability" you include "expenditure." They left in the word of the most comprehensive meaning. Both words were in the bill when it passed the House. The expenditures of the board must come within the sum for which they may incur liability, and they can not incur liabilities beyond $50,000,000. There can not be anything clearer than that.

It is my opinion that the amendment to which the gentleman from Iowa refers, amendment No. 28, does not increase the power of the board at all. They have the power to make these investigations set out specifically in Senate amendment No. 28 under section 13 of the bill as it passed the House. Senate amendment No. 28 does not confer any additional power on the board, hence can not create any additional charge on the Treasury. But be that as it may, it does not on its face involve any increased expenditure unless we should go into the realm of speculation, and if we did it would be very difficult then to determine what, if any, the increased expenditure would be, and the rules of the House are not aimed at anything of that sort, as is clearly shown by the authorities cited.

Senate amendment No. 46, page 25, provides:

The board shall have power, and it shall be its duty, whenever complaint shall be made to it, to investigate the action of any foreign Government with respect to the privileges afforded and burdens imposed upon vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade whenever it shall appear that the laws, regulations, or practices of any foreign Government operate in such a manner that vessels of the United States are not accorded equal privileges in foreign trade with vessels of such foreign countries or vessels of other foreign countries, either in trade to or from the ports of such foreign country, or in respect of the passage or transportation through such foreign country of passengers or goods intended for shipment or transportation in such vessels of the United States, either to or from ports of such foreign country or to or from ports of other foreign countries—

And so forth. Now, it is purely speculative as to whether or not the exercise of that power would involve any increased expenditures. The amendment further provides that—

It shall be the duty of the board to report the results of its investigation to the President with its recommendations, and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to secure by diplomatic action equal privileges for vessels of the United States engaged in such foreign trade. And if by such diplomatic action the President shall be unable to secure such equal privileges, then the President shall advise Congress as to the facts and his conclusions by special message, if deemed important in the public interest, in order that proper action may be taken thereon.

I again call the Speaker's attention to the language of section 13 of the bill as it passed the House, and venture the opinion that the board is given the power by that section to make every investigation specifically called for in Senate amendment 46, which I have just quoted; but if I am wrong in that, and I am very sure I am not, I concede that there is no provision made in the bill for any increased appropriation to cover any such investigation, and it is purely a matter of speculation whether or not it would involve any increased expenditure. As much may be said with reference to the last Senate amendment, numbered 48, which has been incorporated as section 36 in the amended bill, which provides for the enforcement of our laws against certain vessels leaving certain ports of the United States if they refuse to take cargo tendered by American citizens under certain conditions named in the section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question right there as to whether liabilities in addition to the $50,000,000 can be incurred. Suppose they go on and expend the $50,000,000 and make this investigation, which would cost $50,000. Would a point of order lie against this extra appropriation to pay for this investigation, or is this language that is in this bill sufficient authorization to make this additional expenditure?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The $50,000,000 has nothing to do with any investigation. It is to be expended by the board in the construction or purchase or repair or operation of ships and for the creation of a corporation or corporations, and so forth, as provided by section 11 of the bill. The expenditure of the $50,000,000 is limited to the objects named in sections 5 and 11. I wish to make that clear. I was going to call the Chair's attention to section 35——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman another question right there: If this $50,000,000 appropriation was to be applied to that section before the amendment was put on, then if they made an expenditure under this amendment, would not that be taken by Congress, when the question came up or the point was considered, as a sufficient authorization to make the expenditure or incur a liability beyond the $50,000,000?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the Chair will refer to section 13, page 14, he will find that for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11 no liability shall be incurred exceeding a total of $50,000,000, and neither one of those sections refers to or grants power to make these investigations. Hence if there is no other authority in the bill for an appropriation to pay for these investigations it could not be gotten from sections 5, 11, and 14 of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a moment. I call the attention of the Chair to section 35, which provides—

That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the board, including the payment of salaries herein authorized.

The SPEAKER. Suppose they turn up at some future day with a deficiency bill making an appropriation to recover the expenses incurred in this investigation that is authorized; would a point of order lie against the appropriation, or would this language in this amendment that the gentleman just quoted, No. 48, be taken as a sufficient license or authorization for that kind of an expenditure? What does the gentleman say about that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If they would undertake to incur a liability beyond the amounts appropriated in this bill, I do not know how we would prevent it. We are providing for deficiencies all the time. But the point is that the Senate does not by any amendment increase the appropriations in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is this amendment an authorization for an expenditure, or is it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is if it enlarges the power of this board to make certain investigations over and beyond the power conferred under section 13 of the bill as it passed the House. Whether or not it will involve additional expenditures, as I said, we do not know. In my opinion it will not. But that is a question upon which we may differ, and the Chair is not called on to speculate about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman another question, although it has nothing to do with this, but it may be of interest. Is there not a provision in the statutes that no department or head of a department shall exceed the appropriation made by Congress, and if it does is subject to prosecution? Would that provision apply to these commissioners or not?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a moment. I did not catch the Speaker's tables.

The SPEAKER. There is a provision in the statute that a department or head of a department can not create a liability beyond an appropriation made by Congress, but it was disregarded, and at last Congress hitched on a provision to the statute making it a criminal offense to do that thing. Now, the question that the Chair asks, for his own information—not that it will throw light on this point of order—is this: Would that provision apply to the commissioners if they contracted a debt or liability beyond this authorization of $50,000,000?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It would in my opinion. I do not think they are authorized in any event to incur a liability beyond $50,000,000 in carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11. There can not be anything clearer than that. But these investigations do not come within sections 5 and 11, as the Chair will note. They are embraced in other provisions of the bill and bear no relation whatever to the provisions of sections 5 and 11. But I say it is possible that if they make investigations they may incur additional liability, but this bill, in section 35, expressly provides that their expenditures outside of $50,000,000 shall not exceed $100,000, and I repeat that the board had conferred upon it the power to make the investigations set out in extenso in the Senate amendments under the terms of section 13 of the bill as it passed the House; that no additional power is conferred; hence any possible expenditures that the board incurred in making such investigations was authorized by the House bill.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. In regard to that amendment, No. 28, I think I can make more forcibly clear what has already been stated by the chairman of the committee, that that really adds nothing to the language used in its right interpretation by the House bill. Section 13 of the House bill was prepared by myself and Mr. ROWE, a Member from New York, he being a Republican Member and I a Democratic Member, with the intention of clothing this board with the authority to investigate everything connected with the building and operating of ships here and abroad, so as to give this board authority to examine the whole field and report back to Congress, so as to enable Congress to pass laws necessary to help us in our competition with foreign ships and shipbuilding. I might add that Mr. ROWE himself introduced a bill containing a section having the same purpose, expressed very much in detail. We had a great many of these detailed provisions, that are now incorporated by the Senate amendment, written out in the section as Mr. ROWE and I had prepared it. We made it very elaborate and specific as to powers and duties of the board to make investigation, but when we brought it before the subcommittee, we studied it very carefully, and we came to the conclusion that the best form of legislation was to condense in broad and general terms the authority and duty of investigation with which this board was clothed, and we struck out details and used general terms, saying—

That the board shall investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade, vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry.

And we concluded that under that authority this commission would have the right to make every investigation that would help to explain the differences in the cost of operation or construction of ships abroad and ships here, ships under our flag and registry, and ships under other flags and registry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Can he give any elucidation of how amendment 46 would or would not be construed as necessitating an appropriation?

Mr. HARDY. That is—

The board shall have power, and it shall be its duty whenever complaint shall be made to it to investigate the action of any foreign Government with respect to the privileges afforded and burdens imposed upon vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade whenever it shall appear that the laws, regulations, or practices of any foreign Government operate in such a manner that vessels of the United States are not accorded equal privileges in foreign trade with vessels of such foreign countries or vessels of other foreign countries.

I take it, Mr. Speaker, that every power and duty specifically mentioned in that Senate amendment is clearly included in section 13 of the bill as it passed the House. The board was authorized and required to make that investigation by the bill as it passed the House even without any complaint, and therefore this Senate amendment could not necessitate any appropriation not necessitated by the House bill.

I do not see how section 13 of the original bill, which provides—that the board shall investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry—could be fully carried out unless this board had the authority to investigate all the privileges accorded by foreign Governments to other ships, and all the disadvantages or burdens imposed by foreign Governments on our shipping, since these would be distinctly relative advantages and disadvantages. I know it was our intention in section 13 to clothe this board with the authority to make every investigation of every question touching the operation of the shipping of foreign countries and our country, and the treatment of our shipping by foreign countries, either by their laws or practices.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands the gentleman's argument, he treats amendment 46 as mere surplusage?

Mr. HARDY. It is.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair will ask both the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] one question: Suppose that a separate bill had been introduced by the gentleman from Missouri or the gentleman from Texas embodying amendment 46 and nothing else. To what committee would that bill go and to what calendar would it go?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It might go to the House Calendar, if it contained nothing more.

I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that whether or not this will involve any increased expenditure is a matter of speculation, and does not bring it within the rules of the House to which I have called attention. As a matter of fact, I now have in my possession all the facts that this amendment is aimed at. The amendment was framed and sent to me, and I sent it to the Senate committee. The ascertainment of these facts does not involve any expenditure at all. The facts are known, against which this amendment is framed, and its purpose is to enforce equality of treatment between vessels under the American and foreign flags. But whether it involves expenditure or not, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the limitation of expenditure in the bill in the first instance is $50,000,000 and in the other $100,000, and the Senate has not increased either amount.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman, or anyone else connected with the Government whom he knows of, has all these facts for the ascertainment of which this amendment provides, what was the sense of putting in the amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Because we want this board to have the power to correct certain evils. That is the reason for it. I do not agree that it is mere surplusage, unless the Chair should hold, and, I think, correctly, that it adds nothing to the powers of the board under section 13, as I have pointed out. I think it is intended to correct an existing condition, the result of which is discrimination against our American shipping, and confers on the board, in express terms, the powers conferred in general terms under section 13 of the bill as it passed the House.

The amendment was unnecessary, in my opinion.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, in that connection I desire to call attention to the fact that there is no limitation on the amount of money for the expenses of the board. There is only an appropriation for this year, so that to enlarge the duties of the board, which would necessarily entail additional expenditure, would, of course, make a liability on the Treasury. If this bill had already been a law and section 46 had been introduced as a separate bill, there would not be a particle of question but that it would go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as entailing additional expenditure.

I want to call attention to another fact, and that is that this makes this board an investigating committee. It makes it just the same as the Interstate Commerce Commission is now, a commission to investigate on complaint, so that any American who claims in any way that he has been unjustly treated by a foreign country can make complaint to this board, and they will be compelled to hear and determine it, as the Interstate Commerce Commission hears complaints now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You must not overlook the fact that we are considering amendments to a House bill.

The remedy under that section in part is through the State Department and through the machinery of the Government already organized, and does not involve any increased expenditure. It simply points out how the investigation shall be made. You might as well say that section 36 involves increased expenditure. It provides—

> The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to refuse a clearance to any vessel or other vehicle laden with merchandise destined for a foreign or domestic port whenever he shall have satisfactory reason to believe that the master, owner, or other officer of such vessel or other vehicle refuses or declines to accept or receive freight or cargo in good condition tendered for such port of destination or for some intermediate port of call, together with the proper freight or transportation charges therefor, by any citizen of the United States, unless the same is fully laden and has no space accommodations for the freight or cargo so tendered, due regard being had for the proper loading of such vessel or vehicle, or unless such freight or cargo consists of merchandise for which such vessel or vehicle is not adaptable.

That simply invokes the machinery of the law as it exists. It does not involve any increased expenditure or appropriation out of the Treasury any more than does section 26.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think the only point of order raised that involves the necessity of serious consideration is that raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] with reference to Senate amendment 46, which inserts as section 26 the language that has been several times quoted, and which it is not necessary now to repeat. And, of course, it is true, Mr. Speaker, that under Rule XXIV, section 3, any proposed legislation carrying a charge on the Treasury must be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and under section 20 any Senate amendment which, if it should be offered as an original proposition in the House, would require consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union must itself be considered in that way.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to certain language in this bill on page 4:

> The board shall appoint a secretary at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be appropriated for by the Congress.

Now, under the provisions of that language the terms of amendment 46 will be carried out according as Congress shall hereafter appropriate the money. The language which I have read was in the bill as it passed the House. There is no change in that language. There is no amendment to that section. There is no amendment in any part of the measure which in any way detracts from the authority therein given to future Congresses to appropriate money for the purposes specified in the act.

Section 35, on page 30 of the bill, which has been read, simply provides an appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. That is $100,000. That $100,000 is to cover every activity of the board, including any activities that may be imposed upon it under the provisions of Senate amendment 46. It will lie within the power of the Congress before the expiration of that time, under the language I have read from page 4, to appropriate additional amounts without being subject to a point of order, but the limitation, so far as this bill is concerned, is fixed in section 35 at $100,000. So it does not seem to me that it can be fully construed as carrying any additional charge upon the Treasury by the passage of the Senate amendment 46.

In that connection I beg to call attention of the Chair to a certain paragraph contained in Hinds' Precedents, beginning with paragraph 4810, page 1037, of volume 4. I read:

> A bill that may incidentally involve expense to the Government but does not require it is not subject to the point of order that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole. On July 25, 1876, the House was considering a bill to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining and pending when the morning hour expired on the 19th instant.
> Mr. John A. Kasson, of Iowa, made the point of order that the bill must first receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House in accordance with the requirements of Rule CXII.

That is now section 3 of Rule XXIII.

The Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Milton Sayler, of Ohio, overruled the point of order, holding that the rule under consideration did not make an appropriation of money or property or in any way require an appropriation to be made, and that the fact that the bill may incidentally involve expense does not bring it within the rule cited, it being necessary that the bill should directly require an appropriation to subject it to the provision of the rule in question.

The record of debate gives the words of the Speaker pro tempore, but I hardly think it necessary to read the words. The substance has been stated.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that I conceded that at the commencement of my argument, and I agree entirely that unless this does entail necessarily an additional expenditure that the point is not well taken. But I want to call the gentleman's attention to the language of the amendment. I do not think that gentlemen have apprehended the language. It creates of this board a commission to hear and determine practical complaints. Any person who has a grievance in any way, any shipper, any shipowner, or any person interested in any way in foreign shipping can make a complaint to this board, and it is made the duty of this board to investigate the matter, which, of course, would necessarily imply an investigation beyond the seas; and then they are to report to the President, that the President may take it up in a diplomatic manner in order to have the matter corrected.

It occurs to me that the amendment is not worth anything unless the increase of duties and the entire new state of duties imposed upon the board would necessarily require and incur a larger obligation of the country.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think that under any authority given in Senate amendment 46 it would be possible for the board to exceed the expenditure of $100,000, as provided for in section 35?

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman would not contend that that could not be exceeded, because that is only an expenditure for this year. There is no limitation whatever on the expenditure that may be incurred with regard to the expenses of the board. There is only $100,000 appropriated to pay the expenses for this year. Of course, the gentleman is well aware that unless additional appropriations were made they could not exceed the appropriations made; and my point is it would incur in the performance of these duties additional expenditure. To-morrow a hundred people and perhaps a thousand may make complaints which would require them under this amendment to investigate, and which would under the performance of those duties necessarily make a charge on the Treasury that would have to be paid by additional appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a further inquiry, if the gentleman will permit, and that is, Does not the language used in section 4 on page 4 cure all possible objection, so far as the parliamentary situation is concerned?

Mr. TOWNER. I hardly think so. I do not quite see the force of the gentleman's objection, because, of course, while they have already under the terms of the bill as we formed it, been given the power under this section to employ the necessary help to perform the duties, still, it gives them additional powers, additional duties, which means that they must obtain additional help and incur additional expense. It seems to me that that does not help the position of the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, following briefly the line of argument just made by the gentleman from Iowa, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 4811 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, in which this is said:

To require consideration in Committee of the Whole a bill must show on its face that it involves an expenditure of money, property, etc. On May 17, 1884, the House was considering a bill of the House (H. R. 6074) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to attach a part of the Indian Territory to said districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. John H. Rogers, of Arkansas, made the point of order against the bill that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole. He said that by providing for holding a term of court twice a year at a certain point increased expenditure in the way of rent would be involved. Also there would be expenses for seals, etc., as processes would have to be issued. Then there would be new offices, for marshal, clerk, etc.

The Speaker (Mr. Carlisle) said:

The Chair overrules the point of order. He thinks it goes beyond the limits of propriety on questions of this kind. It would be really difficult to imagine any legislation enacted by Congress that does not involve some expenditure. This may, but the expenditure is so clearly an incident that the Chair does not think it brings the bill within the rule. The point of order is overruled.

Again—

On April 24, 1886, the House was considering a bill of the House to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the eastern and western districts thereof into divisions, establish district and circuit courts of the United States therein, and provide for the times and places for holding such courts and for other purposes.

Mr. Richard P. Bland, of Missouri, made the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. After debate the Speaker overruled the point of order, and his decision is quoted here in full, but I shall not stop to read it now.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman has been reading precedents which apply simply to bills originating in the House and considered in their initiatory condition. The objections here apply to amendments made by the Senate to the bill, and I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this language in construing Rule XX:

A Senate amendment which is a modification merely of a House proposition, like the increase or decrease of an amount of an appropriation, and does not involve a new and distinct expenditure, is not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Is there any amendment here offered which is anything more than an increase or a decrease of the House proposition, and is not the origin of a new proposition one of increase or decrease of the original proposition as it passed the House? And it does not involve a new, substantive proposition. For instance, the first amendment to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] objected merely reduced the number of the commissioners. It neither increased nor decreased the expenditure, because they were Cabinet officials. The same could be said of the next following amendment, which is merely a definition of what is understood to be covered by the original proposition. Here it is only adding to or decreasing the amount which was required in the original bill as it passed the House. Under this proposition in the precedent only an amendment would go back to the House, and it would not be required to go to the Committee of the Whole. I call the gentleman's attention to sections 4797 to 4806 of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, which clearly define the procedure to be followed here in this matter, and under them the proper procedure is in the House and not the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there is just one other case which I shall read, and then I shall conclude. I refer to section 4818 of the same volume, as follows:

Where the expenditure is a mere matter of speculation the rule requiring consideration in the Committee of the Whole does not apply.

On February 27, 1897, Mr. Eugene S. Loud, of California, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, called up the bill to extend the uses of the mail service by admitting to the mails the postal cards and envelopes of the United States Economic Postage Association, under proper guaranties to recompense to the Government for the service.

Mr. Henry H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, having made the point of order that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole after debate, the Speaker overruled it.

On March 1 Mr. Bingham was permitted to renew the point of order and made the point that in consequence of the number of such postal cards and envelopes there would be needed an extraordinary increase in the clerical force of the country.

The Speaker (Mr. Reed) said:

"The Chair does not see anything to change his ruling on the subject. It may be possible that it will increase the expenses, but that is a mere matter of speculation as to whether they will be larger or not; and the Chair overrules the point of order."

It seems to me that those cases are directly in point, Mr. Speaker, and if the Chair will bear with me I will call attention to just one other, on page 1042, paragraph 4821:

On December 14, 1904, during the call of committees for the consideration of business on the House Calendar, the Committee on Mines and Mining proposed for consideration the bill to authorize the exploration and purchase of mines within the boundaries of private land claims.

Mr. Sereno E. Payne, of New York, made the point of order that the bill required consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and therefore was not properly on the House Calendar.

After debate, Mr. Speaker CANNON overruled the point of order, and I shall not take up the time now to read his ruling, but it is in direct line with all of the reasoning which has been given in all of the cases which I have read, and which seem to me directly applicable to the particular case now at issue.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize one point that has been made here that I do not think the gentlemen on the other side have understood. The board having been given power to expend money for clerks, investigation, and experts, a new obligation is put upon them which will of course involve the duties of those experts and those clerks, and which will cause more expense. That is one point, and the Speaker understands that. But there is another point that has been made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] in reference to amendment numbered 30, on page 14. I wish the Speaker would look at it. Amendment numbered 30 strikes out——

The SPEAKER. What page?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Page 14, line 5. It strikes out the words "expenditure shall be made nor," so that it no longer limits expenditure but only liability, and reads now, "no liability shall be incurred exceeding a total of $50,000,000." Now, it is to be remembered, as shown by the whole bill and by lines 21, 22, and 23 of this same page, that the proceeds of United States bonds and the net proceeds of all sales, charters, and leases of vessels and sales of stock made by the board are to be used in the business of this board, which is to buy and sell vessels. Under the original provision of this bill they could not spend more than $50,000,000 in buying and selling vessels. Now, under the changed provisions of this bill they can expend from time to time a thousand million dollars in buying and selling vessels if only they do not run in debt during that time above $50,000,000. The change is vital when the amendment strikes out the limit of expenditure and makes it only a limit of debts.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, there are two appropriations provided in this bill that relate to and cover two entirely distinct subjects. The appropriation of $50,000,000 relates to the subject matter contained in sections 5 and 11. Those sections provide the creation of corporations to purchase and operate merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States. The appropriation of $50,000,000 has nothing to do with the payment of expenses incurred under other sections of the act. If we look to page 30, section 35, we will find another appropriation. This is an appropriation of $100,000 to cover the salaries of the commissioners, pays the ordinary working expenses in the office of the board, and defrays the cost of the investigations which have been the subject of discussion to-day. This fund can not be used for any other purposes than those just mentioned. It is important to keep in mind that these funds are distinct and that they respectively impose limits of expenditure upon the board created by this act. The Speaker is asked to have these fundamental facts in mind in passing on the points of order that have been raised. I recall that the Speaker asked my colleague who preceded me upon what calendar a certain Senate amendment would be placed, in the event that it had been offered as an original bill in the House. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the test that should be applied. These amendments should be considered in their relation to and their effect upon the bill to which they have been offered, and I submit that there is not one of these Senate amendments that proposes an expenditure that is not contemplated by this bill, or directs any action that is not clearly within the powers given to the board by the original bill. If I am not mistaken in this statement, and I expect to show by reference to the contents of various sections of the bill that this statement is absolutely correct, then the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa, according to his own admission, is not well taken.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I am a little in doubt about what amendment 46 means, and I would like to have the gentleman's explanation if he can give it. Does the gentleman contend that amendment 46 does not establish what might be properly termed a court of inquiry independent of the board which is authorized to operate the ships, and would this board or court be authorized under the amendment to sit and hear complaints of shippers, people owning private ships who might think they had been injured in any way, or hear complaints against foreign Governments, or against anybody; and if they are so authorized, would not that be a function entirely outside the function of the board authorized for the purchase and operation of ships? I would like to hear the gentleman in reference to that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will be very glad to undertake to answer the gentleman. In my judgment the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, that the language of the amendment creates a formal court, can not be maintained. If the gentleman will look to the language of the amendment he will find that the board is given power upon complaint "to investigate the action of any foreign Government with respect to privileges afforded and burdens imposed upon vessels of the United States." In other words the board is authorized to conduct an inquiry on a large scale with reference to ascertaining whether the ships of the United States are subjected to any burdens, or any impositions by foreign Governments which will put them at a disadvantage when seeking the trade of other nations. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention——

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow to ask him one more question there, Does the gentleman contend that authority granted to investigate simply applies to vessels owned by the Government of the United States against which discriminations may be practiced?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, I have not discussed that question. It was not raised by the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought it was.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I referred to the subject matter which could be investigated by this board, if complaints were made, and particularly to the scope of the investigation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to assert with all the emphasis in my power that no additional authority is lodged in the board by the Senate amendments. The amendments do not enlarge by one jot, or one tittle, the power of the commission to make the investigations referred to in these amendments. In order to make this clear I will read the language of the House bill:

SEC. 12. That the board shall investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States, and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry.

If it is possible to devise a more sweeping grant of power to investigate than is afforded by this language I can only say that if the committee which formulated the House bill could have been advised to that effect, it would have adopted the new phrasing in lieu of the language that is found in the bill. What is it that concerns and relates to vessels operating under United States registry, that can not be investigated under this section, to the end that all discriminations and impositions anywhere existing may be ascertained and removed? If it should turn out that foreign countries by virtue of their domestic laws have put burdens upon our ships, or afforded advantages to their own ships, is not that a disadvantage in respect to the world trade under which ships flying the American flag would operate, in seeking international trade, as compared with ships flying the flag of the country affording these advantages, or imposing these burdens? Is there any question, therefore, that whenever it is suggested that anywhere in the world our ships are at any disadvantage by reason of the laws, or the practices of foreign countries, that these laws and these practices, so far as ships flying our flag are concerned, may be inquired into under the language of the original bill, without regard to the Senate amendment?

Permit me to call the attention of the Speaker in this connection to the action of the House committee in framing this section. When we first drafted that section we descended into many details of matters and things to be investigated. Indeed it embraced in terms many of the provisions contained in the Senate amendment. It went into details at considerable length. But after going over the language in conference we concluded that we were merely multiplying words, without enlarging the powers of the board. Hence we decided to give the board the largest possible grant of power, by the use of the most general and comprehensive terms that we could employ. For this reason we reduced the length of section 12, and expressed the power intended to be conveyed in terms of the most general import.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a further question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that the language of the bill printed on page 12, line 23, and over on page 13, line 3, including the word "registry," which is as follows:

That the board shall investigate the relative cost of building merchant ships in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry—

Would grant the authority to the board to sit as a court and investigate complaints of shippers?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not think so. The language used merely says that the board, on complaint shall have authority to investigate certain actions of foreign Governments. This power it already possessed under section 12.

Any burden whatever, any inequality, that is imposed by any foreign country, however it may be created, however it may be devised, upon a ship flying the American flag, engaged in the world's commerce, is a disadvantage to the American shipowner, and if it is a disadvantage to the American shipowner, it is perfectly clear that under section 12, it can be investigated, inquired into, and a report made. That is the very reason that in drawing this act, we used the word "disadvantage."

Again, permit me to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that if he will read clear through the amendment on the part of the Senate to section 26, he will not find, as I said before, and I repeat it, anything in the amendment which enlarges the powers, or increases the duties of the board. The only new matter in the section is that requiring the board to make a report to the President, and the President to take up the substance of the report with the foreign countries affected, by the way of diplomatic action. The making of the report to the President, may involve some cost not contemplated by the bill, but it is de minimis, and I do not think that the gentlemen who have made this point of order would seriously contend that this item of cost would make this amendment out of order.

So far as the direction to the President to take diplomatic action is concerned, it may be said that this direction does not confer any new authority upon the President. He already enjoys that authority as a constitutional prerogative. So that the only difference between this amendment and section 12, to which I have adverted, is that the inquiries which the board is authorized to make under section 12 shall, in addition to being reported to the House of Representatives, be reported to the President.

Another matter, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the use of the words "expenditure" and "liability."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not argue that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was merely going to say that expenditure is confined to a fund to one's credit. If you exceed that fund, you incur a liability. The bill gives the board $50,000,000 to expend, and provides that they shall not incur any liability beyond that sum. Hence it would be a violation of law for the board to expend a greater sum than $50,000,000, or incur any liability. These then are the two limits imposed, first $50,000,000 with reference to two designated sections, and $100,000 as to expenses incurred under other sections. The Senate amendments merely go into details with respect to the duties to be discharged by the board. They do not add to its duties, nor increase its powers. Hence it is perfectly clear that these amendments should not be considered in the Committee of the Whole. This case is covered by the precedents which have been stated, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that for the reasons given, and the precedents cited the point of order should be overruled.

The SPEAKER. As an original proposition, and if there had not been numerous precedents on this subject, the Chair would rule that this bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Since what occurred the other morning, the Chair has made a pretty thorough investigation of this matter and finds this set of circumstances: Away back in the early days it seems to have been an open question. Mr. Speaker Winthrop held that unless it was clear that an appropriation was involved, it did not go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Mr. Speaker Stevenson, in the days of Gen. Jackson, rendered rather an elaborate opinion, in which he said if it was possible that there would be an appropriation under it, it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

I find this also to be the case: Speaker Keifer, Speaker Carlisle, Speaker Crisp, Speaker Reed, Speaker Henderson, and Speaker CANNON have all sustained the view taken by these gentlemen from Virginia, Missouri, and Tennessee that this bill, with Senate amendments should not go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There is a long string of these decisions. There must be 10 or 15 of them. There is no use to read but two or three of them. As a matter of fact, the present occupant of the Chair ruled once himself on a similar question in harmony with Speakers Keifer, Carlisle, Reed, Crisp, Henderson, and CANNON. I first quote section 4809 of Hinds' Precedents:

A bill which might involve a charge upon the Government but does not necessarily do so need not go to the calendar of a Committee of the Whole. On February 8, 1900, Mr. GEORGE E. FOSS, of Illinois, during the call of committees in the morning hour, called up the bill (H. R. 969) relating to the relief of certain men of the Navy from the charge of desertion. The effect of the bill was to remove the limitation of time which applications for relief might be received and acted on.

Mr. Sereno E. Payne, of New York, made the point of order that the bill did not properly belong to the House Calendar, since it might involve a charge upon the Treasury in the shape of pensions or bounties.

After debate, Mr. Speaker Henderson held:

The Chair overrules the point of order, believing this does not impose any burden on the Government; it is simply extending the time within which application may be made for the removal of the charge of desertion. Effacing the record of desertion is the thing aimed at by this bill. Non constat that a dollar is due to anyone. The assumption is entirely too remote, and it seems to the Chair clear that if any bill can properly be on the House Calendar this can be.

It turned out that Mr. Milton Sayler, of Ohio, was temporarily in the Chair once, and he rendered a decision. Mr. Sayler was a very able Member of this House. I read section 4810 of Hinds' Precedents:

A bill that may incidentally involve expense to the Government, but does not require it, is not subject to the point of order that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole. On July 25, 1876, the House was considering a bill to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, and pending when the morning hour expired on the 19th instant.

Mr. John A. Kasson, of Iowa, made the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the requirements of Rule CXII.

That is now section 3 of Rule XXIII. Mr. Kasson quoted this language of the bill:

That coin notes of the denomination of $50 and multiples thereof up to $10,000 may, in the mode hereinafter provided, be paid by the several mints and assay offices at San Francisco, Carson City, Philadelphia, and New York for the net value of gold and silver bullion deposited thereat.

And said:

Now, if this bullion is purchased by authority of law, it can not be paid without money, and no money can be taken, or property of any kind, without authority of law; so that in the very first few lines of the bill you find that there is an express appropriation either of money or property.

Mr. Sayler overruled the point of order.

Here is one of Mr. Speaker Carlisle's decisions. I read section 4811 of Hinds' Precedents:

SEC. 4811. To require consideration in Committee of the Whole a bill must show on its face that it involves an expenditure of money, property, etc. On May 17, 1884, the House was considering a bill of the House (H. R. 6074) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to attach a part of the Indian Territory to said districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. John H. Rogers, of Arkansas, made the point of order against the bill that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole. He said that by providing for holding a term of court twice a year at a certain point, increased expenditure in the way of rent would be involved. Also, there would be expenses for seals, etc., as processes would have to be issued. Then, there would be new offices for marshal, clerk, etc.

Mr. Speaker Carlisle said:

The Chair overrules the point of order. He thinks it goes beyond the limits of propriety on questions of this kind. It would be really difficult to imagine any legislation enacted by Congress that does not involve some expenditure. This may, but the expenditure is so clearly an incident that the Chair does not think it brings the bill within the rule. The point of order is overruled.

I read also section 4812:

On April 24, 1886, the House was considering bill of the House (H. R. 2929) to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the eastern and western districts thereof into divisions, establish district and circuit courts of the United States therein, and provide for the times and places for holding such courts, and for other purposes.

Mr. Richard P. Bland, of Missouri, made the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

After debate, the Speaker—Mr. Speaker Reed—held:

The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] to the rule which has heretofore been adhered to in the decision of questions of this kind. It has been uniformly held that before a point of order of this character can be sustained it must appear with certainty that an additional appropriation will be required to execute the law if the bill should be passed. Now, it is true that this bill provides for summoning jurors and for holding courts at these additional places in certain contingencies; that is, in case the county authorities provide the necessary rooms, offices, etc. But all these courts are to be held merely for the purpose of transacting the judicial business in what now constitutes one district. Civil and criminal proceedings are to be commenced in these courts; but the Chair has no means of determining that the creation of these costs will not in fact diminish the cost of litigation instead of increasing it.

So he overruled the point of order.

Hinds' Precedents, section 4821: On December 14, 1904, during the call of committees for the consideration of business on the House Calendar, the Committee on Mines and Mining proposed to consider the bill (H. R. 1954) to authorize the exploration and purchase of mines within the boundaries of private land claims. Mr. Sereno E. Payne, of New York, made the point of order that the bill required consideration in Committee of the Whole, and therefore was not properly on the House Calendar. After debate, Speaker CANNON ruled:

The point of order is made to the legislation here in the bill under Rule XXIII, which is as follows—

Then he quotes the rule:

The Chair has read hurriedly this bill, and takes the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, which conforms to the general recollection of the Chair, that the grant made by the Spanish or Mexican Government prior to the treaty of peace with Mexico reserved minerals.

Mr. Speaker CANNON concluded:

Upon the face of this bill there does not seem to be any charge upon the Treasury in the language of the rule "involving a tax or charge upon the people." In other words, it takes a roundabout argument to show that the Government is to be charged, or that the people are to be charged, by virtue of this legislation. And after the argument is made, the Chair apprehends that it would still be in the air as to whether a charge is made against the people by the proposed legislation. So that under prior decisions that the Chair will not now take time to read, made by Mr. Speaker Carlisle and by Mr. Speaker Reed, it seems to the Chair that the point or order is not well taken.

There are 10 or 12 other decisions along the same line.

The point of order is overruled.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the naval appropriation bill and naval legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the naval appropriation bill and naval legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Army appropriation bill, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 17498) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate amendment.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me the least we can do is to read the amendment. Here is a long amendment that has never been considered in the House, never been considered in the Senate, never been considered by a committee of the House, never been considered by a committee of the Senate. I think at least we ought to read it.

Mr. HAY. It was considered——

Mr. MANN. It was considered by the gentleman from Virginia and the conferees.

Mr. HAY. Considered by the Senate committee.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it never was considered by the Senate committee. It ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have promised to yield some time to the gentleman from Illinois if he desires it. I also promised to yield to two gentlemen from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON and Mr. MILLER.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Wyoming want?

Mr. MONDELL. About 10 minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the acceptance of the Senate amendments to the Army bill illustrate very interestingly a number of things, among others the subserviency of the Congress to the Executive. We are not in war.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this the weak and vacillating Executive that has been talked about?

Mr. MONDELL. Sometimes weak, sometimes vacillating.

Mr. BORLAND. It is the same Executive criticized by Candidate Hughes, is it not?

Mr. MONDELL. And sometimes exceedingly stiff necked. Weak and vacillating when strength and continuity of purpose would be wise and well, and stiff necked and persistent when that attitude is harmful and injurious to the interests of the country.

We are not at war, but, as the President says, we are seeing sparks all around, and we have all of our forces on the Mexican border, including 125,000 of the militia. We are well into the fiscal year, and yet no provision has been made for our Military Establishment except the provision extending the appropriations of last year.

In this condition of affairs when the President is insisting that everybody everywhere shall give way in their views and opinions in order to aid preparedness the President has the military bill brought to him. There is no claim that it does not provide adequately for the Military Establishment. There is no doubt about the importance of having these moneys available. But the President had insisted that Congress, contrary to the rules of both bodies, should place on this military appropriation bill legislation providing for the entire revision of the Articles of War, and because that revision of the Articles of War in one rather unimportant particular did not square with the President's view or that of the War Department, did not exactly follow the draft of the bill that the War Department sent to Congress, because of that situation the military bill with the fiscal year well begun and no provision for the care of the troops except a resolution continuing old appropriations, the President vetoes the Army bill and takes the chances of a controversy or disagreement with Congress on a difference of opinion as to one relatively unimportant matter, holding up appropriations for the Army indefinitely.

What Congress should have done was to have passed the bill over the President's veto and then proceeded properly and decently and in order to consider the question involved between the Executive view and the House view in this matter of legislation.

That is one of the important things that this situation illustrates.

It illustrates furthermore how little the executive departments understand just what it is they desire in legislation, how little they understand the effect of the legislation that they call on Congress to enact, and on behalf of which bills are vetoed if Congress does not follow the Executive dictation. It is certainly not over three weeks, possibly less time than that, that this legislation was sent to the Senate from the War Department with the expectation that it be enacted in just the form in which it was presented. The Senate did its part. Some gentlemen in the House objected to certain provisions, and they were taken from the bill. The bill was vetoed, reintroduced without the Articles of War, passed the House, and the Articles of War restored in the Senate, and comes back to the House. Does it come back in the form that the Executive wanted it a short time ago? No. It is true that in substance the Congress has now placed in the bill the provision demanded by the President; but as a matter of fact the language differs considerably from the language originally insisted upon by the executive department, and except for the fact that the gentleman from Virginia knew more about these things than the executive department knew we would have written into law at the behest of the executive department a provision that nobody would have approved and that nobody wanted.

The controversy all arose over the question of whether or not men on the retired list should be under military control. As the language stated it, as originally presented to the Congress by the War Department, it was:

all officers and soldiers belonging to the armies of the United States.

So, had we accepted the language of the Executive we would have placed, as I understand it, under military control all of the civilian reserves of the country—Officers' Reserve Corps and Enlisted Reserve Corps.

What I am curious about is this: Had we accepted the provisions just as they were handed to us from the executive department, would the bill have been vetoed because not satisfactory, or is the department still willing to accept its own language when enacted by Congress, although it accomplishes much more than they set out to accomplish? I am not altogether certain that there is not something in the contention of the Executive, I am not altogether certain that the bill as we passed it in the first instance was not somewhat objectionable along the lines suggested by the President; but the way to remedy that defect, if defect it was, was by calling the attention of Congress to it when the bill was signed and urging legislation to cure the situation thus created if in the opinion of Congress it was a situation which ought to be cured. It seems to me it is about time that the Congress asserted its independence occasionally in matters of this sort. When we have taken care of the departments of the Government, provided for the needs of the Army at a time when the troops in the field need these appropriations, no Executive, in my opinion, is justified in vetoing a bill because of some minor matter in disagreement between the Executive and the Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the real issues and the Democratic hurdy-gurdy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the general conditions of business in the country and also upon the Democratic revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC].

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reply to certain charges that are being circulated in my district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in reply to certain charges circulated in his district. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, we have recently heard in this House groanings and lamentations because the Republican Party has as its nominee one who had been a Justice of our Supreme Court. Something of those same bewailings has been noted also in a few papers of the country. It is significant that in every instance they come from Democratic Party workers, never from the American people; from the blindly partisan Democratic press, never from those publications that reflect public sentiment.

It is a desperate effort on the part of those whose place of power depends upon Democratic victory to find something they can criticize in the opposing candidate. Their extremity reveals the strength and greatness of the Republican nominee. [Applause on the Republican side.] Naturally they are troubled, and deeply so.

These idle and petty whines demonstrate that Democracy has searched the character and public life of the Republican candidate in vain to find a single trait, a single act, they dare to attack. Charles E. Hughes stands a mountain of true worth. In that majestic presence Democracy does well to whine. They are sore troubled. They are deeply worried. They are grasping at straws. So they complain that we reached into too high a place to secure the next President. They forget that no character is too high, no position too exalted, to yield when our country calls. No citizen of this land, no matter what his place or position, should ever be beyond the call of his country in the hour of his country's need. [Applause on the Republican side.] And what a need is that of our country to-day! A country whose national honor is all but lost, whose finances are in ruins, whose millions are crying out for help, needs the highest, the strongest, the best in all the land. So our country asks for Hughes. He is a candidate only because the Nation so wills. He sought no added glory, no honor for himself. He was never a seeker for the nomination. He refused to ask for it or consent that he be considered a candidate for it. Yet the Nation knew it wanted Hughes, and the Nation would not be denied. Our country in distress drafted him to redeem our national honor and secure future prosperity for our land. He is to be the next President, because the people of our country demand him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And so Democracy is sad. Very sad when they reflect how their candidate thrust himself upon them. He was elected on a platform that pledged him to but one term. Most of the Democrats hereabout desired him to have one term, just one term. [Laughter on the Republican side.] That desire has been growing as the recent months, with all their miserable mistakes, have rolled by. But he willed otherwise. Whether Democrats want him or not, whether Democrats believe in him or not, whether Democrats think he can win or not, they have no choice; him they must have. No Democrat in Washington is allowed to breathe unless he shouts for Wilson. Wilson wills to be the Democratic nominee, and Wilson is the Democratic Party. So Democracy eats the platform of 1912, and conscious of its own burden whines because the Republicans have named such a splendid man.

But in this they use poor judgment. One would think from some of these remarks that no court judge was ever a candidate for a political office before. They should enlarge their knowledge of history and that of their party.

In practically every presidential election from the days of Washington till now Supreme Court Justices have been either prominently mentioned or actual candidates for party nomination.

Indeed, our first Chief Justice, John Jay, of New York, a most distinguished jurist, was twice a candidate for the office of governor of the State of New York while he was a member of our Supreme Court. The first time, in 1792, he did not resign and was defeated. The second time he resigned as Chief Justice and was elected.

In the election of 1796 we find James Iredell, of North Carolina, a Justice of our Supreme Court, a candidate for the Presidency, and he received three electoral votes.

A few years later, in 1816, we find that the great John Marshall, of Virginia, probably the most influential jurist that ever sat on any court, while serving as Chief Justice of our Supreme Court, was a receptive candidate for the Vice Presidency, receiving four electoral votes. Thus we see at the very outset of our history, in the very beginning of our Government, during the lifetime of those giant men who formed the structure of our Government and infused the spirit into our institutions, it was considered meet and proper in the highest sense, and, in fact, conducive to the best interests of our Nation that Justices of our Supreme Court should be available material for the high office of President.

John McLean, of Ohio, was a Supreme Court Justice for a third of a century, and we find that during a period of almost 30 years he was at every presidential election a candidate for the Presidency. In 1832 he was Ohio's candidate. In 1848 he came before the Buffalo convention of the Free Soil Party a candidate for the Presidency. Again, in 1856, when the Republican Party held its first national convention at Philadelphia, he was a candidate for the nomination and received 196 votes against John C. Fremont. Again, in 1860, he was a candidate for the Republican nomination in the Chicago convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln.

Then in 1868 we find another distinguished Democrat, no less a personage than Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, a candidate for the Democratic nomination to the office of President of the United States. But he was defeated by Horatio Seymour. Perhaps some of my Democratic friends will object to this designation of Salmon P. Chase as a Democrat, inasmuch as he was a member of Lincoln's Cabinet. Mr. Chase was selected by President Lincoln solely on account of his ability and his well-known and vigorous views on the slavery question. Mr. Chase was a Democrat. In his letter to the Democratic national committee, written just before the Democratic convention, Mr. Chase wrote:

> For more than a quarter of a century I have been in my political views and sentiments a Democrat.

In 1872 we find David Davis, a member of our Supreme Court, nominated by the Labor Reform Party for the office of President of the United States. A little later on, but the same year, we find him a candidate for the nomination before the Liberal Republican convention at Cincinnati, that finally nominated Horace Greeley. Five years later, in 1877, this same Supreme Court Justice, while still a member of the court, was elected by the Democrats of Illinois to the office of United States Senator to succeed John A. Logan. In accepting the nomination of the Labor Reform Party, Justice Davis correctly expressed that attitude which should be assumed and maintained by the justices of our court. He said:

> The Chief Magistracy of the Republic should neither be sought nor denied by any American.

Again in 1880 we find another prominent Democrat, a member of our Supreme Court, a candidate for the Presidency. I refer to Justice Stephen J. Field, of California, who was an active candidate for the Democratic nomination at the Cincinnati convention. His nomination was only prevented by the sudden rising of a strong sentiment against him on account of a decision rendered, which marked him, as the people thought, as one who held pro-Chinese opinions. Again in 1884 Justice Field was before the country a candidate for the Democratic nomination. However, the Democratic State convention of California passed a resolution opposing his candidacy, apparently on the same old grounds, and Mr. Field was defeated.

But let us come down near the present hour. Can it be possible that Democracy can not remember back a dozen years? Can it be they have forgotten that their convention at St. Louis, refusing to accept Bryan—the only time they did refuse him—reached over into the highest court of the State of New York, took Judge Alton B. Parker therefrom, and made him their presidential nominee?

In that same year the State Democratic convention of New York nominated Justice Herrick of their supreme court for governor.

Even now, in the campaign at hand, Democracy in the State of New York is about to nominate as its candidate for governor Justice Seabury of their supreme court. Some Democrat may arise to remark that there is a difference between selecting a State judge and a United States judge for a political office. No sophistry in the world, no political bias can possibly spell any difference between the two. The principle is identically, exactly the same. Any difference that can be shown is less than the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Any attempt to show a difference is but puerile effort, making them ridiculous as they vainly endeavor to justify their own nomination of Parker, and at the same time attack the nomination of Hughes.

Away with this chicanery, quibbling, and whining. Democratic justices of the Supreme Court from the beginning of our Government have aspired to the office of President of the United States. Democracy throughout the land has at frequent intervals, and quite consistently, engaged itself in an effort to have a Supreme Court judge nominated and elected President. It now does not lie in their mouth to criticize, if criticism were well founded. But it is not well founded. It has no foundation at all. The people of our country rule the land. They made their own governmental institutions; they elect and place in power men to discharge the functions of government. It is in their power and it should be within their power at any time to call upon any citizen for any important work. In this hour the people of our land have emphatically called Mr. Hughes from the work of a judge to the work of the Chief Executive of this land. The call is clear and emphatic; it is his duty to obey. In so doing he responds to the call of patriotism and is in accord with the spirit of our institutions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, some time ago, in response to inquiries of the War Department, the Secretary announced that after September 1 members of the National Guard mustered into the service of the United States who could show bona fide intention of entering or returning to colleges or schools at the beginning of the fall term would be sent home. This was in response to a considerable clamor on the part of parents throughout the country, who desired that their boys should not lose the advantages of education. This demand has been extended to others. I received a letter to-day from a prominent man in my district in which he explains that his son is also a member of the National Guard in the service of the country on the border, that he has been a newspaper reporter, that he has been intending to get an education as soon as he could earn money enough by his own efforts to pay for it, but that he would have to earn some more money than he has now, and that he is not getting any more than he spends while serving the country, and, therefore, this gentleman desires his son should be released because he wants him to have a chance to get an education in that way, by first earning the money and going to school and taking a course in journalism. He says that it is all right to provide that boys whose parents are rich enough to send them to school should be released, but that it is a discrimination in favor of the rich and against the poor man. If you allow a wealthy man's boy to be released, but keep the poor man's boy there, it is an unjust discrimination. Speaking of his own son, he says that he is not figuring on going to school this coming year for the reason that he is not financially situated so that he can afford to send him. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fairness I believe that young men of poor parents should be treated as favorably by the Government as young men whose parents are more capable of equipping their sons with a suitable education. This gentleman continues:

If boys are allowed to go from the front back to school, then my son ought to be allowed to go back to his work and in that way secure funds to pay the expenses of an education. If he is kept at the front and the schoolboy is let go, then who can say that the Government is not in favor of the classes, who can say that the boy of poor parents is given the same chance as the boy of rich parents?

Mr. Speaker, I believe such letters would not be written if we were facing a great emergency or a great national crisis, but the fact is that it is dawning upon the people of the United States that there is no sufficient reason for the taking of these 120,000 boys of the National Guard and keeping them on the border.

The exigency is not apparent to them. Many of them seem to think that it looks as if it were more of a political campaign than anything else. Now, I noticed in the morning paper that the great Secretary of War, who no doubt has earned his military laurels on many a hard-fought battlefield, is also at the front, imitating, I suppose, the emperors and kings of Europe, who before, or rather behind, the battle front are encouraging their soldiers to the last measure of sacrifice—although there is a slight difference between that example and the example of the Secretary of War of the United States——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. I yield the gentleman from Minnesota three minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of War has gone to the front, not to the front of Mexico but to the battle front of Maine, where he tells these anxious parents in Minnesota and the other States that their boys are at the front; that their boys are winning bloodless victories on the border. Here is a Cabinet officer, drawing $12,000 or $12,500 a year, taking a week's time at a cost of three or four hundred dollars to the Government, neglecting very important duties at Washington and going off on an electioneering tour [laughter on the Republican side] at public expense! In view of these performances can we blame the American people for suspecting that possibly the whole military movement may have something to do with politics. I am not making any charge, but I say these letters we are receiving show that the people of the United States are beginning to be more and more suspicious that this mobilization is one dictated more by political than military reasons, and to suspect that there is no hope of getting the boys back until after election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

While the Secretary of War is on the stump, let us hope he will tell the people something about this subject. It requires explanation and the people look to him to give it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the matter now before us illustrates what terrible doses the American people are being compelled to take as the result of the agitation for preparedness. Measures which would not have been considered for a moment under ordinary circumstances are now being put through Congress without a moment's consideration. We have before us the Army appropriation bill with a Senate amendment, which means the adoption of new articles of war. We are expected to accept without reading and without the pretense of consideration, so far as the details are concerned, a complete code of laws for the government of our Army. These laws not merely define all military offenses, but also constitute a complete code of procedure and govern to the remotest detail the soldier's life. They are comprised in many articles. They contain many serious and important provisions. We are laying down rules and establishing regulations for the control of men and for the deprivation of their liberty, and even of their lives. One of these articles of war provides that if an enlisted man shall make any show of violence whatever against a superior officer he shall suffer death no matter what his provocation may have been. That penalty, that extremely severe article, this Congress, the representatives of the great American people, are adopting without debate, without consideration, and I dare say, Mr. Speaker, absolutely without knowledge of what we are doing. [Applause.]

We are doing this because the Senate—I will not say Senate, because the Senate is the mere puppet of the situation, just as the House is—but because the militaristic influences that have clutched this country by the throat, have seized this occasion as an opportunity to take advantage of the terror which they have deliberately inspired in the breasts of the people. The militarists are taking advantage of the opportunity to force down the throats of the people measures which otherwise Congress would not for a moment seriously consider.

But this is a small part of what we are having to bear. We ought not to gag at this kind of thing because we are standing for a great many worse things. I stand on the floor and protest against the enormous waste of money, against the hundreds of millions being cast to the winds. However, my attitude is that I would much rather take this money and dump it in the middle of the ocean than to spend it in the way it is being spent by Congress. I would rather see this money lost entirely. I would rather see the amount of labor and property that it represents completely destroyed by some great catastrophe than to see the creation of un-American militaristic organizations such as are provided for in these so-called preparedness measures.

I got upon my feet, Mr. Speaker, chiefly, however, to call attention to a provision in the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916. I think the attention of the American people ought to be called to the fact that we have had conscription incorporated into our laws. It is now possible, as a general provision of law and as a permanent part of our law, to take peaceable citizens out of their homes, who have never belonged to the militia, and put them into the ranks and send them to the front to fight. This power of conscription is not retained by Congress, as it ought to be, but is given to the Executive, and may be exerted by him without consulting Congress. Did you know that, gentlemen of the Congress? Do the American people realize that? No. I will guarantee there are not a dozen Members who realize that the condition to which I refer has arisen. The purpose of my rising is to call attention to it. I think Congress ought to know, and I think the people we speak for ought to know.

I refer to section 79 of the national-defense act, the section which provides for militia reserves, and particularly to a clause of that section, as follows:

If for any reason there shall not be enough voluntary enlistments to keep the reserve battalions at the prescribed strength, a sufficient number of the unorganized militia shall be drafted into the service of the United States to maintain each of such battalions at the proper strength.

By the phrase "unorganized militia" all men between 18 and 45 years of age who do not belong to the National Guard are included.

Section 79 provides that when militia regiments have been called into the Federal service, as provided by other sections of the act, reserve battalions shall be created at home to supply any losses the militia may suffer while in service. The entire section 79 is as follows:

SEC. 79. Reserve battalions for recruit training: When members of the National Guard and the enlisted reserve thereof of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall have been brought into the service of the United States in time of war, there shall be immediately organized, either from such enlisted reserve or from the unorganized militia, in such State, Territory, or District, one reserve battalion for each regiment of Infantry or Cavalry, or each 9 batteries of Field Artillery, or each 12 companies of Coast Artillery, brought into the service of the United States, and such reserve battalion shall constitute the fourth battalion of any such regiment or 12 companies of Coast Artillery. Reserve battalions shall consist of 4 companies of such strength as may be prescribed by the President of the United States. When the members of three or more regiments of the National Guard of any State, Territory, or District shall have been brought into the service of the United States, the reserve battalions of such regiments may be organized into provisional regiments and higher units. If for any reason there shall not be enough voluntary enlistments to keep the reserve battalions at the prescribed strength, a sufficient number of the unorganized militia shall be drafted into the service of the United States to maintain each of such battalions at the proper strength. As vacancies occur from death or other causes in any organization in the service of the United States and composed of men taken from the National Guard, men shall be transferred from the reserve battalions to the organizations in the field so that such organizations may be maintained at war strength. Officers for the reserve battalions provided for herein shall be drafted from the National Guard Reserve or Coast Artillery companies of the National Guard or the Officers' Reserve Corps, such officers to be taken, if practicable, from the States, respectively, in which the battalions shall be organized. Officers and noncommissioned officers returned to their home stations because of their inability to perform active field service may be assigned to reserve battalions for duty, and all soldiers invalided home shall be assigned to and carried on the rolls of reserve battalions until returned to duty or until discharged. [Italics not in original.]

Mr. HAY. That section only applies in time of war?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman says when they are called into the service. It is only in time of war.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly. That is the time they can be called into service.

Mr. HAY. They can be called like they are now.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I trust the gentleman will not lead me away on that, unless he will give me more time.

Mr. HAY. I wanted to call attention to the fact.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let us not get away from the point, gentlemen, and that is this: That section 79 of the national defense act provides for the creation of reserve battalions for the militia when in time of war the militia is called into service. Are those reserve battalions going to be created by voluntary enlistments? Are men to be given the option of saying that they shall be enlisted in these reserve battalions? Not at all. They are to be conscripted. That is the thing I protest against. If there is anything hateful to me it is the conscription of American citizens for compulsory military service. It is slavery to militarism wholly at war with American ideals.

Now, then, how did section 79 get into the bill? It was not in the national-defense act when it was introduced. When the committee reported it and laid the act before the House it was not there. During the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs presented what he called "a committee amendment." The discussion occurred on March 22, 1916, and may be found on page 4648 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] at that time said that it was a committee amendment. The gentleman said:

> This proposition was prepared by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and was presented to the committee after we had perfected the bill. The committee thought it was a very excellent provision, to provide the recruiting of these regiments in time of war when the regiments were in the field. During the Civil War there was a great deal of trouble about that, and if this is done the trouble which then occurred will be obviated.

Some further discussion on the subject ensued. The gentleman from Arizona discussed it, and other remarks were made on it, but never once was the attention of Congress called to the fact that it was proposed by that amendment to place in the power of the Executive the right to conscript men that had never belonged to the militia. It was contemplated, so far as the discussion indicates, that they would be enlisted, and, mark you, gentlemen, the word "drafted" did not appear in the amendment. The word "called" was used, which was wholly consistent with the voluntary enlistment.

The amendment offered was long and prolix. It was impossible for a Member sitting here and hearing it read and not having his attention particularly directed to it to understand that under that amendment men might be conscripted into service. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said:

> Mr. Chairman, this seems to be rather an important provision and we can not tell from hearing it read just what it does.

When the explanation as to what it meant was made, was there anything said about conscription? Not a word.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like some more time.

Mr. HAY. How much more time?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Five minutes.

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more. This is a treat to me. I did not hear the truth about these things at all.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I control the time, and I have given the gentleman the time he asked for, namely, five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hope to finish in that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In that form, using the word "called," the bill was passed by the House. It went into the Senate and was reported with the word "called" in there, and the Senate passed it in that form. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will note what I am saying, because I do not want to misrepresent this thing, and I want him to call my attention to it if I am in error. The Senate passed the bill with many amendments, but not changing section 79, leaving the word "called" in it, and it came back here to the House. The House dissented from the Senate amendments and appointed conferees. The conferees consulted and came back and reported. The conferees' report was quite voluminous. It consisted of the act in the form in which it was subsequently signed by the President. But the conferees had changed the word "called" to "drafted."

Nothing was said by the conferees in their report about this word having been changed. Nobody called attention to it. I ask you gentlemen who feel some curiosity about this matter to look into the RECORD and see the report of the committee of conference and see if you can find a syllable there that would call your attention to the fact that an important change had been made in the language of section 79.

But what do we find in the conference committee's report that was adopted by the House? We find that the word "drafted" has been substituted for "called." Now what have we got? If we have war declared against some little country to-morrow, these militia regiments that have been sent to the border would have their reserve battalions created if the law is carried out. In recruiting them will the President say, "Let all good, patriotic men come forward and enlist"? No. He need not say that if he does not think well of it. He can go to your home and can take your boy against his will, who never belonged to the militia, who knows nothing about it. He can go into your home, into the home of your neighbor, into the home of the good Quaker, whose soul rebels against war and the thought of war. As soon as there is sickness or any other loss in the ranks, these young men can be conscripted and put into the ranks and obliged to do duty as soldiers.

Never before in American history has such a thing been done. Congress has passed conscription measures—one or two feeble attempts at coercion into the military service—but never before has the American Congress authorized the President in time of war or at any other time at his discretion to conscript citizens for service in the Army.

I protest against conscription. I protest against it as un-American. I protest against the way by which this measure was passed. I protest against such a thing being done without the people of this country being consulted. We have departed from our ideals. We have departed from the things that are consistent with American institutions, and we have done it ignorantly and blindly. We have not been fully advised of what we were doing. As one who has only recently entered the House I protest against such methods. I protest against such a departure from our ideals.

I protest against the abdication by Congress of its proper functions and authority. Never shall I agree that the American Congress shall surrender to any executive or military authority its right and duty to say when our citizens shall be forced into line and fed to cannon. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to refer to a little matter in a somewhat facetious vein. One of our distinguished Members [Mr. EVANS] the other day obtained leave to insert in the RECORD an editorial by that distinguished gentleman, William Jennings Bryan, entitled "Deserving Democrats," and it was inserted in the RECORD of the day after the House last met. I happened to notice this little statement in the editorial:

> As an official, I enforced the civil-service law to the letter, and upon my resignation received from the employees of the State Department, more than 90 per cent of whom were under the civil-service law, a watch which I prize as a priceless treasure.

Mr. Bryan has been accused of putting men in the State Department regardless of the civil-service law. Holding up his hands to heaven, he says:

> I enforced the civil-service law to the letter.

Far be it from Mr. Bryan to violate any law. I read now section 1784 of the Revised Statutes, which undoubtedly is entirely familiar to such a distinguished gentleman and law giver. This is in reference to the watch presented to him by employees, 90 per cent of whom he says were in the classified service. Section 1784 of the Revised Statutes reads:

> Sec. 1784. No officer, clerk, or employee in the United States Government employ shall at any time solicit contributions from other officers, clerks, or employees in the Government service for a gift or present to those in a superior official position; nor shall any such officials or clericals superiors receive any gift or present offered or presented to them as a contribution from persons in Government employ receiving a less salary than themselves; nor shall any officer or clerk make any donation as a gift or present to any official superior. Every person who violates this section shall be summarily discharged from the Government employ.

I suppose that is the reason the President fired him. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Declaring in one moment, with virtuous indignation, that he enforced the letter of the civil-service law, which statement itself is not correct, in the next he prizes the result of the violation of the law which he committed when he accepted a watch given to him as a donation by the employees under him.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Is not a question of veracity distinctly raised between Secretary Bryan and Secretary Lansing by Secretary Lansing's statement this morning that a certain large number of employees were taken into the State Department without regard to the civil-service law?

Mr. MANN. Oh, of course, I do not take that part of Mr. Bryan's statement seriously about his having enforced the civil-service law to the letter.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is it not a fact——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is it not a fact that Mr. Bryan accepted the watch after his resignation had been presented and accepted?

Mr. MANN. No. The money was raised while Mr. Bryan was Secretary of State. The watch was purchased while he was Secretary of State. He knows it, and he knew he was violating the law. But what difference does it make? He is above the law. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, after the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], in which he undertakes to charge, by inference if not specifically, that either I or the members of the Committee on Military Affairs put something over on the Congress about which they did not know anything, I think I ought to make some answer to that charge.

If the gentleman did not know about it, he ought to have known about it. It was his duty to know about it, and if he did not know about it he does not understand the English language. Here was an amendment offered on the floor of the House, discussed in the Committee of the Whole for half an hour or more. Yet the gentleman says that the Congress and the people of the country did not know it and do not know it now, until he has been kind enough to enlighten us and tell us what we have done. He bases his criticism on the fact that the word "call" was stricken out and the word "draft" substituted in conference. I do not now recollect whether that is true or not, but what is the difference between the President being authorized to call men out and to draft them? There is no difference, so far as the President is concerned. But the history of this legislation is that when the committee came to consider the proposition made by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] as to the raising of these reserve battalions in time of war—and it is only in time of war—the committee believed that it was a good thing to do, in view of the experience of this country during the Civil War. The gentleman seems to forget that Congress has the power to confer upon the President the power to draft. That is all that the Congress has done in this case. It has conferred upon the President the power to draft under certain circumstances and in time of war, not in time of peace. The gentleman forgets that the United States Government in the Civil War resorted to the draft, and had to do it. He forgets that the Confederate States of America resorted to the draft, and had to do it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Were not those drafts under direct authorization of Congress?

Mr. HAY. And is not this under a direct authorization of Congress?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Has Congress ever before in the history of our country authorized the President to draft generally, as a part of the general law?

Mr. HAY. Yes; during the Civil War; and we have done the same thing now, nothing more, except to give the President the power to draft in time of war to fill up certain battalions in order to take the place of regiments which are in the field, and which may be decimated, members of which may be sick or sent home invalided. That is all we have done, and I assert that it is a wise provision. It is a provision taken in time. It is a provision of preparedness, and everybody who knows anything knows that if this country ever gets into a war with a first-class power, or any other power, you will never be able to raise an army through the volunteer system, but you will be compelled to resort to the draft. There can be no question about that. If it was true in the Civil War on both sides, it will inevitably be true in any other war which we may wage.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask the gentleman, with reference to the Civil War draft, if that was not an exercise of the power of Congress directly and for a specific purpose and for a specific time, and was it not wholly different in its nature from a general authorization of the Executive in all cases and any cases where we may be at war to conscript men for service?

Mr. HAY. No; there is no difference whatever between the two. This is the exercise of the power of Congress to confer upon the President the right to draft in time of war, in specific circumstances and for a specific purpose, and not a general draft. The President under this could not draft everybody in the country.

He could only draft a certain number of men to fill up certain battalions.

The gentleman, with tears in his eyes, talks about drafting Quakers into the service of the United States, not knowing that the very act which he is criticizing provides that men who have religious opinions which prevent them from going to war are exempted from all service. The gentleman ought to know what he is talking about when he undertakes to make criticisms of that character. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAY. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like the gentleman to call the attention of the House to the specific provision to which he refers.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will give me a copy of the national-defense act, I will do it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The provision which exempts Quakers.

Mr. HAY. It does not mention them by name, but it exempts all persons whose religious opinions prevent their going to war.

Mr. KAHN. Men whose religious scruples are against war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is on page 36.

Mr. HAY. The provision is—

> And all persons who because of religious belief shall claim exemption from military service if the conscientious holding of such belief by such person shall be established under such regulations as the President shall prescribe shall be exempted from militia service in a combatant capacity.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What section?

Mr. HAY. Section 59, page 36.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CARTER, for 10 days, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet next Tuesday at 11 a. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15522. An act to establish a national park service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15048. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 17498. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8234. An act to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16093. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of drainage assessments on Indian lands in Oklahoma";

H. R. 14338. An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15494. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 16290. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 17501. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio; and

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 6924. An act to provide for the maintenance of a training camp on the military reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah;

S. 6740. An act to correct the military record of Matthew C. Butler, jr.; and

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution extending until April 15, 1917, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5718. An act to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

S. 703. An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure; to the Committee on Education.

COMPENSATION FOR INJURED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay before the House the bill H. R. 15316, and I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

"SEC. 28a. Upon the organization of the said commission the work of the Department of Labor, connected with the adjustment of claims of employees of the United States for injuries, shall cease, and all pending investigations and proceedings in the Department of Labor in connection therewith shall be continued by the commission. All clerks and employees now engaged in carrying on said work exclusively in the Department of Labor shall be transferred to and become employees of the commission at their present grades and salaries."

Page 17, line 19, strike out all after "appointed" down to and including "positions," line 21, and insert: "from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission, and in accordance with the civil-service law."

Mr. WEBB. In regard to Senate amendment No. 1, I desire to move to concur in that amendment with an amendment. I offer this in lieu of the Senate amendment No. 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of amendment 1 and insert the following:

"SEC. 28a. Upon the organization of said commission and notification thereof to the heads of all executive departments, all commissions, or independent bureaus by or under which payments for compensation are now provided, to the effect that the commission is ready to take up the work evolved upon it by this act, the adjustment and settlement of such claims shall cease and determine by such executive departments, commissions, or independent bureaus, and all pending claims shall be transferred to and administered by the said commission. All clerks and employees now engaged in carrying on said work exclusively in the various executive departments, commissions, and independent bureaus shall be transferred to and become employees of the commission at their present grade and salaries."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to concur in the Senate amendment No. 1 with the amendment just read.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the Chair puts that motion will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to me for a question? It is beside the amendment that is before the House, and is a matter that I suggested to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] subsequent to the passage of this bill. That is, whether a widow who marries an employee after he is injured will be entitled to the compensation provided in this measure?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think that is specifically provided for. I should think, however, that they would not allow it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the bill there was no exception of such cases. In the District appropriation bill providing a pension fund for the firemen and policemen a distinct and special exemption was made applying to those widows who married subsequent to the retirement age or injury. I think such a provision should be incorporated in this measure.

Mr. WEBB. That is not in controversy, and we have no power to offer such an amendment now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware of that; but I was asking the gentleman if he was aware of any provision in the pension bill that would cover that.

Mr. WEBB. I am not, but I would be ready to support one.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up the special order, H. R. 17350, to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if that bill is called up to be considered, I shall make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. MANN. The only way that the gentleman from North Carolina can call up the bill is to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. WEBB. It ought not to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. But it is; and the only way it can be considered is to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEBB. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I do not want it considered if the gentleman from Illinois is going to make the point of no quorum. I shall ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not ask unanimous consent; he has a right to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If the gentleman from North Carolina withdraws his motion and the bill is not to be considered to-day, I do not desire to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina withdraws his motion and the gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order.

SETTLEMENT BETWEEN KANSAS CITY & MEMPHIS RAILWAY BRIDGE CO. AND CRITTENDEN COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair lay before the House the bill H. R. 10251, on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10251. An act to authorize the Kansas City & Memphis Railway Bridge Co. to make a settlement with Crittenden County, Ark., and for other purposes.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, the bill which originally passed the House authorized the Secretary of War to release the Kansas City & Memphis Railway Bridge Co. from the necessity of reconstructing an approach to a wagon way upon its paying to the county of Crittenden the sum of $12,000. The bill went to the Senate and that was amended so as to read $25,000. I move to concur in the Senate amendment; but the bill does not make it obligatory on the part of the bridge company to accept the provisions of the bill. It may or may not do it, as it sees fit. It can avail itself of the advantages of the bill and not reconstruct the approaches or it may refuse to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert the copy of contracts, telegrams, and letters so that it may be apparent on what information I first acted. This gives the whole transaction, as I understand it:

[In the Crittenden County court, January term, 1914, March 2.]

In re Wagonway Approach to the Frisco Bridge—3666.

The court having under consideration ways and means whereby this matter might be adjusted between Crittenden County and the bridge company along the lines heretofore discussed between the parties interested—that is, the payment by the bridge company to Crittenden County, Ark., for the use and benefits of public highways leading to the Rock Island Bridge now being constructed across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., an equitable sum of money in consideration of permission granted by Congress permitting the bridge company to abandon its wagon way and approaches to its bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

And in order to get this matter before this court the court hereby names the following citizens a committee of three to take this matter up with the bridge company and report their findings to this court as early as possible: R. J. Southall, H. A. McGee, and W. R. McDaniel are hereby named as the committee.

The clerk of the county court will notify them and furnish them a copy of this order, also send a copy of this order to J. E. Hutchinson, Springfield, Mo.

J. B. THOMPSON,
Judge.

MARCH 2, 1914.

[In county court, Crittenden County, Ark., Oct. 5, 1914.]

To Hon. J. B. THOMPSON, County Judge:

We, the undersigned committee, heretofore appointed by this court to undertake the settlement or compromise with the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., with reference to a reconstruction of the west approach to said bridge or a money settlement in lieu thereof, beg leave to report that we at once took up this matter with the officials of the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., and also with the proper officials of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co., also with the receivers thereof, James W. Lusk, W. C. Nixon, and William B. Biddle, and after considerable correspondence pro and con have reached a settlement which we believe will be fair and equitable to all parties concerned.

We have made a proposition to the above-named receivers to pay to Crittenden County the sum of $12,000 to be used in the construction of and improvement of public highways in said county, and that this committee with the consent and approval of the county court would have our Representatives in Congress to pass a bill relieving said Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. from reconstructing and maintaining the west approach to said bridge.

This proposition was accepted by F. G. Jonah, chief engineer of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co. on August 28, 1914.

We requested the receivers, James W. Lusk, W. C. Nixon, and William B. Biddle, to enter into a written contract with us to this effect and this contract has been received by us and is hereto attached and will be subject to the approval of the committee and the county court.

R. J. SOUTHALL, Chairman.
H. A. MCGEE, Secretary.
W. R. MCDANIEL.

And the court, after being fully advised in the premises, hereby approves the action of the above committee and authorizes the said committee to request the passage of a bill embodying the conditions of the above report, through the Congress of the United States, of our Senator and Representative in Congress.

J. B. THOMPSON, County Judge.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, County of Crittenden:

I, Dolph Smith, clerk of the county court, within and for the county and State aforesaid, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and complete copy of the report of the committee in the matter of the settlement with the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., relative to old bridge wagon way, and the order of the court in said matter.

Witness my hand and seal as such clerk this 7th day of October, 1914.

[SEAL.] DOLPH SMITH, Clerk.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD—JAMES W. LUSK, WILLIAM C. NIXON, AND WILLIAM B. BIDDLE, RECEIVERS.

OFFICE OF RECEIVERS,
St. Louis, Mo., September 28, 1914.

To R. J. SOUTHALL,
Chairman Crittenden County Committee:

Whereas by an act of Congress approved April 24, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., a corporation created and organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, was authorized and empowered to erect, construct, and maintain a bridge over the Mississippi River from or near the town of Hope, in the State of Arkansas, to or near the taxing district of Shelby County, commonly known as the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, under the terms and conditions in said act prescribed; and

Whereas it was provided by said act that said bridge should be constructed to provide for the passage, among other things, of "wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and, at the option of the corporation by which it was to be built, for foot passengers, for such reasonable rates of tolls as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War"; and

Whereas said act above referred to was amended by an act of Congress, approved April 28, 1904, entitled "An act to amend an act, 'An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.'"; and

Whereas by said act approved April 28, 1904, it was, among other things, provided that "said bridge should be constructed to provide for the passage (among other things) of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and, at the option of the company by which it may be built, for foot passengers"; and

Whereas said bridge was duly constructed, and has been operated and maintained as in said acts and each of them provided; and

Whereas during the year 1913 the west approach to and of said bridge was destroyed; and

Whereas Crittenden County, in the State of Arkansas, and the citizens thereof at the west end of said bridge, have requested the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co., the lessee of said bridge, and the receivers of the railroad and property of said railroad company to contribute to said Crittenden County the sum of $12,000 to be used in the construction or improvement of the public highways in said county, and in consideration of said contribution have offered to said railroad company and said receivers to procure the passage by Congress of an act relieving said Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, forever from any and all obligation or obligations imposed by said acts of Congress above referred to, or either of them, or otherwise, to reconstruct said approach and to construct and maintain said bridge to provide for the passage thereover of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals and foot passengers:

Now, therefore, the undersigned, as receivers of the railroad and property of said St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co., and not individually, hereby promise and agree to and with said Crittenden County, in the State of Arkansas, and the citizens thereof, to contribute to said Crittenden County the sum of $12,000, to be used in the construction or improvement of public highways in said county, when said Crittenden County or the citizens thereof shall have procured the passage by Congress and the approval thereof of an act forever relieving said Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, from the following obligation:

First. To reconstruct the west approach to said bridge; and Second. To construct and maintain said bridge so as to provide for the passage of wagons or vehicles of every kind, for the transit of animals and foot passengers thereon or thereover; so that the said Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall not be obligated to or required to reconstruct the west approach to said bridge or to construct or maintain said bridge so as to provide for the passage of wagons or vehicles of any kind or for the transit of animals or foot passengers thereon or thereover.

This obligation and promise shall cease and terminate when the undersigned receivers and their successors shall cease to be receivers of the railroad and property of St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I am in receipt of bill 10251, with reference to release of Kansas City Railway Co. from rebuilding approach. I have looked this over and think it meets all the requirements of the contract entered into with the company by the county commissioners. When this bill is passed you can let me know and send me an authenticated copy, and I will take it up with the proper authorities and "get the money."

I notice the bill calls for $12,500 payment. I am under the impression and my copy of the contract only calls for $12,000. You can have the figures changed before passage.

Thanking you for your interest in this matter, I am

Your friend,

R. J. SOUTHALL.

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1916.

Judge J. B. THOMPSON:

Following your letter I passed through the House the bill giving the road fund of Crittenden County $12,000 from the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. In the Senate it is amended to read $25,000. What action is to be taken? I want to comply with the contract.

MARION, ARK., July 1½, 1916.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the matter of the Frisco bridge approach, since receiving your telegram I have conferred with a number of our citizens, and the opinion seems to be to concur in the Senate amendment. I doubt if this is the best thing for us, but you can see the position it places me in. However, the agreement our committee made with the bridge company depended on the passage of an act relieving them of the rebuilding and maintenance of their approach. If the bill does not pass as per our agreement, and they refuse to be bound by the bill as amended, I suppose the next thing to do would be to have them rebuild their approach, as it looks now as though there is going to be delay in getting over the new bridge. Please return letters inclosed from files which I am sending you. Show how this settlement was reached.

Yours, truly,

J. B. THOMPSON.

SPECIAL CANCELING DIE FOR POSTMASTER AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 282.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 282) authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Springfield, Ill., with a special canceling die for the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Federal Union.

Whereas the city of Springfield, Ill., is making extensive preparations to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union, the celebration to begin an April 18, 1918, and to continue until December 3, 1918; and

Whereas the projected celebration in said city will include industrial and other exhibitions, pageants, athletic games, tournaments, parades, conventions, and many other interesting features that will attract visitors from all parts of the United States; and

Whereas the citizens' committee, cooperating with the Illinois Centennial Commission, created by the Illinois General Assembly, are widely advertising the approaching events, with the result that a great increase of incoming and outgoing mail matter is anticipated at the Springfield post office; and

Whereas the size and importance of the city of Springfield, Ill., and the extensive preparations being made by its citizens, cooperating with State organizations created for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Illinois into the Federal Union give to said celebration a national character and significance: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to prepare and deliver to the postmaster of Springfield, Ill., a special canceling die to be used in the cancellation of mail matter in the post office of that city from December 1, 1917, to December 3, 1918, said die to be of such design as may be agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the Illinois Centennial Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MISSISSIPPI CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 237.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration.

Whereas the city of Gulfport, Miss., is making extensive preparations to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Mississippi into the Union, the celebration to begin on October 1, 1917, and to continue until April 1, 1918; and

Whereas the projected celebration in said city will include industrial, agricultural, horticultural, and other exhibitions, pageants, national athletic games, tournaments, parades, conventions, and many other interesting features that will attract visitors from all parts of the United States; and

Whereas the Mississippi Centennial Exposition Commission having the celebration in charge will widely advertise the approaching events, with the result that a great increase of incoming and outgoing mail matter will be handled by the Gulfport post office; and

Whereas the governor of the State of Mississippi has issued a proclamation inviting all the States of the Union to participate and will invite the countries of South and Central America and Mexico to participate in the celebration; and

Whereas the extensive preparations being made by the citizens of Gulfport and the State of Mississippi for the celebration give to said celebration a national character and significance: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to prepare and deliver to the postmaster of Gulfport a special canceling die to be used in the cancellation of mail matter in the post office of that city from July 1, 1916, to April 1, 1918, said die to be of such design as may be agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the Mississippi Centennial Exposition Commission

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I question the practice of embodying advertising matter in joint resolutions such as are here incorporated in this resolution in the preamble.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that we passed two resolutions some time ago—one for a city in New Jersey, and even the advertisement in that did not fix the name in my mind, and for some other eastern city. I think we left the advertisements in both of them. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to a reasonable advertisement.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as the gentleman from Mississippi is concerned, he needs none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that the resolution be amended, on line 7, page 2, by striking out "July" and inserting "January" and striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting "seventeen."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out "July" and insert "January" and strike out the word "sixteen" and insert "seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLESTON-DUNBAR TRACTION CO.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5103) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia, and that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 5103, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to lease, at a nominal rental value of not exceeding $25 per year, to the Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co., a corporation, its successors or assigns, the strip of land 15 feet wide and 601⅛ feet long, or approximately twenty-one hundredths of an acre, which said strip of land is situated at or near United States Government Lock and Dam No. 6 of the Great Kanawha River improvement, near the city of Charleston, in the State of West Virginia, which said strip of land said Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. is now occupying with its track: Provided, That said annual rental shall be promptly paid as required by the Secretary of War, and that the United States Government shall sustain no loss or expense by reason of said lease to said traction company: And provided further, That said traction company shall not fence up said strip of land unless required to do so by the Secretary of War; and shall at its own expense keep up and maintain the existing crossings over said traction company's line on the Government property: And provided further, That said traction company shall not remove its station or stop upon or near the Government's said property as said stop and station is at present located.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I offer to amend on page 1, line 5, by striking out "$25" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$25" and insert "$50."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement made by the Illinois trainmen to the representatives of the State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement made by certain trainmen. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

M'CABE, MONT.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 600) to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider at this time the conference report upon the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of said soldiers and sailors, notwithstanding the rule which requires the printing of the conference report before it can be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take up a conference report upon an omnibus pension bill, S. 6370, notwithstanding the rule which requires it to be printed for one day. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this an omnibus pension bill?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. This is a Senate omnibus pension bill. The conference report upon it has already been acted upon by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1173).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, and 15.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"The name of Robert Hedrick, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry (subsequently Company F, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry), and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

And the House agree to the same.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
M. P. KINKAID,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13835) to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county, in said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian, with Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17235) granting the consent of Congress to W. H. Crosby, W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette, Daniel Good, Henry May, Robert C. Gaupp, Edward Kener, jr., William F. MacGlashan, and William A. Morgan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Oh, this is a bridge across the Niagara River, and the gentleman will have to have some information about that before he passes such a bill as that. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

AMENDING SECTION 2971, REVISED STATUTES UNITED STATES.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 292.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the limitation of section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States limiting the time for the withdrawal of merchandise from bonded warehouses for exportation to Mexico be, and the same hereby is, extended until such time as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury conditions in that country will permit such merchandise to be exported: Provided, That the extension of time for the withdrawal of merchandise for export shall be limited to merchandise that was in a bonded warehouse of the United States on the 1st day of August, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] to offer an amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in order to meet the views of the Treasury as to the precise language that should be incorporated in this resolution I send two amendments to the Clerk's desk, which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 4, 5, and 6 the words "limiting the time for the withdrawal of merchandise from bonded warehouses," and substitute therefor the words "as to the period during which merchandise may remain in bonded warehouse without payment of duty."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "extended" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to all merchandise which was in bonded warehouses on August 1, 1916, and intended for exportation to Mexico until such time as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury the conditions in Mexico are such as to make it commercially practicable to export the merchandise to that country."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury in reference to this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 24, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, transmitting a proposed amendment to H. J. Res. 292, to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes by extending the period during which merchandise may remain in bonded warehouse to all merchandise intended for exportation to Mexico and in bonded warehouse on August 1, 1916, until such time as, in the opinion of the Secretary, conditions in Mexico are such as to make it commercially practicable to export the merchandise to that country.

The department is of the opinion that the amendment as drafted will accomplish the purpose intended, and that the carrying out of the proposed legislation presents no administrative difficulties. The department therefore perceives no objection to the enactment of the joint resolution as amended.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on "The stop watch and the human scrap heap."

The SPEAKER. On the stop watch, and what else?

Mr. BORLAND. The human scrap heap.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE NORTH BRANCH OF THE SUSQUEHANNA RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 17567, which the Clerk now has.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 17567, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R 17567) to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the East Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the East Branch of the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, and State of Pennsylvania, to the borough of Dorranceton, in the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, at or in prolongation of Market Street, as the same is now established and used in the respective municipalities, to replace the present structure erected at the same location, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "East" and insert the word "North," so that the line will read "across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILL.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the bill S. 6369 and ask unanimous consent that the printing under the rule in the RECORD may be dispensed with and the report be immediately considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on Senate bill 6369 and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration notwithstanding the rule about printing. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this an omnibus pension bill?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1174).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2 and 8, and agree to the same.

JNO. A. KEY,
EDWARD KEATING,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. HUGHES,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1 (case of Mary A. Johnson): Provides a pension of $12, as proposed by the Senate, with the usual additional allowance of $2 for each of the soldier's minor children under the age of 16 years.

On amendment No. 2: Strikes out the provision for increase of pension for Alan P. Wilson.

On amendment No. 3 (case of Elizabeth Dunn Howe): Provides a pension of $30 for the widow of Brig. Gen. Walter Howe, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 4 (case of Hepsie C. Holway): Provides a pension of $20, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 5 (case of Henry Schlobohm): Provides an increase of pension to $24, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $17, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 6 (case of George W. Dawson): Provides increase of pension to $17, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 7 (case of Emma E. Boswell): Provides increase of pension to $25, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 8 (case of James M. Brown): Provides increase to $12, as proposed by the House, instead of $17, as proposed by the Senate.

JNO. A. KEY,
EDWARD KEATING,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

DRAINAGE OF LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 5496.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5496) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read in lieu of the bill? The amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. No; the bill has never been read in the House. It is a very poor practice, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 169), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That at any time after any sale of unentered lands has been made in the manner and for the purpose mentioned in this act patent shall issue to the purchaser thereof upon payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of like lands under the homestead laws. But purchasers at a sale of unentered lands shall have the qualification of homestead entrymen, and not more than 160 acres of such lands shall be sold to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. This limitation shall not apply to sales to the State, but shall apply to purchases from the State of unentered lands bid in for the State. Any part of the purchase money arising from the sale of any lands in the manner and for the purposes provided in this act, which shall be in excess of the payments herein required and of the total drainage charges assessed against such lands, shall be paid to the county treasurer of the county in which the land is situated to be used for the construction and maintenance of canals, ditches, and other work connected with the drainage of swampy, wet, and overflowed lands in such county."

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was read, as follows:

Strike out, page 1, beginning line 3, down to and including line 20 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following——

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this bill, though the department questions somewhat the propriety, it does not take away any of the rights of the Chippewa Indians in these lands that they have already ceded or agreed to their cession under some prior law?

Mr. RAKER. That is the intention of the bill and view of the committee in the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. It merely transfers the surplus funds from the Indians to the respective counties which undertake this drainage work?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is correct. The development——

Mr. STEENERSON. And does it not, for instance, expedite the sale of the unsold lands which will be greatly to the advantage of the Indians?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 5 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That at any time after any sale of unentered lands has been made in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act patent shall issue to the purchaser thereof upon payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of like lands under the homestead laws. But purchasers at a sale of unentered lands shall have the qualification of homestead entrymen, and not more than 160 acres of such lands shall be sold to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. This limitation shall not apply to sales to the State, but shall apply to purchases from the State of unentered lands bid in for the State. Any part of the purchase money arising from the sale of any lands in the manner and for the purposes provided in this act which shall be in excess of the drainage charges then delinquent shall be paid to and used by the county in which such land is located for the purpose of maintenance, improving, and extending such drainage works within the area benefited by the drainage project in which such land shall have been assessed for such drainage charge."

That section 6 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That any entered lands sold in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act may be patented to the purchaser thereof at any time after the expiration of the period of redemption provided for in the drainage laws under which it may be sold (there having been no redemption) upon the payment to the receiver of the fees and commissions and the price mentioned in the preceding section, or so much thereof as has not already been paid by the entryman; and if the sum received at any such sale shall be in excess of the payments herein required and of the drainage assessments and cost of the sale, such excess shall be paid to the proper county officer for the benefit of and payment to the entryman. That unless the purchasers of unentered lands shall, within 90 days after the sale provided for in section 3, pay to the proper receiver the fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may be entitled, as provided in section 5, and unless the purchasers of entered lands shall, within 90 days after the right of redemption has expired, make like payments, as provided for in this section, any person having the qualifications of a homestead entryman may pay to the proper receiver for not more than 160 acres of land for which such payment has not been made: First, the unpaid fees commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may then be entitled; and, second, the sum due at the sale for drainage charges; and, in addition thereto, if bid in by the State, interest on the amount bid by the State at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from the date of such sale, and thereupon the person making such payment shall become subrogated to the rights of such purchaser to receive a patent for said land. When any payment is made to effect such subrogation the receiver shall transmit to the treasurer of the county where the land is situated the amount paid for drainage charges, together with the interest paid thereon."

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, and, further, I move that a similar bill, H. R. 13570, lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is five and one-half hours of speech making.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the title to the bill just passed be amended by the insertion of section 6 after section 5, according to the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] calls for the regular order. And the regular order is the speech making.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one hour on next Tuesday after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of business on the Speaker's table and other business that may be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the business on the Speaker's table, he shall be permitted to address the House for one hour, without interfering with the conference report and revenue bill.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlemen who are already on the list ought to be continued on the list.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the speeches on the list heretofore made be taken up seriatim, and at the end of that time the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN] shall be permitted to address the House for one hour. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order, and the regular order is to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] for 20 minutes. However, inasmuch as he is not here, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for one hour.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield until I can get unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the national platform of the Prohibition Party and the convention addresses at that convention of W. G. Calderwood and Daniel A. Poling.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the platform of the Prohibition Party and convention addresses mentioned by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDALL. And also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the subject of newspaper and magazine postal rates and their relation to 1-cent letter postage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman also asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of newspaper and magazine postal rates and their relation to 1-cent letter postage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, following the other gentlemen, I have 30 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STONE] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN] next Tuesday, he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes, following the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STONE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the completion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STONE] on Tuesday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise, correct, and extend my remarks in the RECORD, made on the 21st of July and on the 15th of August.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on certain speeches made in July and August. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN IN UNITED STATES SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, for printing in the RECORD:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 21, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the House resolution of the 16th instant, directing the Secretary of War, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives how many members of the National Guard taken into the service of the United States, in compliance with the President's order of June 18, 1916, are recruits without any previous military experience.

In response thereto you are advised that the War Department is not in possession of the information requested. Some time ago, however, a movement for obtaining the data in question was begun. As you are aware, the troops that have been accepted into the United States service under the provisions of the order mentioned are widely separated, and it will undoubtedly require considerable time to procure the data to enable the department to comply fully with the terms of the resolution. However, as soon as the desired information can be obtained it will be promptly furnished to the House of Representatives.

Sincerely, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

THE DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, those who seek and obtain power assume responsibility and must accept criticism. It is the duty of the citizen under our form of Government to be informed relative to the conduct of public officials and to criticize acts which he believes deserving of criticism. Only thus can the fountains of authority be cleansed and dangerous and evil tendencies corrected. The Republican Party has never resented—has, in fact, welcomed—fair discussion and criticism of its acts and policies. Even the notoriously unfair and untruthful assaults, inspired by malice and inflamed by demagoguery, so frequently launched by the opposition have been philosophically accepted as the price of power and responsibility.

To-day conditions are reversed. The Democratic Party, long in opposition, strong in criticism, is at the bar of public opinion charged with an account of its stewardship. And behold! Some of its members who have been most conspicuous and notorious for the recklessness and injustice of their attacks on Republicans and Republicanism, in cheap heroics and ridiculous philippics, now proclaim that criticism of their party and their administration savors of treason! We gladly leave to our Democratic friends a monopoly of the doctrine that the king—the President—and the party can do no wrong, while we pursue the painful duty of pointing out truthfully without malice how persistently wrong the President and the Democratic Party have been, wrong not only when there was some slight excuse for going astray, but wrong when the path of wisdom and reason was perfectly plain and clear.

The administration of President Wilson assumed control of the Government affairs under peculiarly favorable and fortuitous circumstances. While President Wilson lacked 655,000 votes of receiving a majority of the votes cast for President in 1912, the division of the opposition, based on a temporary family quarrel, was of a character calculated to measurably reconcile to his election many who had not voted for him and to dispose a large majority of the people of the country to view the new administration with an unprejudiced eye and an open mind and give it and the Democratic Congress the benefit of every doubt in the carrying out of their legislative and administrative programs. The honeymoon period as between Presidents and the people, usually quite brief, was unusually long extended in the case of President Wilson, and served to discourage analysis and criticism even in the face of growing anxiety and uncertainty as to the outcome of the administration's policies.

CONDITIONS OF PROSPERITY.

The condition of the country at the beginning of the administration was peculiarly favorable to its successful establishment. The long years of Republican administration had been years of general and abounding prosperity. Under the wise legislation and administration of the Republican Party we had as a people progressed and developed to a degree and extent unparalleled in the world's history.

Farm and factory, mill and mine, and lines and avenues of transportation by land and water presented a picture of general and healthy prosperity, with every prospect of its continuance. At the time Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic Party took the helm all was well at home, and, except for a cloud on the southern border, we enjoyed friendly and harmonious and satisfactory relations with all the peoples of the world. A Republican tariff bill, much criticized, had nevertheless produced sufficient revenue to keep the machinery of Government running smoothly and leave in the National Treasury a free, available, and unobligated working balance of one hundred and fifty millions, or what would, under the form of Treasury statements since adopted by this administration amount to a balance of over $220,000,000.

REPUBLICAN LEGISLATION.

In the field of legislation the new administration and Congress took up its duties and responsibilities under conditions extraordinarily favorable to successful accomplishment. Problems and questions that had been agitating the public mind for years had either been successfully disposed of or were in a fair way to solution with the pathway clearly blazed. After having three times passed the House of Representatives when controlled by Republican majorities, a resolution for the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people for the fourth time passed the House in the Sixty-second Congress almost unanimously, was adopted by the Republican Senate, ratified by the States, promulgated by President Taft, and thus removed from the theater of controversy. Still earlier, the Republican House and Senate in the Sixty-third Congress, having adopted the resolution for an amendment providing for an income tax, and the States having ratified it, it was promulgated by President Taft in time to be utilized by the new administration as a part of its revenue legislation.

The question of statehood for the last remaining Territories within our continental boundaries, which had been agitating the country and Congress for years, had finally been settled by the signature of President Taft to the statehood bill, in August, 1911. The new administration thus came into power with congressional representation from all our continental area, with popular election of both branches of Congress provided for, and with a new and rich source of revenue available.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

The way had also been smoothed and the trail blazed for other legislation of great importance. For 20 years and more the best minds of the country had wrestled with the problem of the extension and coordination of our national banking legislation. No end of plans and devices had been put forward or suggested as currency measures.

Democratic opposition to our national banking laws had been so persistent, ill-tempered, and unfair that the day of amendment, expansion, and coordination was long delayed in the vain search for some entirely new system. In spite, however, of Democratic opposition, it finally came to be admitted by honest and sincere men of all parties that the best plan to meet our needs was the extension and coordination of the system that had served us long and reasonably well, even under the severest strains.

Fortunately for the new administration, the Vreeland-Aldrich currency act had been enacted to meet any possible emergency, and the Currency Commission appointed to formulate and recommend legislation had concluded its thorough and exhaustive studies and made its unanimous report recommending a plan of currency legislation. The report of the Currency Commission gave the administration and the Congress the outline and plan on which to base its legislation, and the emergency act stayed and protected and maintained the national credit in the trying early period of the European war.

ANTITRUST AND OTHER LAWS.

The Republican Sherman antitrust law, long denounced and ridiculed by Democrats; the legislation establishing the Interstate Commerce Commission and extending and supplementing its authority and control, such as the safety-appliance law; the creation of the Departments of Commerce and Labor and their various bureaus, including such as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the Commission of Mediation and Arbitration, and the Children's Bureau—all these and many other wise provisions of legislation and administration, such for instance as the Federal employees' compensation act, exerting their influence along legitimate lines of development and expansion—paved and marked the way for further evolution in proper Federal regulation and control.

In fact, so wisely had Republican legislation and administration solved problems, smoothed pathways, and pointed the proper direction to further legislative development that it is not to be wondered at that a distinguished Democratic Member on this floor recently laid the claim that in this Congress his party had largely pursued Republican lines of policy or fulfilled Republican promises. That is true as to a few of the best features of their legislation. Unfortunately for the country, they have not generally legislated wisely even when the wise course and proper plan and direction has been clearly pointed out.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him with a brief question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARAWAY). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman is brief, I will.

Mr. BENNET. Has the gentleman overlooked, in citing his authorities, the fact that the President of the United States in his Indianapolis speech said the Republican Party had never had a new idea or passed any new constructive legislation in 30 years?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the President of the United States says a great many widely differing things at different times, and, judging from the many changes that have taken place in the President's opinion and attitude on matters and things from time to time, I am inclined to think that the President does not always know what he is talking about. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

CONDITIONS OF GOOD FORTUNE.

Mr. Speaker, thus briefly have I outlined some features of the unprecedented conditions of good fortune under which the present administration entered upon its career and the Democratic Congress began its work. Not only that, but the new Congress contained a minority, most of the members of which had been so profoundly impressed by the events of the preceding campaign and their astounding results as to be indisposed to partisan contention and predisposed to support such legislative proposals of the Democratic majority as possessed any slight semblance or discernible attribute of virtue or wisdom. Furthermore, there sat in Congress more than a score of earnest men, some of marked ability, elected as Progressives, who stood ready to cooperate with the majority in support of any proposition which possessed even a minimum of merit, their theory being that it was their duty to overlook much that was objectionable in legislative proposals in order to register their support of those features which met their approval.

It is interesting to now recall how little credit Republicans or Progressives ever received from the majority for their patriotic efforts to cooperate with them in good faith, even to the extent of voting for measures which had only their limited or partial approval. About all one hears from the majority on this subject is defense of some of their questionable or doubtful legislation on the ground that some Republican or Progressive voted for the bills which carried it.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Urged by the President to act promptly for the purpose, he said, of relieving the people from burdens, and with a view, so he told us, of allowing our workers and merchants to become accustomed to the excitement of whetting their wits against those of the rest of the world, the Democratic brethren promptly, on the assembling of Congress, at the call of the President soon after his inauguration, took up the revision of the tariff.

Wearied and half convinced by continuous and persistent assaults on Republican tariff legislation, the country, against its better judgment, was inclined to hope for the best as the outcome of Democratic tariff legislation, and though doubts and misgivings were widespread, the Underwood bill, which became a law on October 3, 1913, had the fairest and the best chance of any tariff legislation ever enacted by an American Congress.

No sooner was it on the statute books, however, than its unfortunate effects began to be felt. For the 10 months from the date of its enactment to the breaking out of the European war imports increased over $100,000,000 in value over and above the imports for same period the year before, while customs revenues decreased more than $30,000,000 below the revenues of that former period.

STAGNATION AND DEPRESSION.

Despite the favorable conditions under which the administration started and which the momentum of prosperity for a time maintained, eventually the increase of imported manufactures produced their inevitable effect. They were none the less tangible because the President characterized them as psychological. So gradually at first as to be scarcely realized, but with ever-widening horizon, ever-extending and increasing effect with the lessening of the orders, spread the stilling of the looms, the banking of the fires, the dulling of the hum of industry. Out upon the steel lines of communication the shuttling of the ever-moving trains thinned and slackened, and on the sidetracks gradually accumulated those long lines of empty cars, which in the spring and summer of 1914 became the symbol of the industrial palsy which was settling upon the land. In these days it was estimated that 3,000,000 men were out of work.

The Democratic Party had had its wonderful opportunity to reasonably modify tariff rates, to make the modifications and adjustments which a considerable portion of the country believed necessary and advisable—to reform but not destroy. But that was impossible; impossible then, impossible now; will be impossible any time in the future to a party that clings to the ancient errors of free trade and tariff for revenue only; a party with whom protection if tolerated must be incidental, accidental, or sporadic. The measure they evolved was neither free trade, tariff for revenue, or protection, but a miserable, indefensible, illogical combination of them all, a failure as a revenue producer, a joke as a measure of proper protection. Its presence on the statute books presents a menace which the close of the European war will translate into a calamity.

WAR-REVENUE BILL.

Not only did the Democratic Party fail to sense or foresee or to prepare for the conditions created by the European conflict, much less those that would arise at its close, but they made no sort of effort to adjust our affairs to the war-created conditions. Instead of a careful, thoughtful, logical readjustment of tariff schedules after the outbreak of the European war to meet war conditions they gave us the so-called war-tax bill. It was so called, no doubt, because it warred against reason, against thrift, and against the people's peace of mind, in taxes on powers of attorney and promises to pay, telephone calls, and chewing gum. Its exasperating and vexatious provisions wrung from the exasperated people, above the cost of collection, much less than the forty-six millions lost to the Treasury by the reduction of the duty on sugar before the spur of necessity prodded the Democratic Party into rectifying that economic blunder.

KITCHIN REVENUE BILL.

But our Democratic friends have had another opportunity to correct their tariff mistakes to meet the conditions the war has produced, to prepare for the crises in industry which its close will present. It came to them recently when the demands of a Treasury, impoverished by their unwise fiscal policy, depleted by their extravagance, was to be replenished on the pretense of financing preparedness. The action taken in the House, and in the main adhered to at the other end of the Capitol, illustrates more clearly and strikingly the difference between a policy of statesmanship and one of fiscal plunder than any act of legislation I now recall.

At a time when conditions demanded the collection of revenues and adjustment of tariffs with a view of safeguarding the Nation's industrial life and insuring its industrial independence, in the face of conditions calculated to test the very foundation of our industrial system and to imperil the entire fabric of our wage scale, Democratic leaders deliberately abandoned the highways of statesmanship and grasping the cudgels and bludgeons of the footpad set out to replenish the National Treasury from the savings of thrift and the earnings of industry. By the one act of placing wool on the free list foreign importers had, between the time of the passage of the Underwood bill and the 1st of last July, been relieved from the payment of over one hundred and twenty-two millions of import duties, which they would have been compelled to pay under the Payne Act. Having made this present, along with many others, to foreign importers, with a corresponding loss to the Treasury and with no corresponding benefit to any American citizen, they proceeded in their recent revenue bill to load upon the industries and savings, mostly of a comparatively few States, in direct taxation the burden of the losses thus sustained.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

Armed and embattled Europe, in the throes of the mightiest struggle of history, must have our inexhaustible supplies of war munitions, of military equipment, of foodstuffs in limitless quantities, or perish, and under the spur of their necessity the volume of our exports leaped from $2,364,579,148 in value in the fiscal year ending a month before the outbreak of the European war to $4,333,698,604 in the fiscal year which closed June 30 last, the second year of war. This is an increase of $1,969,119,456, or 84 per cent, in the second year of war over the last year of peace. This stupendous increase was almost wholly in exports to the warring allied powers and neutrals directly affected by the war. It is, none of it, the ordinary, legitimate expansion of trade. And this increase, it should be remembered, was in spite of a loss of over $400,000,000 in our exports to Germany, Austria, and Belgium. This war-created business is 46 per cent of our entire present export trade and is destined to largely vanish like the morning mist on the return of peace. This war traffic is in volume equal to more than 90 per cent of our total export trade in the fiscal year 1912. What preparation has the Democratic Party made for the wrenching and disarrangement of business when peace shall close these stupendous trade opportunities which war has created?

But startling as are the problems which peace shall bring through the check of exports, more alarming are the problems which the situation presents and trade figures prophesy in the matter of imports. Practically all imports from Germany,

Austria, Belgium, and Turkey have ceased, resulting in a reduction of over $220,000,000 in value of imports from those countries in the second year of war below the imports of the last year of peace. Notwithstanding these decreases our total imports increased in that period; that is, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, above those of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, in the sum of $304,059,185. With every energy bent and every nerve strained in the prosecution of a war which threatens the very foundations of her Empire, England has found it possible to increase her shipments of merchandise to our ports in the past year of war to the amount of $10,000,000 in value above those of the last year of peace. These increases of imports from nations in the midst of war of frightful proportions prophesy eloquently of the avalanche of merchandise that threatens to engulf us when the allies and the central powers shall alike seek our markets with renewed energy and persistency as they proceed to rebuild their fortunes on the reestablishment of peace. What has the Democratic Party done to meet this situation? What does it propose? Absolutely nothing, except a ridiculous antidumping joker in their late revenue bill.

BLACK LISTS AND TRADE COMPACTS.

The recent black list of many American firms issued by the allied powers, the June trade agreement of the central powers, followed by the amazing mutual trade compact entered into by the allied powers last month in Paris, considered in connection with the necessities for wider markets which will confront all the powers when the frightful destruction of war shall give way to the feverish and desperate activities of rehabilitation, presents a situation of industrial menace such as no great industrial people like ours have faced in all the world's history. And yet the Democratic Party has done nothing—absolutely nothing—useful or effective in preparation for this crucial crises which is certain to come as mutual exhaustion in the no distant future rings down the curtain on the horrors of Europe's battle fields and wasted territory.

Briefly this is the story of this administration's revenue legislation: Increased imports, accompanied by decreased revenues, in the period before the opening of the European war, a situation calculated to put us on the toboggan which leads through ruined industries to a bankrupt Treasury. Then a tax on notes and chewing gum, and, lastly, direct taxes, sectional and discriminatory. Nowhere through it all an intelligent attempt to make revenue raising an ally and handmaiden of American labor and industry; the foreign importer given the free run of our markets, the industrious citizen taxed at every turn; the trying day of pence and readjustment in Europe approaching and no proper effort to prepare for it. One may search the pages of modern history in vain to find another example of such stupendous folly and limitless inaptitude for wise government.

BANKING AND CURRENCY BILL.

Under the favorable conditions to which I have heretofore referred, touching currency legislation, with the researches, the report, and recommendations of the Currency Commission to guide them, there would seem to have been little opportunity for the Democratic framers of currency legislation to go wrong; but what opportunity there was, was utilized to the utmost. Whatever the Federal reserve act contains that is sound in principle, it owes to the crystallization of opinion as expressed in the report and recommendations of the Currency Commission. Its doubtful provisions, its faults, and its financial heresies it owes to Mr. Bryan, the administration, and the Democratic Congress. Fortunately for the country and thrice fortunately for the administration, it was not in operation when the financial crisis of the European war came. Four days before the outbreak of the war the Secretary of the Treasury announced:

The Aldrich-Vreeland bill is still in force, and under its provisions there are in the Treasury, ready for issue, $500,000,000 in currency, which the banks can get upon application under that law.

Before October 31 the Treasury had shipped $269,558,000 of that currency to various banks, and over $360,000,000 of it was outstanding on that date. On December 7 the Secretary of the Treasury, claiming credit for having averted a panic by the use of the Aldrich-Vreeland notes, said, "The Federal Reserve System was at that time only in process of formation, and was therefore unable to render any service in the situation." Less than three million in Federal reserve notes had been issued up to December 1, 1914, as against three hundred and sixty million Aldrich-Vreeland notes then outstanding.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman be interrupted?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the gentleman know that the Vreeland-Aldrich bill as originally enacted could not have been used at all, and that never a dollar was issued under it, and that the Secretary of the Treasury was only enabled to issue $385,000,000 of currency because of amendments made by the Sixty-third Congress?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the gentleman does not know that what the gentleman from Virginia says is accurate. On the contrary, he knows that it is not entirely accurate.

Mr. GLASS. In what respect is it inaccurate?

Mr. MONDELL. Because the Vreeland-Aldrich bill when enacted was a perfectly workable measure.

Mr. GLASS. It was an absolutely unworkable measure.

Mr. MONDELL. Fortunately for the country the period during which it was to operate was extended and it was slightly amended, so as to make its conditions easier in the matter of interest for the banks. It was the Vreeland-Aldrich bill that saved the country at the outbreak of the war, as everybody knows, and according to the statement of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry I have not the time to yield further.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman has not time to be corrected, he means?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman can not put that statement into my speech.

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. I have made an absolutely correct statement, that it was the Vreeland-Aldrich bill that saved the country at the outbreak of the European war, and no one denies it, not even the gentleman from Virginia who is now interrupting me, who endeavors to shift the issue by referring to some amendments that were made to the bill in the Taft administration after it was first passed. The important fact is that it was the Vreeland-Aldrich bill and not the Federal reserve act that saved the situation.

Mr. HILL. The amendments only amounted to an inflation; they did not help the situation at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Before the Federal Reserve System was organized and in operation the crisis had passed, and the continuous flood of foreign gold sent in exchange for war munitions and supplies had set in, the upward trend of prices was accelerated and still continues, creating a condition under which the banking and currency situation of the country would be safe and sound under any system.

Up to the date of my latest information but 2 or 3 of the 12 Federal reserve banks had paid dividends.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Two or three more had earned only enough to pay their running expenses.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not. I have not time to conclude my remarks as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Half of the twelve had not earned enough to pay their rent and clerk hire. We all wish the Federal Reserve System success, but we realize that it must be cured of the faults and the fallacies the Democratic administration fastened upon it before it can be. The passing of time has but served to emphasize the dangerous character of the enormous powers lodged in the reserve board, enhanced as they have been by the partisan character of its organization. The sorry consequences of the gross favoritism displayed in the location of some of the reserve banks and in establishing the boundaries of some of the districts in defiance of the fixed currents of trade and business becomes more apparent every day. In the meantime the reserve system is holding millions of the reserves of the banks and, in some districts at least, rendering practically no service to the institutions and the people whose reserves are thus held. On the contrary, some, at least, of the reserve banks are entering largely into competition with the banks which have furnished them the funds with which they do business. We hope for the perfection of the Federal Reserve System, but it can only be fully perfected by a change of policy that can only come through a change of administration.

RURAL CREDITS.

A system of credits applicable to investment as distinguished from commercial banking, and available particularly for farm loans was a natural and logical feature of the extension, development, and coordination of our national banking system, but with the best opportunity in the world to proceed along right lines, the administration and the party made, if possible, a worse job of rural credits than of the Federal Reserve System. They provided a system which may work where it is not essential, but which will be the least workable where most needed.

It is another illustration of Democratic capacity to do even a good thing in a disappointing way.

CONSERVATION.

If there was any one field of legislation in which the Democratic administration might have hoped to accomplish something worth while it was in the field of constructive legislation embraced under the term "conservation." Long-continued agitation, wide discussion, the adjustment and crystallization of opinion, all gave promise of early and beneficial results in wise legislation, particularly in view of the spirit of earnest cooperation with which Republicans and Progressives approached the consideration of the problems involved. What has been the result? With the exception of the Alaska coal-leasing bill, under which no leases have as yet been made or coal mined, not a single important measure for the conservation, or the wise utilization of our natural resources has become a law under this administration. At the same time opportunities for reasonable and legitimate development under present laws, particularly for the development of oil lands, have been continuously and systematically curtailed. Had the Republican Party been in power and pursued the policy of continued restriction of oil development in the public-land States which has been pursued by this administration, every Democrat, big and little, would have howled at the top of his lungs that the Republicans were in league with John D. Rockefeller in raising the price of gasoline.

Whatever settlement and development has occurred on the public lands under this administration has been under laws which were on the statute books when it came into power. Even the laws under which they have claimed to protect the public domain are Republican laws. If anything more than this record were needed to prove the incapacity of the Democratic Party to agree upon or enact needed legislation, it would be found in the fact that the bills relating to these matters which have been proposed and acted upon in one or the other branch of Congress have none of them fully met the approval of any considerable portion of the people of the regions to which they mostly apply.

LABOR LEGISLATION.

Much has been and will be claimed for the Democratic Party and the administration for its alleged friendly attitude toward labor, but one may search the record in vain for legislation even remotely tending to enlarge, extend, or render more inviting the field of labor's opportunity. On the other hand, the Democratic policy tends to curtail these opportunities in favor of the foreign workingman. The child-labor law, made necessary by conditions in the mills and factories of southern Democratic States, had almost no opposition in Congress except from Democrats. It would have failed of passage on account of persistent Democratic opposition in the Senate, as the Democratic caucus had decreed, had not the President, as reported in the newspapers, at the last moment after conference with his campaign managers, insisted on its being passed before election. Immigration legislation, which organized labor has earnestly and persistently asked and petitioned for, after having passed the House met its defeat in another body by the solid vote of the President's party, and it has been claimed, and not denied, that this action was taken on orders from the White House. In hazy definitions, in involved legislative phraseology, in the froth of doubtful definition, the Democratic Party has attempted to prove its friendship for labor, but in those things which serve or tend to protect labor's standards, maintain its wage, increase its dignity, or widen its opportunity the party is and has been sadly lacking.

FOREIGN POLICY.

When we turn from domestic to foreign policies we find the same characteristics of government by platitude, of shifting and vacillation, of personal domination by the Chief Executive, of foolish and futile pursuit of policies undertaken in the hope of catching the popular fancy, rather than serve the public interest, which have characterized domestic policies. The result has been what might have been expected—American citizens slaughtered wantonly without apology or reparation, American rights denied, American trade embargoed, American business blacklisted, American mails rifled, American cargoes, including some between American ports, confiscated.

In the instances and to the extent that our diplomatic correspondence has been correct, forceful, and praiseworthy its force and effect have been largely nullified and its effectiveness dulled by the impression which has been created, consciously and intentionally or otherwise, that what we said and what was demanded were to be understood as being Falstaffian or Pickwickian in character and to be taken with due consideration of the fact that the administration could be depended upon to take no action calculated to make its demands good.

None of the warring powers of Europe has had the least disposition, none has been in position where it could afford to bring any question at issue with the United States to the point of a breach of diplomatic relations. A proper attitude of firmness and unwavering determination to maintain our rights and insistence upon respect for them would have unquestionably resulted in their complete recognition by all of the warring powers at all times, even as they have been grudgingly and partially recognized by some of them some of the time.

MEXICO.

No President has ever had a freer hand, no President has ever had a fairer opportunity to develop his policy in foreign affairs unhampered by interference or criticism than President Wilson. In the matter of our dealings with Mexico this was particularly and peculiarly true. For months after the country had become fairly well satisfied that the policy being pursued was radically wrong and likely to lead to serious consequences, judgment was suspended in the hope that by some chance the outcome might justify the extraordinary procedure that was followed.

I feel qualified to bear witness to these facts, as I was one of the first in the House to call in question the administration's dealings with Mexico and to call attention to what seemed to me the inevitable outcome of the policy being pursued, and my first statement in the House on the subject was on the 28th of February, 1913, almost a year after the administration assumed the reins of government. The outcome has been what I then believed it would be—the breaking down of all strong and responsible authority in Mexico, the spread and continuation of the reign of revolution, rapine, murder, and misery throughout the Republic.

Those who waste their sympathy on the administration and are inclined to condone its faults in the handling of foreign affairs, should recall that the administration's embarrassments in our dealing with Mexico are almost wholly of its own making.

Those who fondly and foolishly imagine that the monotonous repetition of the phrase, "Wilson has kept us out of war," is a complete answer to the country's exasperated protest against the deep dishonor, the fathomless futility of the course pursued, are destined to have a rude awakening. The outrages and humiliations and losses suffered by Americans, the lamentable lowering of American prestige, which cry out for vengeance and demand reparation, are not the necessary or logical effects of the condition of revolution in Mexico, but the inevitable, the logical consequence of the administration's faults and follies. The only reason why we have not had war with Mexico is because the Huerta government had not the strength to attack us at Vera Cruz, nor Carranza sufficient force to follow up the war he inaugurated at Carrizal.

The administration began by ignoring and spurning the advice of our regularly accredited diplomatic and consular agents in Mexico, and based its policies on the biased and prejudiced reports of secret and semiofficial representatives of the President. On such advice it adopted a policy of hostility to the strong government of Huerta and of rank favoritism toward the bandit and revolutionary forces, or dictating who should govern and whom should be candidates for the Presidency of Mexico. The administration intervened by force of arms to prevent the landing of ammunition for the Government in Mexico which protected our citizens, and juggled ammunition embargoes to aid the factions of lawlessness.

ABANDONMENT OF CITIZENS.

The administration continued a policy of alternate bluffing and cajoling, of coquetting and spurning first one and then another bandit chieftain, until it had lost the confidence and respect of every force and faction in Mexico. The administration intervened by force of arms three distinct and separate times: First, in the taking of Vera Cruz; second, in the transportation of Carranza troops over our territory; third, in the late punitive expedition. The first cost us 17 American lives and the lowering of the flag at Vera Cruz—unsaluted. Nineteen Americans paid with their lives at San Ysobel for our second intervention, and no reparation or apology for it to this day. The massacre at Carrizal has passed into history unpunished.

The administration has not at any time boldly announced and resolutely backed up a demand for the protection of American citizens. On the contrary, outrages against American citizens have been overlooked, minimized, ignored, particularly in the pursuit of the President's personal war against Huerta. In order to avoid the possibility of the joining of Huerta and constitutional troops at Tampico several hundred of American men, women, and children were abandoned, by the sailing of American ships from that port on repeated and peremptory orders from Washington, to the mercy of an infuriated Mexican mob, and only saved by the timely intervention of German and English forces. No American who has followed the course of events in Mexico but has blushed with shame and boiled with indignation at the treatment of our citizens there, due to the wicked and indefensible policy of our administration, but for cold-blooded abandonment of citizens in the face of the most frightful danger this incident at Tampico stands out the crowning infamy of the whole miserable record.

WHAT WOULD WE HAVE DONE?

The defenders of the administration's course, when not engaged in cuckooing "he has kept us out of war," unable to defend the record, fall back on the query, "Well, what would you have done?" apparently fondly imagining that this is an unanswerable conundrum. Nothing is simpler. First, and foremost, no American administration following a policy in harmony with our traditions would have interfered in the domestic and internal affairs of Mexico. Such an administration would have adhered to the established usages of international diplomacy laid down and adhered to hitherto by Democratic and Republican administrations alike, would have respected Mexican sovereignty and refrained from attempts to limit their freedom of choice in the government or the leaders they chose or accepted. Such an administration would have given all factions in Mexico to understand that we had no favorites among them, but insisted that wherever each or any of them claimed or exerted authority American lives and American property must be respected and protected at the peril of immediate and condign punishment.

Had we followed these rules of conduct and been unwavering and determined in the attitude I have outlined, the probability is that peace would have long since been restored in Mexico. In any event, American citizens and American property would have been at least reasonably safe throughout Mexico, and, in all human probability, no incident would have occurred that would even have suggested the necessity for general armed intervention.

Ours should have been a policy of firm, dignified neutrality, of respect for Mexican sovereignty, and stern insistence on the protection of American rights. Such a policy would have served the ends of peace and order, would have given us no problems save the minor problems incident to a period of disorder. Yours has been a policy of miserable meddling, of pestiferous fussing, of bandit coddling, of alternate bluff and surrender, of apparent disregard for American lives, American honor, and American prestige in the persistent pursuit of a fatuous and indefensible personal policy. It has bred and produced outrage, lawlessness, murder, spread and continued the reign of rape and rapine, cost us hundreds of American lives, the outrage and humiliation of thousands of American citizens, and the destruction of hundreds of millions of their property. It has cost the Government more than a hundred millions of dollars. It has led to the calling from their usual avocations of 125,000 citizen soldiers to the discomforts of the border. It now confronts us at the end of a lane of horrors with a situation intolerable for all concerned.

UNPREPAREDNESS.

Stung and prodded to action, the administration, which had failed to use appropriations at its command to buy machine guns or to utilize available funds or material in preparation for mobilization or defense, which had delayed, and still delays, the beginning of construction of war craft, great and small, long since authorized by Congress, suddenly became the advocate of great military and naval establishments. From decrying all demand for preparedness as mere nervousness, from seeing no cloud on the horizon, and being "too proud to fight," the President and his advisers suddenly saw sparks all around and declared for continental armies of half a million men and the greatest navy in the world. The administration has been as halting, wavering, and inconsistent in its preparedness policy as in all others; as hysterical, impractical, and unsound in its recent actions as it was slothful, indifferent, and inefficient in proper measures of defense up to within the last few months. After having faced the Mexican situation for three years, with full realization of the possibilities which it presented, and abundant time to make preparation, the calling out of the National Guard, its equipment and mobilization developed a woeful condition of lack of proper distribution of equipment and absence of plan or arrangement for quick and satisfactory transportation. Roused from its slothfulness and inactivity at the last moment, the administration, in response to what it assumed to be a popular demand, sought to outstrip all others in its schemes of military and naval expenditures. In the meantime, however, not a blow has been struck toward the beginning of construction of two dreadnaughts and various minor craft authorized by Congress nearly a year and a half ago. By their fruits ye shall know them.

PROSPERITY.

When all other appeals fall on deaf ears our Democratic friends exclaim, "See the prosperity we have brought." Yes, we see prosperity of a certain kind, and we are mighty thankful for it, for prosperity of any kind is certainly a welcome novelty under a Democratic administration. It surprises no one as much as it does the Democrats themselves. The Democratic Party came into power howling against the high cost of living and charging it to the Republicans. They proposed and promised to reduce the cost of living. But the cost of living has increased steadily, and yet they claim prosperity and credit for it.

The fact is the European war saved the country from black disaster, which was coming on apace when the war opened. It brought enormous orders for munitions and goods and supplies of all kinds, a demand so great it has been difficult to find cars to haul it to the seaboard, ships to carry it over the seas. Because these enormous exports have not all been munitions of war Democratic spellbinders attempt to minimize the effect of the war on business.

For every dollar's worth of shot and shell there must be furnished at least $5 worth of raw material and finished products of apparel, of foodstuffs, of forage and supplies, and this enormous demand has boosted the price of almost every product of the farm, the ranch, the mine, and the factory. These increases in values as they have been converted into cash or credits have added many billions to the wealth of the country. Increasing and unceasing demands from the hellish battle fronts of Europe for munitions have created a demand for labor in munition factories that has sent wages in such employment skyward and temporarily shortened labor supply elsewhere. But everywhere back from the currents and eddies of this war-born trade is a strange and ominous stagnation and depression. It is reflected in the largest number of failures last year of any year in our history. It is startlingly emphasized in the fact that one must go back two generations, almost half a century, to find two years in American history in which we have built so few miles of railway as in the last two years. So long as the war-stimulated flood of gold reaches our shores and the stream of our inexhaustible resources flows ceaselessly in return there is certain to be a kind of prosperity in the land, though in the meantime the cost of living which our Democratic friends promised to reduce mounts higher every day, and the average citizen finds it harder than ever to live decently within his income.

Thank Heaven that all we make and sell is not war munitions; that while we sell the things that wound and maim and torture and kill we do also provide the bandages that bind the wounds and supplies to feed and clothe those on the battle lines and by the stricken firesides. If it were not so, then this so-called prosperity would be a thing of unmitigated horror. War, born as it is, let him gloat over it who will. A party that needs it as a campaign slogan is welcome to it. I prefer a party that plans rather for the prosperity of peace and seeks to put our house in order against that day when war-born trade shall cease and we must readjust our industries to the trying conditions of peace.

BROKEN PLEDGES.

In the final analysis parties, like individuals, must stand or fall on their record and reputation for honesty, steadfastness, and sincerity. To warrant or retain confidence and support their acts must square with their promises and professions. Judged by that standard, which is the unchanging and immutable law, the Democratic Party as now constituted, organized, and officered must fall.

The very candidacy of their leader is an indictment of good faith. President Wilson was nominated in 1912 on a solemn pledge given on his behalf by his party and accepted by him of a single term for the Presidency. On that pledge he and his party sought the support of the American people, and in the repudiation of that pledge in President Wilson's renomination all who are a party to it stand condemned out of their own mouths and on their solemn declarations of repudiation and insincerity in a matter of the highest moment.

The Democratic Party pledged and promised a free canal at Panama for American shipping. They repudiated that pledge at the behest of the President under circumstances that gave grounds for a strong suspicion that the repudiation was part and parcel of a secret understanding which bartered American rights in Panama for a free hand in an indefensible program in Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say there are a number of other gentlemen who desire to speak this afternoon. They expect to run until quite a late hour.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not take over five minutes.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will take less than his 40 minutes and I will take less than my 25 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, with that notice, I shall say that hereafter I will have to object to further extensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The Democratic Party and administration pledged the country a faithful administration of the civil-service law. They have flagrantly and outrageously ignored and violated that pledge in taking hundreds of lucrative positions from civil service and in the exemption from civil service of thousands of new places which have been created.

The Democratic Party and administration solemnly pledged the American people that in the filling of public offices "merit and ability should be the standard rather than services rendered to a political party." They have spurned and repudiated, ignored and trampled upon that declaration by the most unconscionable trafficking in public offices as political rewards known to our history. The highest officials of the administration have been the worst offenders in this prostitution of public office to political ends. The late Secretary of State proffered an embassadorial appointment to pay a political debt, with notice that no serious or important service need be performed. He stands convicted under his own signature as a seeker of public jobs "to reward deserving Democrats," including several members of his own family.

That the Democratic claim of following the rules of civil service in the appointment of fourth-class postmasters is a piece of shameless hypocrisy is notorious in communities in which there have been contests for such offices between Republicans and Democrats. I do not criticize the appointment of Democrats as fourth-class postmasters. I do denounce the hypocrisy which attempts to masquerade a purely political system of appointments as a civil-service system.

The Democratic Party and the administration, while accusing Republicans of criminal extravagance, made no earnest effort at retrenchment, but increased the public expenditures in the first Congress under their administration by more than $112,000,000 above those of the Congress which preceded it. The present Congress has boosted expenditures, exclusive of those properly chargeable to preparedness, $200,000,000 more, or $312,000,000, exclusive of preparedness, more than the Congress they charged with criminal extravagance.

The Democratic Party made its last campaign largely on the issue of alleged control of Congress by the Executive and by certain leaders under caucus control.

It is the unchallenged fact that never before in our history has Congress been so dominated by and so subservient to the will of the Chief Executive as have Congresses under this administration. Never in our history has Congress been so completely under caucus domination, so frequently bound and gagged by special rule, as has the present and the last Congress.

The Democratic Party in its platform of 1912 demanded and promised a reduction of the number of what they were pleased to call "useless offices," the salaries of which, they said, "drain the substance of the people." In the teeth of this declaration they have created many more new offices, with higher salaries, than ever before in the same length of time in our history. They approximate 30,000, with salaries aggregating upward of $40,000,000.

The Democratic Party and administration solemnly pledged itself "to preserve the sacred rights of American citizens abroad," but thousands of American lives have been wickedly and wantonly sacrificed on land and sea; millions of American property has been ruthlessly destroyed. American mails have been held up, American trade blacklisted, and American commerce embargoed and confiscated; American prestige challenged and imperiled everywhere.

Such are the important features of the record, fairly stated. They are particularly illuminating in view of the oft-repeated declarations of candidate Wilson in the campaign of 1912, that they meant business, that their platform pledges were not a spread of molasses to catch flies, but promises to be fulfilled and the declaration of the President's Warwick and premier consigning to perdition he who would break a platform pledge. The entire record is one of solemn pledges and promises brazenly and wantonly broken, repudiated, ignored, and by their own record they stand condemned. No promises or pledges now made are entitled to the slightest credence or consideration in view of the record of broken promises in the recent past, and such, in my opinion, will be the judgment of the American people.

WEIGHED AND FOUND WANTING.

In the days of old Babylonia there was a ruler and an administration which came to power by reason of the faults of its predecessor and under circumstances calculated to enjoin the pursuit of the paths of rectitude and sound discretion. But that ruler and that administration, forgetful of the conditions which gave them their opportunity, unmindful of their obligations and unfaithful to their pledges, followed with stiff-necked persistency after false gods and through the devious paths of error. At the height of their power and pride, in the midst of their fancied security, the moving finger wrote the fatal words that sealed their density. Administrations and rulers brought to the bar of righteous judgment must stand the same test to-day as in that olden time and weighed, measured, and judged by its record, the verdict of the American people on the Democratic Party in the coming campaign can not be otherwise than that of the judgment of Belshazzar, "Thou are weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."

AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for five minutes for the purpose of enabling the Members to greet our former colleague, Mr. Sharp, the present ambassador to France, who has achieved the difficult task of making himself persona grata to opposing belligerent nations at the same time—to the French people by being a truly American ambassador, and to the people of the central powers by his assiduous care for their prisoners in French camps. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for five minutes to greet the American ambassador to France. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The ambassador will please come down in front of the Speaker's stand and shake hands with the Members.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess for five minutes.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

HATCHIE COON HUNTING AND FISHING CLUB.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file the report supplemental to report 1139 on the bill (H. R. 241) to relinquish, release, and quitclaim to the trustees of the Hatchie Coon Hunting and Fishing Club title to cerain lands in Poinsett County, Ark.

The SPEAKER. The supplemental report will be filed and referred to the House Calendar.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13926) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Charleston on the first Tuesday in June and December; at Columbia, on the third Tuesday in January and first Tuesday in November; at Florence, first Tuesday in March; and at Aiken, on the first Tuesday in April and October.

"Terms of the district court of the western district shall be held at Greenville on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; at Rock Hill, the second Tuesday in March and September; at Greenwood, the first Tuesday in February and November; and at Anderson, the fourth Tuesday in May and November.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. AIKEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OLEANNE MARIE ZAHL BRANUM.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes, in order that I may ask permission for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6497) for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the bill (S. 6497) for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum passed the Senate, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, was unanimously reported to the House, and is now on the calendar. It proposes to validate the homestead entry of Mrs. Branum, who made a homestead entry in the wooded country of northern Minnesota, thinking that she had a right to enter the same, having declared her intention to become a citizen of the United States. Unfortunately in her earlier life she was married—for her husband proved worthless and she left him, and subsequently came to this country, bringing her two children. Her declaration of intention to become a citizen was received, and she filed on a homestead and made all of her improvements; but when she came to prove up a short time ago she found, of course, that she was not a citizen and could not become one. The seven-year period within which she has a right to prove up expires in a very short time. It is therefore necessary that this bill receive immediate consideration. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, at whose request it was introduced in the Senate. It is unanimously reported, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entry No. 07718, Duluth (Minn.) series, made November 29, 1909, by Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum for the north half of the southwest quarter, southwest quarter of the southwest quarter section 4, and northwest quarter of the northwest quarter section 9, township 62 north, range 21 west, fourth principal meridian, be, and the same hereby is, validated; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to accept commutation proof in support of said entry and issue patent thereon, provided said proof shows compliance with the requirements of the homestead law with respect to residence, cultivation, and improvements.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the tacit understanding was that no bill should be taken up this afternoon except the bill of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] I know nothing about the bill, but I have no doubt that if presented on Tuesday it will go through.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not be here on Tuesday. I did not know of any understanding like that. I did not enter into it. I never heard of any such understanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. I insist on the objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I trust the gentleman will not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection. It is an unusual situation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I beg to assure the gentleman that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] favors the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that he is not going to recognize anybody this afternoon except for the purpose of making speeches, after this matter is disposed of one way or the other.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I withdraw the request for the present upon the objection of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] objects.

Subsequently,

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. BENNET. To ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to withdraw my objection to Senate bill 6497. I have consulted with gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, and they all think the bill ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLOP). Without objection, the objection made will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, is that bill on the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the Private Calendar.

THE REVENUE AND THE TARIFF.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it appears necessary upon each recurring national campaign to discuss the fundamental fiscal policies of the Nation. Our revenue system is an ever present subject of discussion because it is always necessary to consider ways and means to carry on the Government. Expenditures are required, and these can not be made without first being obtained. How to obtain the required funds to carry on the Government with the least possible injury to the people is our perennial problem.

The Constitution not only gives Congress power to impose customs, but it expressly prohibits the States from exercising that power. It reserves that means of revenue exclusively to the General Government, and it is the only one so expressly reserved. It is undisputed that custom dues were from the first designed to furnish a part of the national revenue. How large that part should be, what proportion of the national revenue should be derived from a tariff is now, as it ever has been, a question of commanding importance.

Thomas Jefferson believed that at least the larger part of our revenues should be derived from custom dues. During his administration 83 per cent of the revenue was obtained from custom dues. In his first message he felicitates the Congress that "there is reasonable ground of confidence that we may now safely dispense with all the internal taxes." Evidently Mr. Jefferson did not hold to the modern Democratic theory that to reduce customs dues to a minimum and increase direct taxes to a maximum was taking "burdens from the backs of the people."

The Republican Party throughout its history has stood for a fiscal policy that derived a large part of the national revenue from custom dues. During its last administration approximately one-half the revenue of the Government was derived from that source.

Illustrative and typical of the Republican system I give a few years in round numbers:

REVENUE, FISCAL YEAR 1909.

Customs	$300,000,000
Internal revenue	246,000,000
Miscellaneous	56,000,000
Total ordinary revenue	602,000,000

1912.

Customs	311,000,000
Internal revenue:
Ordinary	293,000,000
Corportaion tax	29,000,000
Miscellaneous	59,000,000
Total	692,000,000

1913.

Customs	318,000,000
Internal revenue:
Ordinary	309,000,000
Corporation tax	35,000,000
Miscellaneous	61,000,000
Total	723,000,000

The year 1913 was the last year under Republican legislation. The fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, and the Underwood tariff law was enacted October 4, 1913.

THE REPUBLICAN SYSTEM IN OPERATION.

During the 16 years of Republican administration the total ordinary receipts of the Government were $9,677,000,000, or an average of about $49,000,000 a month. The total ordinary disbursements were $9,293,000,000, or an average of about $47,000,000 a month. An average surplus of over $2,000,000 per month was sufficient to pay all the ordinary expenses of the Government and leave a satisfactory surplus. Although bonds were authorized to build the Panama Canal, $240,000,000 of them were not issued, but that amount was taken from the ordinary receipts. When the Government was turned over by the Republican administration to the present Democratic administration there was an available cash balance in the Treasury of $150,000,000.

No unprejudiced person can examine the record and withhold a tribute of praise to the party which so admirably and successfully managed the fiscal affairs of the Government during those years.

Under this system the burdens of government sat lightly upon the people. During those years it was at least approximately true that no one was compelled to contribute to the National Treasury. Articles which were needed and which could not be produced in this country, such as tea and coffee, were admitted free. More than half in value of all imports paid no tariff. On competitive articles the schedules were for the most part representative of the difference in the cost of production abroad and in this country. The heavy burden was placed on luxuries. If anyone preferred to buy imported luxuries he contributed to the National Treasury, but he was not compelled to do so. The internal-revenue dues were arranged upon the same principle. Nearly all of such revenue was derived from taxes on liquor and tobacco. If anyone chose to drink liquor or use tobacco he contributed to the support of the Government, but he was not compelled to do so. On the whole, it was almost a voluntary system under which individuals could determine whether or not they would pay any national taxes. They were not required to do so.

Under the Republican system indirect or voluntary taxes were collected by the General Government, and direct or compulsory taxes left to the States, where they properly belong. The sum of State and municipal taxation in this country exceeds by many times the sum of national taxation. Local taxation for local needs, for schools, for roads, for police and sanitation, is a heavy burden. It is borne, however, without great complaint, for it is self-imposed. The people determine for themselves what schools they need and then tax themselves to pay for them. And so with other local needs.

This local taxation is necessarily direct taxation. The taxpayer usually is required to pay directly into the local treasury all local impositions. It is a heavy burden, and often is borne with great difficulty and at great sacrifice. For that reason the field of direct taxation necessarily used by the States should be invaded as little as possible by the General Government. If the Nation can maintain itself and meet its requirements without adding additional direct and compulsory burdens, it should do so. If it can contrive to compel the foreigner seeking our market to pay for the privilege of using it, the Government should do so. If it can arrange the schedules so that our people shall not be compelled to pay custom dues, unless they determine to use imported luxuries, and thus deliberately choose to impose the burden on themselves, certainly no harm is done. If the General Government can so arrange the internal-revenue system that it shall rest only on the users of liquor and tobacco, no one can complain.

Never at any time in our own history has the revenue system of the Government been so well arranged as it was under the Republican system during its operation in recent years. Never in any other country has a system been devised to harm as little and help as much as the Republican revenue system which I have described.

Owing to a calamitous division in the Republican Party the election of 1912 put the Democrats in power. At once the Republican system of simplicity and symmetry was overthrown and destroyed. Instead we have confusion and disorder in our fiscal policy. We have unheard of extravagance in appropriations and a perpetual deficit and an empty Treasury. We have the States' field of direct taxation invaded in a frantic endeavor to get money to run the Government. We have increased imports with decreased customs. We have war taxes and stamp taxes, income taxes and inheritance taxes, taxes imposed or proposed on almost every enterprise and every object in sight. Such is the spectacle given us by the introduction of the Democratic "tariff-for-revenue-only" system.

PROTECTION V. FREE TRADE.

But the Republican system contemplates a tariff not alone for revenue but for protection as well. There was no difference of opinion on the subject in the early days of the Republic. The first tariff act passed after the Constitution was adopted was designated in its title for protection as well as revenue. Not only were Washington and Hamilton and Adams protectionists, but Jefferson and Madison and Jackson as well.

Mr. Jefferson stood for the domestic manufacturer.

Shall we—

He said—

suppress the import and give that advantage to foreign over domestic manufacturers?

Jefferson was an American. He believed in "America first." He advised his countrymen "to keep pace with me in purchasing nothing foreign." He was for a real independence, commercial as well as political. He said that if we are to be "independent for the comforts of life we must fabricate them ourselves."

The orthodoxy of Madison is pretty well established. The father of the Constitution said:

Until all other nations concur in free trade the interests of the United States will be best protected by further restrictions and high protective duties.

Andrew Jackson was another good Democrat. He said:

Adequate protection should be extended to our farmers, manufacturers, and laborers so that they may be placed in fair competition with Europe.

That is the Republican doctrine now. It is not the creed of modern Democracy. Modern Democracy declares that protection is unconstitutional; that it is a fraud; that it is the robbery of the many for the benefit of the few. It declares for a "tariff for revenue," but arranges the schedules so as to derive just as little revenue as possible. It declares it is not committed to the doctrine of free trade, but in its first tariff act approaches it as nearly as it can.

In the campaign of 1912 the Democratic leaders declared that while they proposed to lower tariff rates they would not injure in so doing "any legitimate American industry." The people believed they would be benefited by a revision, but they did not desire a revolution. Instead of a reasonable reduction tariff rates were cut in two. Under the Payne law they were 18 per cent. Under the Underwood law they were cut to 9 per cent; for some months of this year as low as 8 per cent. Seventy-one per cent of all our imports is now admitted free of any duty whatever.

For the first 10 months under the operation of the Underwood law the imports increased $102,000,000 and the exports decreased $159,000,000. This constituted a loss to American industry of $261,000,000. Although the imports increased $102,000,000 the customs revenues decreased $30,500,000. So that with increased imports there were decreased revenues. This was all before the war in Europe broke out, so it can not be said that such results were occasioned by the war. The effect of the war was to check imports at first. Probably they have been lessened materially because of the war throughout its entire period. Under the operation of the Underwood law increased imports are inevitable. No one can tell to what extent they will be increased when the war shall end. To increase imports was the Democratic purpose. With the best market in the world to attract foreign producers, and the smallest tariff rates of any among the great nations, a veritable flood of foreign goods may be expected when the war shall cease.

Under present conditions the result is the same—increased imports but lessened revenues, as the following tables will show:

Total value of imports year ending June 30, 1916	$2,197,000,000
Total value of imports last Republican year, 1913	1,813,000,000
Increase of imports	384,000,000
Customs revenue, 1913	318,000,000
Customs revenue, 1916	210,000,000
Decrease of revenue	108,000,000

So that with imports increased in the amount of $384,000,000, we nevertheless derived less revenue by $108,000,000 than was received under a Republican tariff.

The Democrats have always complained of the enormous tariff taxes that were wrung from the people by Republican tariffs. Yet never under Republican rule has the per capita amount of tariff dues collected been as high as those collected by Great Britain, the Democratic Party's exemplar and model in revenue legislation. In 1905 Great Britain collected tariff dues amounting to $4.01 per capita of her population. In the same year the tariff duties collected in the United States amounted to $3.11 per capita. In 1916 Great Britain imposed $6.77 per capita; the United States but $2.10 per capita.

It is impossible to believe the American people desired any such radical change in their fiscal policy. Yet the Democratic Party in its last platform announces its loyalty to the system and its approval of the Underwood law.

DEMOCRATIC "SIMPLICITY AND ECONOMY."

During the Taft administration an earnest and successful effort was made to keep down appropriations. The President insisted on the most rigid economy in all the departments of the Government. He recommended a budget system and appointed an efficiency commission. So well did he succeed that the increase in the ordinary expenditures of the Government during the entire four years was very slight, as is shown by the following table:

Disbursements.

Total ordinary disbursements in 1910	$650,000,000
Total ordinary disbursements in 1911	654,000,000
Total ordinary disbursements in 1912	654,000,000
Total ordinary disoursements in 1913	682,000,000

This is a remarkable showing, considering the growth and development of the country during that period.

Yet in the Democratic platform of 1912 this splendid record of economy and efficiency is denounced as follows:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

We have seen how the money collected under the Republican system was "wrung from the people by oppressive taxation." It was collected by a system so arranged that ninety out of every hundred of our population never paid any national taxes, and the others did not realize it when they did contribute. We have seen how "lavish" were the appropriations of "recent Republican Congresses," which in four years' time increased the ordinary disbursements of the Government less than 3½ per cent. We shall now consider how the Democratic Party returned to "that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government."

In 1914, the first year under the Democratic reign of economy, the total appropriations exceeded those of 1913, the last year of Republican "lavish" expenditures, by $100,000,000.

In 1915 the excess was $102,000,000.

In 1916 the excess was $169,000,000.

In 1917 the excess will be, on present estimates, $365,000,000. This estimate does not include the additional expenditures required for increases in the Army and Navy, neither does it include the amount required for our Mexican expenditures. These are estimated at $390,000,000.

Instead of an era of "that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government" we have had a perfect riot of extravagance in every department of the Government.

We will now consider how the Democrats have complied with their promise of a "reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people."

In a speech delivered on the floor of the House May 15, 1916, by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, he said:

I find that in the appropriation bills for 1913, 1914, and 1915, instead of a reduction in the specific positions, as promised in your platform, you have increased the number by 17,428, carrying additional appropriations aggregating $20,442,979.16. But this is not all. In the same appropriation bills you made lump-sum appropriations for the salaries of persons other than those specified amounting to $15,830,401.53. In other words, while your platform stated there were too many persons employed in the Government service, and you proposed to reduce the number and decrease the appropriations, during the first three years you added more than 30,000 to the number of Government employees, and you are now appropriating for the salaries of these new additional positions $36,273,380.69 more every year than was ever appropriated by the Republican administration which you so boldly denounced. These figures are in every case the net increases, and are arrived at by deducting from the grand total of increases all positions that were abolished.

So that instead of decreasing the number of "useless offices" the Democratic administration has increased them in number more than 30,000. In the determination to find places for "deserving Democrats" the administration has falsified its promise and broken the record. Instead of reducing salaries which "drain the substance of the people," it has added $36,000,000 to the expenditures for that purpose.

In fixing the salaries of the numerous commissions it has created the administration has gone the limit in lavish expenditures. It placed the salaries of members of the Federal Reserve Board at $12,000 per annum each, of the Trade Commission at $10,000 each, of the Farm Loan Board at $10,000 each. It is a subject of conjecture at what figure these salaries would have been fixed had not the administration been governed by Democratic "simplicity and economy."

THE INCOME TAX.

With a reduction of $108,000,000 in the amount of revenues derived from customs dues, together with the reckless, unnecessary, and extraordinary increase of national expenditures, it was inevitable that there should be a large increase in direct taxes imposed on the people. This is the system approved by the Democratic Party, and it will be interesting to observe how it works.

In 1909 the Republican Party reduced the tariff rates materially. The free list was enlarged from 47 to 51 per cent. Nine of the fourteen schedules were reduced. Reductions were made on 654 items, increases were made on 220 items, and on 1,150 items the rates were not changed. Two-thirds of the increases were made on luxuries. The general average of tariff rates during the 12 years the Dingley law was in operation was about 25 per cent. The general average for the four years under the Payne law was 19 per cent. The last year under the Dingley law the rate was 22.29 per cent. The last year under the Payne law it was 17.69 per cent.

To meet the loss which it was estimated would follow the reduction of the tariff and to provide for future emergency demands the Republicans levied an income tax on all corporations and submitted an amendment by which an income tax on individuals might be levied.

Democrats are fond of asserting that by the income tax they have for the first time compelled the wealth of the country to bear its share of the burdens of the Government. July 12, 1909, a Republican House, a Republican Senate, and a Republican President submitted an amendment authorizing Congress to levy an income tax on individuals. At the same time the Republicans enacted an income-tax law on corporations, which is still in existence, and which has during the Democratic administration furnished the principal part of their boasted income taxes.

But the Democratic idea of the income tax is not that it is to be used merely as an additional source of revenue, but as a substitute for tariff revenue, as a means to kill the Republican protective tariff system. The Republican Party instituted the income-tax legislation, but not for the purpose of destroying the protective tariff. In order to understand the purpose of the Democratic Party with reference to the income tax it is only necessary to refer to the declarations of its leaders in Congress. The framing of the present income-tax law was committed to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. In a speech denouncing the Republican system he said:

How long will, or can, the country endure this system? Until we can secure the imposition of an income tax and thereby destroy it.

The limit of the application of the tax was placed at $3,000. Unless the individual has at least that much income he is not subject to its imposition. But the income tax is to be increased. That is openly avowed. The increase can be made in two ways: One by increasing the rate, the other by lowering the limit. The first method has already been effected. The rate on ordinary incomes has been increased from 1 to 2 per cent, and on larger incomes in a larger proportion. The other method is also under consideration.

In his message to Congress last December the President recommended, among other methods of increasing the revenue to meet the deficit, lowering the exemption of the income-tax law so that the tax should apply to lesser incomes. The House did not favorably consider the President's recommendation, but the Senate subcommittee recommended an amendment lowering the exemption to $2,000. The Senate refused to act on this recommendation, but Senator UNDERWOOD earnestly advocated the amendment on the floor of the Senate.

There is little doubt that after the election the Democrats will act favorably on the President's recommendation. Just how this will affect the people can be imagined. There is hardly a business man whose gross income does not exceed $2,000. He will have to account for every transaction of the year. He will have to note every sale. He will have to estimate every profit. There is hardly a farmer whose gross income does not exceed $2,000. He will have to account for every horse and steer he sells, for every bushel of grain, for every ton of hay, for every basket of apples. The housewife must account for every chicken and turkey she sells, for every pound of butter and dozen of eggs she trades for groceries. Even if the expenses are such as to avoid the tax, the showing must be made under oath to the collecting agent of the Government, and he must be satisfied with the showing made. This is the price that must be paid for "free trade and direct taxation."

OTHER DIRECT TAXES.

But the income tax is by no means the only direct tax that has been and will be levied. I shall hereafter describe more in detail the effects of the Underwood law. It is sufficient now to say that its effects when put into operation were disastrous in the extreme. Our industries were almost ruined, millions of workingmen were thrown out of employment, and our National Treasury was empty. A universal depression settled upon the land.

The Underwood tariff law was passed October 4, 1913. The European war broke out in August, 1914. The lamentable conditions following the enactment of the Underwood law, which I have described, occurred before the war. Directly following the announcement of the war, within a month after its outbreak, and before its effect could possibly be known, the President came before Congress asking for an emergency tax to raise money to run the Government. This country was not at war, and it was not to prepare for war that the President wanted the money. At that time the President thought the country fully prepared. It was proposed in time of profound peace to levy a war tax on the people to keep the country from bankruptcy caused by Democratic extravagance and incompetence.

The "war" taxes were levied. The law increased slightly the regular internal-revenue rates. It levied special taxes on bankers, brokers, and commission merchants. It taxed theaters, amusement halls, and circuses. It placed a stamp tax on deeds, mortgages, bonds, contracts, agreements, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness. It required a bill of lading for every shipment of stock or merchandise and required that it be stamped. It taxed all telegraph and telephone messages. It taxed all policies of life and fire insurance. It taxed passenger tickets on vessels. It taxed parlor and sleeping car tickets on railways. It taxed tooth powder, perfumery, essences, extracts, and chewing gum.

Still there was not enough. Again the next year the President came before Congress demanding more taxes. As we have seen, he recommended lowering the exemption on the income tax so as to reach the smaller incomes. He also recommended that a tax be levied on the following articles:

President's proposed new taxes.

Gasoline	$10,000,000
Automobiles and engines	15,000,000
Bank checks	18,000,000
Pig iron	10,000,000
Fabricated iron and steel	10,000,000

The President's proposed taxes, in his opinion, would produce about $100,000,000. He thought such taxes would hurt nobody. "What is clear," he said, "is that the industry of this generation should pay the bills of this generation." There is no doubt that such taxes as he proposes would be levied on the "industry" of the people. They would not be levied on the foreigner for the privilege of selling in our markets. They would not be levied on luxuries the people could do without. They would be levied directly on the necessities of the people.

It is interesting to note that although the President declares we must pay as we go, the administration announces that bonds will be issued to the amount of over $200,000,000.

The President's plan for raising money has been postponed at least until after the election, when another levy will have to be made. A bill to raise new taxes to the amount of $234,000,000 has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate. It levies the following additional taxes:

NEW "WAR" TAXES.

Doubling and otherwise raising income tax	$107,000,000
Inheritance tax	54,000,000
Tax on manufacturers of munitions of war	71,000,000
Miscellaneous	2,000,000
Total	234,000,000

It should be observed that while the income tax is at first arranged to tax only the larger incomes, the President proposes to lower the limitation, so as to tax the smaller incomes as well.

Also, that whereas the first "war" tax included many luxuries, the President's second "war" tax proposal included items every one of which is a necessity. This is directly in accord with the President's declaration that the expenditures of the Government should be borne by the "industries" of the people. What will be the extent to which this policy may be carried under the constant demand for more money to pay extravagant appropriations no man can say.

Such is the Democratic scheme of revenue. Such is the substitute for the Republican policy which has been forced on the country with such disastrous results. It can not be that it has or will receive the approval of the people.

EFFECTS OF THE UNDERWOOD TARIFF LAW.

We have already noted how during the first 10 months, or from its enactment until the commencement of the European war, under the operation of the Underwood tariff law, the imports had increased and the exports had decreased; that notwithstanding such increase of imports there had been a decrease of over $30,000,000 in customs revenue; that notwithstanding an increase of imports for the year 1916 over the year 1913 of over $384,000,000 there had been a decrease of customs revenue of over $108,000,000. That is but a small portion of the record of disaster.

The next day after the Underwood tariff law was passed, Mr. UNDERWOOD said it would do four things:

1. It would reduce the cost of living.
2. It would not disturb the business of the country.
3. It would increase our foreign trade.
4. It would collect revenue sufficient to run the Government.

It seems almost cruel to discuss now whether these promises have been fulfilled. Yet for those who were induced to believe them it will be worth while at least to show to what extent they were deceived.

FARM PRODUCTS AND COST OF LIVING.

The Underwood tariff took most of the farmers' products from the dutiable list and placed them on the free list. On the 22 leading agricultural products of the Northwest 17 were placed on the free list and the remainder were reduced 60 per cent. It transferred from the dutiable list and put on the free list cattle, sheep, wool, beef, mutton, corn, eggs, milk, and cream. It put wheat and potatoes on the free list conditionally. It reduced by about 60 per cent the tariff rates on horses, poultry, oats, hay, cheese, and butter.

The result of these reductions was to greatly increase the importations of farm products. The increase for the fiscal year 1914, nine months of which was under the Underwood law, over the year 1912 was $140,000,000. Secretary Redfield boasted that the tariff act had increased foreign importations in three months of cattle, from 112,000 head to 341,000 head; corn, from 253,000 bushels to 4,450,000 bushels; potatoes, from 41,000 bushels to 2,880,000 bushels; meat, from 865,000 pounds to 35,500,000 pounds.

The effect of these importations broke the farmers' market all over the country. The price of wheat in American markets declined about 15 cents per bushel. The price of corn declined about 10 cents per bushel. Cattle and sheep both declined in price.

This was all according to the Democratic program. The tariff duties on farm products were to be removed in order to bring foreign farm products into our market to force the price down. The foreign products did come and the price to the farmers was forced down. But the difficulty was that the prices of food products to the consumer were not reduced.

The only beneficiaries of the reductions were the foreigners who shipped the products and the importers, the trusts, and the market manipulators who received them. The Corn Products Refining Co. and the National Starch Co., two Standard Oil corporations, managed to take most of the corn imported along the Atlantic seaboard; but the market manipulators, who wanted to buy the American corn crop as cheaply as possible, used the importations offered at a lower price to force down the price of corn all over the country. They did not sell any more cheaply to the consumer, but their margin of profit was greater. The Beef Trust controlled the importations of cattle and meat, so that the prices of live stock to the farmer declined while the prices of meats to the consumer steadily advanced. The high cost of living continued and has increased ever since.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I understand the gentleman does not believe this free-trade policy has been of any benefit to the farmers.

Mr. TOWNER. I certainly do not. I wish I had time to go into it more fully.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman is making a most effective speech and I do not want to interrupt him, but I desired to emphasize that fact.

Mr. TOWNER. I thank the gentleman, and I regret I cannot discuss the matter fully.

Mr. NEELY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. NEELY. Will the gentleman state to what extent it has injured the farmer by virtue of his wool having been put on the free list by the Underwood law?

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to discuss the wool question with my friend from West Virginia if I had time.

Of course the gentleman knows that since the European war began the demand for woolen goods for export has greatly increased. We exported ten times as much woolen products last year as we did in the year before the war. Not only has the demand increased for export, but our importations of wool are now practically shut off. In the year before the war we imported over 300,000 pounds of wool. I do not know what our importations were last year, but they were not large. As the gentleman knows, Great Britain ordered an embargo on wool from Australia, New Zealand, and Canada, the countries from which we derived our principal importations of wool, and since then sheep and wool have been very high.

Mr. NEELY. Will the gentleman pardon me? Is it not a fact that before the European war began our farmers' wool was worth more in the markets of this country than it has been at any time under preceding Republican administrations?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think so.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman, if he will yield to me, that that is not true.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, the gentleman from West Virginia is mistaken. It is true, however, that sheep and wool were high. Our farmers had so reduced their flocks that this could not help but be true. The destruction of the western ranges and the fact that even with a Republican tariff Australia and New Zealand, with their free ranges and cheap labor, were able to contend on favorable terms with our farmers, had driven our own people out of the business of sheep raising to a great extent. Before the war we consumed about 600,000 pounds of wool yearly. We produced about 300,000 pounds, and we imported 300,000 pounds. Australia and New Zealand produced about 800,000 pounds. They consumed but 100,000 pounds and exported 700,000 pounds. They ought not to be allowed to enter this country on terms that will drive our farmers from their own market. Wool is one of the necessities of life. The sheep industry can not be created in a day. We should not allow this country to become dependent for this absolute necessity on a foreign supply. As a measure of preparedness we ought to make our tariff rates high enough to develop the sheep industry to at least the extent of making it self-supporting and independent.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman answer whether it is a historic fact that for all these years, as long as we have had any statistics, that in cotton, wheat, and a major portion of the farmers' crops he has always had to meet the foreign price, the export price, that was put on the bulletin boards in London and other foreign markets and set the price here? Is not that especially true of wheat and cotton, no matter what tariff laws you have? Is not that a fact?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to my friend from Texas that that statement is more nearly true of cotton than anything else. Three-fourths of that crop is exported, and the foreign demand is more nearly controlling. But with other farmers' products it is not true that the foreign market sets the price. On these the domestic consumption is large, our exports small, and the price is most largely determined by our domestic supply and demand.

But the influence of the foreign market price on our price should not leave our market open to the world. We can not afford to drive our farmers from stock raising and grain raising because a foreign price is lower than they can profitably produce those products. Under the threat of free trade the sheep raisers of Texas have sent their flocks to Kansas City and sold them at $2 a head. Nobody was benefited by that. Nobody got cheaper clothing or cheaper meat. The traders, the market manipulators, and the packers are the only persons who profit by such transactions.

We need to build up and encourage by every means in our power food production in this country. Our meat supplies are dangerously low now. Excessive war demands are decimating our flocks and herds. We must not allow ourselves to become dependent on foreign supplies. There never was a time in our history when we needed to increase our flocks and herds so much as now. There never was a time when we needed to build up every essential product of the country so much as now. That is true Americanism.

When we leave the farmers' products on the free list, open to the competition of every country with cheap lands and cheap labor, we drive our farmers from their lands and make the country dependent on foreign supplies. To-day if war should come with a nation or combination of nations that could drive our Navy from the seas as Germany's has been driven in the European war, we could not produce wool enough to clothe our own people, we could not supply them with sugar or many other necessities of life. This condition ought not longer to exist.

But I must now take up another failure of the Underwood tariff to fulfill the promises made in its behalf.

EFFECT OF UNDERWOOD TARIFF ON BUSINESS.

The second promise made on behalf of the Underwood tariff law was that it would not disturb the business of the country.

It is within the memory of many how the threat of free trade and the enactment of a Democratic tariff law in Cleveland's administration paralyzed business and brought disaster to the country. A like condition followed the enactment of the Underwood law during the 10 months preceding the commencement of the European war. Factories closed, the mills were idle. Thousands of workmen were daily dismissed from their employment.

The Iron Age, a trade journal, said that within three months after the enactment of the law one-third of the iron and steel mills closed. In this industry alone 1,000,000 men were thrown out of employment and over $2,000,000 per day lost in wages. Never did the revival come until the shrapnel orders commenced coming from the belligerents in Europe.

The steel production fell to 40 per cent of capacity. In the woolen industry one-third of the looms were idle. April 1, 1914, there were 228,000 idle freight cars on the sidetracks; 242,000 railroad men were laid off.

Mr. Wilson said that these acts of the manufacturers and railroads in shutting down and dismissing their men was a conspiracy against the administration. His Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, declared that he would put detectives after them and bring them to the bar of public opinion for condign punishment. But the mills kept on closing, first by units, then by scores, then by hundreds, and finally by thousands. There were so many of them Mr. Redfield did not have detectives enough to go around.

The President told visiting deputations that the tariff was all right, that the depression was merely "psychological," and that the want and suffering was merely a "state of mind." In June, 1914, the President assured the Virginia Press Association that there were symptoms of a revival of business. On the same day the press announced that as a result of investigations it was shown that there were 3,000,000 wage earners in the United States unemployed and looking for work. There were more failures during the year following the Underwood law than during any other year since Cleveland's administration. Charitable institutions were taxed to the utmost. Cities issued bonds for public improvements in order to afford work for idle laboring men.

Then, like a bolt from the blue sky, came the European war. Within a month half the world was at arms. Twenty million men were taken from the producing classes of Europe and became consumers. One-third of the world's commerce was directed to war purposes. Twelve nations began to make frantic endeavors to obtain arms and ammunition anywhere they could be obtained. Soon their orders began coming to the United States. They wanted everything—war materials at any price, foodstuffs and clothing, supplies of all kinds.

The effect on American industry was magical. Everybody got busy. The iron and steel mills, the Baldwin Locomotive Works, automobile factories, cream-separator manufacturers, agricultural implement producers—all went to making arms and munitions of war. Nor was that all. The demand for grain emptied the elevators. Flour and meat and all food products responded to the unprecedented demand. The manufacturers of clothing, boots and shoes, and all kinds of supplies were put to work. The railroads could not get enough cars to carry these products to the seaboard. There were not enough ships to carry them to their destinations.

Then the golden stream to Europe turned backward. Six hundred millions of gold came across the seas to pay for part of their purchases. We loaned them over $500,000,000 more to pay ourselves. Our total exports leaped from $2,364,000,000 in 1914 to $4,333,000,000 in 1916.

Mr. Wilson, in his History of the American People, in felicitous phrase and in graphic fashion, describes the depression which occurred while another Democratic tariff was in operation during Cleveland's adminstration. He said:

> There was real distress in the country, long-continued, hopeless, as if the springs of wealth and prosperity had dried up. There was a marked depression in all kinds of business, as if enterprise were out of heart and money nowhere to be had except among a few great capitalists in Wall Street.

And in closing his description he adds these significant words:

> Not until the very year, 1897, when the new Republican administration came in did the crisis seem to be past.

In our day a like depression from a like cause settled on the land. Instead of McKinley bringing joy and plenty, it was the mightiest calamity, the saddest and most awful tragedy in all human history that brought prosperity to our land. The poignant pathos of the remembrance brings sadness rather than exultation as we recall it. But it will not be without some compensation if we shall not forget the cause.

AFTER THE WAR.

But what will be our condition when the European war ends, when these unprecedented war orders no longer shall come, when the golden stream of payments for purchases shall cease?

In the first place, it is reasonable to expect that the country will revert to conditions as they existed before the war and until they were changed by the war. Foreign conditions caused the change, and when that influence ceases the country will return to its former status. That means that unless the Democratic system of revenue is abandoned and the Underwood tariff law repealed the same disastrous conditions, magnified and intensified, will return.

The war on American industries following the Napoleonic wars made by European nations, and especially by Great Britain, is a matter of history. Lord Brougham, the English premier, in a speech in Parliament, described how English manufacturers sent over their goods and sold them below cost to drive the American manufacturers out of business. Henry Clay in one of his greatest speeches tells of the effect in America; of the ruined industries, of the failures and bankruptcies, of the workingmen begging for bread and seeking in vain for employment. Mr. Wilson, in his History of the American People, still better describes conditions. He says:

Peace changed the face of trade. English merchants poured their goods once again into the American ports. * * * It was manifestly injurious to every young industry that a flood of English imports should continue to pour into the country at the open ports. The remedy was a protective tariff, such as Mr. Hamilton had wished to see at first, and the young Republican leaders of Congress did not hesitate to advocate and establish it.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that at the close of the present war peace will again change "the face of trade"? May we not again expect that not only English, but German, French, and all other European merchants will pour "their goods once again into American ports"? Will it not be true now as it was then that it will be "manifestly injurious" that a flood of imports should pour into the country at the open ports? Is it not evident that our only sure remedy for conditions that will exist at the close of this war will be what Mr. Wilson said was the remedy a century ago, namely, "a protective tariff such as Mr. Hamilton had wished to see at first"? Mr. Wilson says, "the young Republican leaders of Congress did not hesitate to advocate and establish" such a protective tariff. It is to be hoped that not only Republican leaders but the whole body of the people able to understand our condition and our danger will demand before the war shall end a protective tariff, and insist that it shall be established before the flood shall devastate our country and destroy our industries. If the Democratic Party could break from its slavery to a discarded dogma and rise to a real patriotic Americanism it would cease to follow the leadership of Wilson the politician and would enter and pursue the course approved by Wilson the historian.

EFFECT ON OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

The Democrats promised that the Underwood tariff law would increase our foreign trade. It would be of no advantage to our people to increase our foreign trade merely by increasing imports. If our imports can be kept within bounds and our exports continually increase that would establish a condition of prosperous foreign trade. When a nation sells more than it buys it is prospering so far as foreign commercial transactions are concerned. When a nation buys more than it sells it can not boast of its foreign trade. Every dollar's worth of foreign goods, such as can be produced in this country, which is imported drives out a dollar's worth of American products.

The average annual balance of trade in our favor during 16 years of Republican tariffs averaged over $500,000,000. The last year, 1913, it was $652,000,000. During the last four years under the Payne law our imports increased but $256,000,000, while our exports increased $720,000,000. The first year of the Underwood law, as compared with the last year under the Payne law, shows a decrease of our exports of $101,000,000 and an increase of our imports of $80,000,000. This is a disadvantageous change in our foreign trade to the amount of $181,000,000. Our favorable balance of trade was decreased to that amount.

In October, 1913, when the Underwood law was passed, the balance of trade in our favor for that month was $138,000,000.

In November it was	$97,000,000
In December	48,000,000
In January, 1914	49,000,000
In February	25,000,000
In March	4,000,000

In April the balance of trade was against us to the amount of $11,000,000.

In May it was	$2,000,000
In June	653,000
In July	6,000,000
In August	19,000,000

In that month the European war broke out, and under the impetus of war orders our export trade has increased tremendously. The last year our exports amounted to the unprecedented sum of $4,333,000,000, almost twice as large as the amount exported in any previous year in our history. It is evident that since the war our foreign trade has been but little influenced by tariff laws. The increase of our exports has been abnormal, and the increase will certainly cease when the cause of the abnormal increase ceases.

The steady decrease of our favorable balance of trade under the Underwood law down to the very month of the opening of the European war tells an eloquent and illuminating story of the effect of a Democratic tariff on the foreign trade of the Nation. The descent from a favorable balance of $138,000,000 to a deficit of $19,000,000 at the close of 10 months under a Democratic tariff shows what we may expect if the law remains after the war closes. Instead of a yearly balance of trade in our favor of over $500,000,000 we shall have the balance against us to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

NOT SUFFICIENT TO RUN THE GOVERNMENT.

The fourth and last promise made for the Underwood tariff law, that it would collect revenue sufficient to run the Government, I have already discussed. It is not only a failure in that regard, but its failure is so conspicuous as to induce the inquiry whether it was ever intended to be a revenue-producing tariff. Instead of tariff for revenue only it is a tariff not even for revenue.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND PROTECTION.

As early as 1832, in almost his first political pronouncement, Abraham Lincoln declared that he favored "a high-protective tariff."

In the campaign of 1860, in his great speech at Pittsburgh, he said that the Chicago Republican platform would be the "law to the incoming administration."

The platform declared:

That while providing revenue for the support of the General Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interest of the whole country; and we commend that policy of national exchanges which secures to workingmen liberal wages, to agriculture remunerative prices, to mechanics and manufacturers adequate reward for their skill, labor, and enterprise, and to the Nation commercial prosperity and independence.

Abraham Lincoln declared for a tariff which would encourage "the development of the industrial interest of the whole country." The Democratic Party declares such a policy wrong and "unconstitutional."

Abraham Lincoln believed in a policy which "secures to workingmen liberal wages." The Democratic Party believes our workingmen should compete on equal terms with countries whose standards of living are low, where working-days are 12 and 14 hours, where women and children are allowed to do men's work, and where wages are but a fraction of what are paid here.

Abraham Lincoln advocated a tariff system that would insure "to agriculture remunerative prices." The Democratic Party advocates a system which deprives the American farmer of every vestige of protection, which places practically all his products on the free list, and compels him to compete in his own markets with Argentina and Australia and every other country in the world where land is free and labor cheap.

Abraham Lincoln stood for a system that would bring to American manufacturers "adequate reward" for their enterprise. The Democratic Party proclaims the manufacturer a robber; it declares that he ought not to prosper; and if he can not compete on equal terms with the manufacturers of Japan, who pay their workers less than 30 cents a day, he ought to fail. It demands that he shall meet that kind of competition by "sharpening his wits." The Democratic Party believes that in some mysterious manner manufacturers can be induced to invest capital that will yield no profit, and that the mills can be kept running and the working people employed at a loss to the employer. Abraham Lincoln believed that the employer and employee must stand or fall together; that it is impossible to devise a defensible, practical system that will profit the one and not the other; that while it hurts the employer to close his mills, it injures infinitely more the thousands of employees who depend on their daily wage for their daily bread.

Abraham Lincoln believed that protection would bring "the Nation commercial prosperity and independence." The Democratic Party believes in depending on the foreigner for even the necessities of life, if there is even a prospect of buying them cheaper, forgetting that when foreign competition has destroyed the home industry the American consumer must pay any price the foreigner demands. Abraham Lincoln believed in independence, both political and economical. He believed that every important article, and especially every article of necessity which can be produced in this country, should be encouraged and protected to secure prosperity in peace and security in war.

The Democratic Party declares for "preparedness," and yet professes and practices a policy which destroys American industries whose products are among the necessities of life, forgetting that unless the United States can control the seas against any hostile nation or combination of nations a war would leave this Nation helpless to its foes.

Conditions are different now from Lincoln's day; but the necessity for protecting American industries is even greater now than it was then. Foreign competition is stronger. It is supported by every influence and power of their Governments. Subsidies, special privileges, authorized combinations, and every possible aid is given to their producers to extend their foreign trade. The present war can not last much longer, and there will follow a trade war the like of which, for vigor and intensity, the world has never seen before. Every other great nation in the world—even those now at war—is preparing for this trade war by building up its industries and strengthening its defenses.

For this coming conflict we are doubly weak. Our market is the richest and most attractive in the world. Its conquest will be the great prize for which the nations will struggle. Our industries cost more to establish than in other lands. Our Government helps less than others. Our workingmen are paid more wages. Our standards of living are higher. Our laws prevent long hours, prevent the unregulated labor of women and children, require of employers safety devices. Our laws make it impossible in this country to wring from labor the uttermost exertion that is wrung from it in other countries. We have legislated, as Lincoln advised, for the man and not for the dollar.

And yet these things—commendable, admirable, necessary, from our standpoint—put us at a disadvantage in this coming trade war. To leave our country unprotected against nations which are not thus handicapped will be to surrender to them in advance. It will bring ruin to our industries, make mendicants of our workingmen, and bring disaster such as we have never before experienced upon the land.

Will it not be better—nay, is it not our immediate and imperative duty—to make our defenses adequate and our safety certain? Should we not give emphatic and unqualified condemnation to those theories that ever bring disaster to our people and return to the policy and practice of Lincoln, who stood for the protection of American interests at all times and at whatever cost? The answer will be given, I am confident in believing, by the election next November of a Republican Senate and a Republican House and of Charles Evans Hughes to the Presidency of the United States.

WHAT DEMOCRACY HAS DONE.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, through the gracious favor of Almighty God, and the superior statesmanship of the Democratic Party our country is at peace with all the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Three and a half years of this administration have passed away, and to-day every dinner pail in the United States is full and running over; beneath the Stars and Stripes there is not one idle man. Many periods of prosperity have been recorded in history, but no prosperity of the past has ever approached the prosperity of the present. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This Democratic prosperity is not local; it is nation-wide; it is not confined to one industry or to one occupation; it extends to every honest enterprise and to every field of legitimate endeavor. Prosperity, all pervading and irresistible, is to be seen in the flame of the furnace and the fire of the forge; in the field of the farmer and the output of the manufacturer; in the smoke of industry that dims the sun by day and hides the stars by night. It is heard in the ring of the anvil and the rumble of the locomotive; in the whir of the spindle and the click of the shuttle; in the sound of the hammer and the hum of the saw. It has housed the homeless; employed the idle; enriched the wealthy; fed the hungry, and clothed the poor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] From the wheat fields of the North to the cotton fields of the South; from the lumber camps of Washington to the orange groves of Florida; from the great financial empire of the opulent East to the great agricultural kingdom of the golden West, Democratic prosperity with lavish hands is bestowing its blessings and its bounties upon every man and woman and child. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is so great and so general as to satisfy the desire of cupidity and surpass the dream of avarice. In this marvelous era of matchless prosperity there is but one man who is without lucrative employment now, and who will be without the shadow of an occupation after the seventh day of November, and that is the man who is running for an office on the stand-pat Republican ticket. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Under present conditions and existing circumstances do the people want a change? Will they surrender the overflowing bowl of Democratic prosperity for the empty cup of Republican campaign promises? Will they assassinate their own well-being in order to give offices to Republican politicians? The sound sense and the self-preserving sagacity of the American people will answer that when conditions are ideal, and when every man is prosperous, happy, and content, it is the part of wisdom to let well enough alone.

Let it be understood in the beginning that while contrasting Democratic action with Republican inaction; Democratic deeds with Republican defaults, and while criticizing Republicans for what they have done and failed to do, our criticism is aimed at Republican officeholders and politicians who, under trust ownership and corporate control, have repudiated the principles upon which their party was founded and despised its statesmanship of former days. We have no syllable of censure, but, on the contrary, words of praise for the rank and file of the Republican Party, who are always patriotic, sincere, and just. And, since the masses of Republicans are without leadership that represents their aspirations and ideals, they are cordially invited to join the militant progressive and united Democracy that is making this the greatest nation beneath the stars. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

THE TARIFF.

Our first undertaking was to repeal the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which had been enacted feloniously and with malice aforethought by our Republican predecessors, in order to enable the protected interests to plunder the consuming poor. This burdensome and iniquitous law exacted an average tribute of $23 per year from every person in the United States. Of the $23 tariff collected from each individual, $3.20 reached the Federal Treasury as revenue, while the remainder of $19.80 reached the treasury of the plutocratic pets of the Republican Party as a reward for generous campaign contributions with which the party of high protection had kept itself in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We repealed the Payne law. We enacted the Underwood law, which makes a reduction in former tariff rates of almost 30 per cent, and Democracy's reduction means an annual saving of more than $30 to every average family in the land. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This very year, under the income tax provision of the Democratic tariff law, we are raising $120,000,000 of the revenue needed to defray the expenses of the Government by direct taxation of corporations, and persons whose net annual incomes are more than $3,000. Under the Payne Act, and under every other Republican act, this stupendous sum would have been obtained by taxing the food of the lowly and the clothing of the poor. If the masses of the people approve of the income tax law, that annually saves them the payment of $120,000,000 in taxes, let them vote the Democratic ticket, for since the Republican Party always opposed the passage of an income tax law it can not be trusted to perpetuate the law that is now in force.

In order to free business entirely from the menace of future tariff tinkering, and in order to transfer the tariff question from a political to a scientific basis, this House has passed, and the Senate soon will pass, the Rainey tariff commission bill, which is an expression of the wisdom of a large majority of the American people.

The passage of the Underwood tariff law was a great accomplishment in the interest of all the consumers of the country, but the Wilson administration has done that which is infinitely greater than the enactment of a just and beneficent tariff law; it has secured the people in the enjoyment of prosperity and peace; it has kept this country out of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

CURRENCY.

In strict obedience to the scriptural injunction to "be not weary in well-doing," the administration proceeded from the enactment of a tariff law to a reformation of the currency law. Never was reformation more needed; never was it more thorough and complete.

The old currency law, which the Republican Party, through more than 40 years of power, made no effective efforts to improve, was a financial straight-jacket that permitted neither expansion when needed nor contraction when desired. Under it the business of this country helplessly and hopelessly struggled in vain for liberty and freedom for almost 50 years. This administration has substituted the new Federal reserve act for the old Republican reserve act; it has moved the Federal Treasury from Wall Street to Washington; it has taken the control of the Nation's finances out of the hands of the money changers and put it in the hands of the people themselves.

Under the old system the reserve money of the Nation was kept in New York City, where it was ruthlessly gambled away on the stock exchange, while the legitimate business of the farmer and the merchant and the manufacturer and the laborer suffered for want of funds with which to finance the legitimate and productive affairs of the Nation.

Under the old law 12 men, through a system of interlocking directorates, absolutely controlled the country's supply of money. These 12 men held in their hands the power of financial life and death to every business in the land. If they smiled on the crossroads grocery store, its success was assured; if they frowned on the most stupendous enterprise it perished in an hour.

Thanks to this administration, this dangerous power, so often perverted, so often abused, has been taken from the 12 men who formerly wielded it and put into the hands of the hundred million people who own this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We now speak of the new Federal reserve act, not in the unknown terms of prophecy, but in the exact terms of history.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I am very much interested in what my friend is saying, but I would like to ask him a question. Although there might have been some imperfections in the Republican currency law, is it not a fact that from the time the Republican party gave the currency law to the country up to the time it went out of power the wealth of the country increased from $16,000,000,000 in 1861 to $187,000,000,000 in 1913?

Mr. NEELY. I believe that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] has correctly stated the figures, which simply show that the American people were great enough to make progress even in spite of the pernicious old currency law which we have repealed. I will further say that the former currency system, the evil effects of which the gentleman seeks to palliate, was responsible for every financial panic that has afflicted this country since the Republican Party was born. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Our financial condition under the new currency system is fully disclosed in a recent report of the Comptroller of the Currency, based on returns of national banks, as of March 7, 1916. Among many other interesting things, the report shows the following amazing state of affairs:

Total resources of national banks are more than $13,800,000,000—an increase of more than two and a half billion dollars in 12 months. Total deposits in national banks are $10,790,000,000—an increase of $2,198,000,000, or nearly 25 per cent in one year. The aggregate of surplus and undivided profits show an increase of $18,000,000 during a period of 12 months. There was an increase in circulation of $3.67 for every man, woman, and child in the Nation during the past year. The increase alone in deposits in national banks during the past 12 months exceeds the total deposits in 1896. After loaning more than half a billion dollars to European countries, our reserves on March 7, 1916, were 3100,000,000 greater than on any previous March 7 in our history.

The aggregate resources of our national banks to-day, under a Democratic administration and under Democratic law, exceed by $3,000,000,000 the combined resources of the Bank of England, the Bank of France, the Bank of Russia, the Reichsbank of Germany, the Bank of the Netherlands, the Swiss National Bank, and the Bank of Japan.

The foregoing facts and figures are so startling that the mind can not readily comprehend them; but they present to the thinking man an unanswerable argument in favor of continuing in power the party that has made possible the unparalleled prosperity of which they speak in conclusive terms.

The enactment of the Democratic Federal reserve law is the greatest legislative achievement of any age or of any country, but this administration achieved something greater and better still—it kept this country out of war.

ANTITRUST LAWS.

The Baltimore platform pledged the Democratic Party to the enactment of such antitrust legislation as would make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist. We have redeemed that pledge by passing the Federal Trade Commission law and the Clayton antitrust law. These measures taken together provide ways and means of compelling big business to deal fairly with its weaker competitors as well as with the public at large; they protect the people against the lawless and disastrous tyranny of the trusts; they furnish business a map by which to travel, a chart by which to sail; they protect competition that is lawful and destroy competition that is unlawful; they close the labyrinths in which big criminals formerly found refuge and open the door of equal opportunity to every lawful enterprise, whether it be great or small.

MERCHANT MARINE.

We have passed the ship-purchase bill, authorizing the Government to acquire and operate a merchant marine. As a result of the European war many of the foreign-owned vessels formerly engaged in carrying our commerce have been destroyed or driven from the seas. In consequence of the resulting scarcity of transportation facilities ocean freight rates have soared, while to our irreparable loss, we have been unable to send our commodities to foreign markets. With this law in operation we shall cease to depend upon other nations for ocean transportation. By virtue of this measure the products of the American farm, factory, and mine will be carried at reasonable rates to the markets of the world in American vessels manned by American seamen and flying the American flag.

POPULAR ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

As early as the year 1900 the Democratic Party went on record in favor of electing United States Senators by direct vote of the people. Eight years later, in its national convention assembled, the Republican Party rejected a resolution in favor of this reform by a vote of more than six to one. Through the persistent efforts of Democracy, the Constitution has, at last, been amended so that the people now elect their Senators at the polls. The Senate was formerly a reactionary body, it is now a progressive body; it formerly legislated for a few, it now legislates for all; it formerly represented the wealthy, it now represents both the rich and the poor. As a result of this capital Democratic reform, the people can at last take complete control of their own Government and make it just what they want it to be.

FARMERS.

Under this administration the farmers have been "clothed in purple and fine linen"; they have "fared sumptuously every day." The Democratic Party has bestowed upon farmers a bountiful share of legislative favors; for their particular benefit it has passed many salutary laws. [Applause on Democratic side.]

We have established a system of farm agents whose duty it is to develop agriculture and improve its methods. This system is now in successful operation in 48 States, and under it most valuable assistance is being given to those who till the soil.

We have established a Division of Markets in the Department of Agriculture by virtue of which machinery is at work organizing the distributing agencies through which 100,000,000 people obtain their food.

We have enacted a law providing for the establishment of a Government-owned plant to manufacture nitrate to be used in making gunpowder for military purposes. Nitrate is one of the most valuable fertilizers known, and the surplus product of this plant is to be sold directly to the farmers to be used in reclaiming their impoverished soil.

We have enacted the Shackleford good-roads law, authorizing the expenditure of $75,000,000 in cooperation with the various States in building permanent highways throughout the rural sections of the United States. The enactment of this law marks the beginning of a policy that will be abandoned only when every road in the country has been made a good road, serviceable to the farmer every day in the year.

We have appropriated $360,000 for the eradication of hog cholera, a disease that in the year 1913 caused the death of 6,000,000 hogs and a loss to the farmers of the country of $65,000,000.

We have enacted the Lever agricultural extension law, which brings the agricultural college, the experiment station, and the Federal Department of Agriculture to the very door of every farmer in the land. By virtue of this act the farmers' wives and daughters are enabled to learn domestic science and home economics around their own firesides.

For the special benefit of the farmer and the accommodation of the public at large this administration has developed the Parcel Post System into one of the most useful and efficient instrumentalities of the Government. In 1913 the Post Office Department increased the weight limit of packages from 11 to 20 pounds and reduced the rates. On January 1, 1914, the weight limit was increased to 50 pounds and the rates were again reduced. Thus the farmer is enabled to ship at low rates packages weighing not more than 50 pounds from his local post office to almost any other place in the civilized world.

Under the terms of the Federal reserve act we have authorized national banks to lend money on the security of farm land and to rediscount farmers' notes that are secured by staple agricultural products. By virtue of this act the sum of $500,000,000 has been made available for the use of those engaged in agriculture.

For the protection of the farmer we have enacted a law preventing the injurious practice of gambling in products of the farm.

For the exclusive benefit of the farmer we have passed the Federal farm loan or rural-credit law, the object of which is to promote agricultural prosperity by enabling farmers to borrow money on farm-mortgage security at a low rate of interest and for a long period of time. This law provides two farm-mortgage systems, one operating through regional land banks and the other through joint-stock land banks. Both systems are under the supervision of a Federal farm-loan board, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and four members appointed by the President.

Under this law those who own and cultivate, or are about to own and cultivate, farm lands are enabled to borrow money with which to purchase land, equipment, fertilizers, and live stock, and with which to provide buildings and improvements, and for the liquidation of the indebtedness of the owner of the mortgaged land. Loans may be made for not less than $100 and for not more than $10,000, and shall run not less than 5 and not more than 40 years. Under no circumstances will the borrower ever be charged more than 6 per cent interest, while it is commonly believed that the average interest rate will be 5 per cent or less. It is no idle boast to say that the farmers will derive greater benefits from the Democratic rural-credit law than from all the legislation ever enacted for them by the Republican Party. Despite hostile newspaper criticism of this great constructive measure, 108 of the ablest Republican Members of this House voted for its passage.

The Democratic Party has served the farmers zealously and faithfully in the past; if continued in power, it will serve them faithfully and zealously in the future. But Democracy has not only legislated for the farmers and kept them prosperous and contented; Democracy has kept this Nation at peace; it has kept this country out of war.

LABOR.

The record of Democratic legislation in behalf of those who toil shines with untarnished splendor. During the six years that it has controlled the House, and the four years that it has controlled both the House and the Senate, the Democratic Party has done more for the protection of the laborer, and more for the preservation of the laborer's rights, than was done for similar purposes by the Republican Party during its entire 44 years of power. This is not an extravagant campaign assertion, but an accurate statement of a startling truth to demonstrate which "let facts be submitted to a candid world."

We have established an eight-hour day for laborers on all national public works.

We have established an eight-hour day for female employees in the District of Columbia.

We have enacted the dredge-workers' law, establishing an eight-hour day for laborers doing dredging work in the improvement of our rivers and harbors.

We have established an eight-hour day for civilians engaged in making powder and ordnance for the Government.

We have established an eight-hour day for all post-office clerks and letter carriers.

We have established an eight-hour day for those who mine coal for the use of our Navy.

We have enacted the Children's Bureau law, the object of which is to promote the welfare of children and safeguard their interests.

We have passed the Industrial Commission law, providing for a thorough investigation of the entire subject of industrial relations, in order that the best methods of settling industrial disputes may be ascertained and adopted.

We have enacted a law prohibiting the deadly work of manufacturing white phosphorus matches, a work that formerly destroyed the health and life of many laborers every year.

We have enacted the trades dispute law, regulating the issuance of injunctions in cases affecting labor, and establishing the right of trial by jury of alleged contempts committed outside the presence of the court.

We have enacted the seaman's law, which among other things abolishes imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and corporal punishment on board ship.

We have enacted a law creating the Department of Labor and making its head a Member of the President's Cabinet. By virtue of this law labor is represented at the council table of the Nation by one whose business it is to safeguard its interest and plead its cause. Between March 4, 1913, and June 6, 1916, this new department amicably adjusted 149 trades disputes that vitally affected the interests of hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children. Between February, 1915, and April, 1916, this department obtained employment for more than 62,000 men. In 1914 this department found employment for 75,000 field workers for an average of four weeks each at a rate of $2.75 per day. All told, the Department of Labor has during the past two years procured over $7,000,000 in wages for the laborers of the country—a remarkable achievement in behalf of those who toil.

We have enacted the child-labor law, making it illegal to ship in interstate commerce the output of any mine or quarry produced by the labor of children under 16 years of age, or the product of any cannery, workshop, or manufacturing establishment produced by the labor of children between the ages of 14 and 16 years, or who work more than eight hours in one day, or more than six days in any week, or before 7 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock in the evening. This measure is designed to protect those who can not protect themselves. It says that in spite of greed the children of the Nation shall have a chance.

We have amended the Bureau of Mines act so as to provide miners greater protection against accidents, and also more efficacious rescue service when accidents occur.

We have enacted a law prohibiting the importation of articles from foreign countries made by convicts, paupers, or detained laborers.

We inserted a provision in the Post Office appropriation bill rescinding the "gag rule" laid down by Mr. Roosevelt and enlarged by Mr. Taft, and by reason of which no post-office employee could present his grievances to Congress without danger of being discharged for so doing.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Does the gentleman know that the compensation law has just passed the Senate, too, and has become a law as part of the system affecting workmen?

Mr. NEELY. I do, and I was just about to refer to the employees' compensation act as one of our great achievements in behalf of labor.

This law provides that an employee injured while in the service of the Government, shall, during the continuance of the disability caused by the injury, be paid compensation at a rate not exceeding two-thirds of the salary or wages previously received by him. It is further provided that if the employee die as a result of his injury, liberal compensation shall be paid to the dependent ones who survive him.

We have enacted a law providing for appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decisions of State courts holding labor legislation unconstitutional. Under the former act those attacking the constitutionality of labor laws had the right of appeal to the Federal courts from State court decisions upholding the validity of such laws, although the laborer was denied the right of appeal when the State court held labor legislation invalid. Thus we have given the laborer the standing in court that was formerly enjoyed exclusively by his employer.

We have enacted a law amending the Erdman Act, which provides for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between employers and employees. This amended law afforded the means by which the President succeeded in preventing the threatened eastern railway strike in 1913, which involved 54 railroads and more than 80,000 of their laborers. By virtue of this law the President in 1914 prevented an industrial strike involving the western railroads and their employees.

We have enacted the Clayton Anti-Trust Law, commonly known as Labors Bill of Rights. That the colored man is not a chattel or a commodity was decided by the Civil War, but that the toiling masses who belong to labor organizations are not chattels or property was unknown to many of our Federal courts until the Clayton Law was put upon the statute book by the Wilson administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under this law the laboring man can never again be subjected to the remorseless rules that govern property; for all future time he will be tried by the merciful rules that govern humanity.

This is a naked recital of our achievements in behalf of labor. On this unparalleled record Democracy submits its case to those who toil. Since laboring men are not wanting in gratitude or lacking in appreciation, we confidently rely upon their voting to continue in power the Democratic Party that has so loyally and effectually defended their rights and redressed their wrongs throughout the last four years. While legislating for labor, this administration preserved peace in the Nation; it kept this country out of war.

LOBBY INVESTIGATION.

During long years of uninterrupted sway the Republican Party permitted a powerful and pernicious lobby to infest the Capitol. This lobby dictated the measures the interests wanted and defeated the measures the people wanted. It poisoned the source of Federal legislation, harrassed Federal officials, and made it impossible to pass reformatory laws. The stand-pat party was powerless to eradicate this usurping evil. It was impotent to purge the country of this national disgrace, because the special interests that kept the Republican Party in control of the Government kept the lobby in control of the Republican Party.

The Democratic administration being under obligations to no monopoly, trust, or combination, and seeking only to serve the whole people, and to promote their welfare, drove the iniquitous lobby from the city of Washington as the patriots drove the infamous Tarquins from the city of ancient Rome. With the annihilation of the lobby, the invisible, intangible, and indefensible government of privilege perished, and the visible government of the people triumphantly resumed its sway.

PENSIONS.

The Republican Party in its national convention assembled at Chicago in June, 1916, had a golden opportunity to express its gratitude to the surviving soldiers who left their homes, gave up their business, and risked their lives to preserve this Government and save this country during the dark days and the starless nights of the Civil War. But the grand old party's convention exhausted its energy in setting traps for Progressives and forgot to declare itself on the subject of pensions. To-day, the Republican Party stands indicted at the bar of public opinion for adopting a national platform in which the veterans of the Civil War are treated with silent and brutal contempt and their widows and orphans are mercilessly ignored. On the other hand, the Democratic Party's convention, recently assembled in St. Louis, declared itself on the subject of pensions in the following lucid language: "We renew the declaration of recent Democratic platforms relating to generous pensions for soldiers and their widows, and call attention to our record of performance in this particular."

From August 15, 1876, to May 11, 1912, inclusive, no less than 25 general and liberal laws in favor of soldiers and their dependent ones were passed by a Democratic House of Representatives, or approved by a Democratic President, and this was accomplished in spite of the fact that the Democratic Party controlled the office of President but eight years, and both the executive and legislative departments of the Government but two years from the beginning of the war to the end of the year 1912.

It was a distinguished Democrat that introduced, and a Democratic House of Representatives that in 1912 passed, the Sherwood bill, the most generous, just, and satisfactory pension measure that was ever drafted; but the Sherwood bill as passed by the Democratic House was so liberal that the Republican Senate, by amendment, stripped it of remedial value to the extent of $2,500,000 per year.

The comparative justice and liberality of the two great political parties toward the country's soldiers is clearly disclosed by the following facts. In the year 1902, when every department of the Federal Government was under Republican control, 999,436 pensioners received from the treasury a total of less than $142,000,000; while in 1913, under the Wilson administration, when the number of those on the Nation's roll of honor had been reduced by death to 820,190, there was paid out in pension money a grand total of more than $176,700,000. In other words, while death decreased the number of pensioners by more than 179,000 during the 11 years from 1902 to 1913, the Democratic Party in the latter year increased the pension compensation to the old soldiers, their widows and orphans, by more than $35,000,000.

This Democratic Congress has, for the benefit of our veterans, enacted a law providing special pensions for those whose names are on what is known as the "Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll." Soldiers will be surprised to know that the distinguished Republican leader of this House [Mr. MANN] voted against this meritorious bill.

The Democratic House of the present Congress has passed, and it is believed that the Senate will eventually pass, the Key bill, which provides liberal pensions for the widows and orphans of the veterans of the Spanish-American War.

This Democratic House has passed a bill to increase the pensions of widows who were the wives of soldiers during the Civil War from $12 to $20 per month. It is generally believed that this bill will be passed by the Senate and approved by the President before this Congress finally adjourns on the fourth day of next March.

If the old soldiers will study the history of pension legislation during the recent past they will find that as the Nation's heroes have decreased in number so has Republican interest in their cause declined. But as the wants of the veterans and their dependent ones have been multiplied by disease and their needs increased with passing years, so the zeal of Democracy to serve this most deserving and distinguished portion of our people has grown stronger and stronger, until to-day the Democratic Party is universally recognized as the soldier's most fearless and most faithful friend.

PREPAREDNESS.

Out of the destruction and desolation of the European war, attended by innumerable violations of the rights of neutral nations, there arose in this country a demand for an increase of military preparedness. That demand was urgent, emphatic, and persistent. It was voiced by a vast majority of 100,000,000 people. In keeping with its time-honored traditions, Democracy promptly responded to the demand of the public and fully discharged its duty by providing additional security for the Nation. The problem of determining to just what extent preparedness should be increased proved to be one of most difficult solution. Some urged that the United States be turned into an armed camp in competition with the war-crazed countries of Europe and that military training be made universal and compulsory, while the extreme pacifists protested against any unusual increase in either our Army or Navy. An illustration of the wide divergence of views on the important subject of preparedness is found in the following personal experience: On a certain day last December a wise, conservative, and patriotic lawyer informed me that he considered it the duty of Congress to appropriate $1,000,000,000 to be expended immediately in building up the greatest navy in the world. He further stated that in his opinion the appropriation for the Army should be in keeping with the appropriation suggested for the Navy. On the following day I asked a most intelligent, patriotic, and successful minister of the Gospel for his opinion on the subject of preparedness. He said:

If this country has been as righteous as it should have been, there is no necessity for a larger Army or a more powerful Navy.

You remember that the Lord sent hornets before the children of Israel to drive out the Hivites, the Canaanites and the Hittites, and if any other country should invade the United States, Providence could repeat the miracle wrought in Canaan 3,400 years ago; the Lord could send innumerable hornets to sting our enemies away from our shores.

It must be confessed that the preacher's theory is at once economical and sublime, but unfortunately both for ourselves and the theory, a deplorable occurrence has recently proved that it is not advisable for us to adopt it at the present time. When the Mexicans invaded our territory a little while ago, the hornets failed us completely; and if hornets will not sting invading Mexicans, they cannot be relied upon to sting at all.

This Congress has not quite accepted the suggestion of the lawyer who desired a billion-dollar Navy, nor has it staked the safety of the country on the warlike proclivities of the faithless hornets, but excluding from its consideration all supernatural influences, and barring extreme views of every type, Democracy has dealt with this question so as to attain what Horace calls the "golden mean." Provisions have been made for an increase of preparedness that will not unduly burden the taxpayers of the Nation, but that will afford the nucleus of adequate protection for this country in any crisis that may arise.

We have enacted a law which provides that the Regular Army be recruited to 210,000 men—an increase of more than 162 per cent in one year. We have provided that the militia be federalized and recruited to 450,000 men. By virtue of this legislation 660,000 trained soldiers will constitute the authorized strength of our military establishment. We have appropriated a quarter of a billion dollars more for military preparedness than was ever appropriated for the same purpose in any one year by a Republican Congress in time of peace.

The naval bill, as recently passed, carries an appropriation of more than $313,000,000. The appropriations made by the present Congress for naval construction and maintenance are two and a third times as great as the largest appropriation ever made by a Republican Congress in one year for the same purposes in time of peace. The naval appropriation which we have just made is $78,000,000 greater than the largest naval appropriation ever made by Great Britain in one year in time of peace and $55,000,000 greater than the largest appropriation ever made by Great Britain for the same purpose in one year in time of war. The Democratic Congress made these vast appropriations not as a matter of choice, but as a matter of necessity. They were required by menacing conditions abroad for which Democracy is not responsible; by conditions which no party in this country could control. The prudence that provides a fire department before a fire; that provides a police department before a riot; that insures property before it has been destroyed, is the same prudence that prompted us to provide so liberally for the protection of this country and the preservation of its peace.

Yet in spite of the enormous appropriations we have made to provide adequate defense for this Nation, both by land and by sea, the Republicans criticize us and denounce us for not having appropriated more. But when the Republicans are speaking of preparedness, they are not thinking of the people who pay the taxes, but of the Munitions Trust, the Steel Trust, the Armor Plate Trust, and all the other trusts that make profits out of the traffic of war, and later donate generously of their gains to the campaign fund of the stand-pat party.

With a patriotism that would have exalted the conscript fathers, the Democracy of the Sixty-fourth Congress has amply provided for the defense of the Nation and the security of the American people. The money with which to pay for carrying out our program of preparedness is to be raised, not as the Republicans desired, by increasing the tariff on the food and clothing of the poor, but it is to be raised, as Democracy demanded, by levying taxes on munition makers and by increasing the taxes of those whose net incomes exceed $3,000 per year. While making these unusual preparations for the continued maintenance of this country's peace at home and prestige abroad, the Wilson Administration also kept this country prosperous, its labor employed, and its people out of war.

FOREIGN POLICY.

Of the many questions involved in this campaign there is one that is paramount and supreme. There is one question that overshadows all others as the pyramids of Egypt overshadow the sands of the River Nile. That is the question of this country's foreign policy. Shall we settle our international difficulties by means of diplomacy, as this administration has done, or by means of arms, as the jingoes and giant killers assert that we should have done? Shall we, as patriots, support the President in his maintenance of American rights, or, as partisans, repudiate an administration that has served the best interests of this Government as they have never been served before? Shall we stand as friends with those who are defending the honor of the Republic, or as enemies, with those who are assailing it?

The Republican platform by plain implication and the Republican candidate for President in plain words condemn this administration for not having dealt more firmly with the Mexican situation, and this is equivalent to their saying that we should have either intervened in Mexico or declared war against her. Neither the facts in the case nor the precedents applicable to them would have justified this Government in resorting to either of these drastic measures. The facts are known to the world, but what does precedent say? During the administration of Mr. Taft much American property and 47 American lives were destroyed by Mexican revolutionists and outlaws, but this country did not deal more firmly with the situation then than this administration is dealing with it now; this country did not intervene; it did not go to war.

Depredations such as were committed by Mexican bandits under the last Republican administration have been repeated under this administration. Again, American lives have been lost and American property has been destroyed, but we have not intervened, and we have not gone to war—and why? Is it, as our traducers allege, because we are too cowardly to fight? A thousand times, no. If any people anywhere think that Americans are afraid to go to war, or shed their blood or lose their lives for their country or its cause, let them disabuse their minds by taking a short course in American history. Let them read of Lexington, Concord, Bunker Hill, and Yorktown; of Santiago and Manila Bay, of Chickamauga and Gettysburg; let them read of Israel Putnam, John Paul Jones, Mad Anthony Wayne, Commodore Perry, Ulysses S. Grant and Robert E. Lee [Applause]; let them follow in the footsteps of the superb soldiers in blue and the grand soldiers in gray as they fought with Sheridan at Winchester and Stonewall Jackson at Bull Run, and thus will they learn that American valor has seldom been equaled, and never surpassed, in the history of the world. We have fought and won bloody wars in the past for our liberty and our freedom, and if necessity dictate it and duty demand it, we shall fight other wars in the future and defend our rights against the world. But when this country goes to war, reason will carry our standard; honor will blow the bugle; justice will beat the drum; humanity will order the charge, and righteousness will pronounce a benediction on our conquering hosts when they come marching home. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

No cowardice on our part, or want of power, or fear of results has prevented us from intervening in Mexico or declaring war against her. The reasons for our inaction are as benevolent as charity and as righteous as the golden rule. Hear them as they were assigned more than a half a century ago under conditions parallel to those existing now ,and by one whose wisdom can not be questioned; by one whose statesmanship can not be doubted; by one whose courage can not be denied. Soon after the Juarez Government came into power President Lincoln wrote a letter to the American minister to Mexico, in which he expressed himself as follows:

> For a few years past the condition of Mexico has been so unsettled as to raise the question on both sides of the Atlantic whether the time has not come when some foreign power ought, in the general interest of society, to intervene, to establish a protectorate or some other form of government in that country and guarantee its continuance there.
> You will not fail to assure the Government of Mexico that the President neither has, nor can ever have, any sympathy with such designs, in whatever quarter they may arise or whatever character they may take on. The President is hopeful of the ultimate triumph of this (the republican) system over all obstacles, as well in regard to Mexico as in regard to every other American State; but he feels that those States are nevertheless justly entitled to a greater forbearance and more generous sympathies from the Government and people of the United States than they are likely to receive in any other quarter.
> I find the archives here full of complaints against the Mexican Government for violation of contracts and spoliation and cruelties practiced against American citizens. It is not the President's intention to send forward such claims at the present moment. He willingly defers the performance of a duty, which at any time would seem ungracious, until the incoming administration in Mexico shall have had time to cement its authority.

This is the Mexican policy as laid down by Mr. Lincoln, first and greatest of Republican Presidents, and as followed and enforced to the letter by the greatest of succeeding Presidents of the Republic—Woodrow Wilson. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

For five years past Mexico has been in a state of revolution; it has been filled with countless warring factions; it has been without a stable Government that could be held responsible for the offenses of its lawless citizens. In such circumstances for us to have made war on Mexico would have been for a giant to assault a cripple—for a full-grown man to beat a little child. God forbid that this country shall ever degrade itself by playing such an ignoble part. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Our reasons for not having gone to war with Mexico are adequate and complete. Our reasons for nonintervention in Mexican affairs are equally valid. By intervening we would have destroyed Pan-Americanism, which this administration has done so much to encourage and strengthen; we would have made enemies of all the Republics to the south of us; we would have taken the first step toward acquiring Mexican territory and committing this Nation to an imperialistic policy; we would have repudiated every principle upon which Democracy is founded. [Applause on Democratic side.] We do not want the territory of the Mexicans or of any other people on earth. Democracy believes in Mexico for Mexicans as firmly as it believes in America for Americans.

Not satisfied with their denunciation of our Mexican policy in particular, our opponents proceed to criticise the general foreign policy enforced by this administration, and by virtue of which this country has remained at peace in the midst of a world that is running red with human gore.

During the last two years there has raged in Europe the most appalling war the world has ever witnessed. That war is raging now. No man knows when it will end or what havoc will follow in its wake. While we are speaking it is causing thousands to die, hundreds of thousands to suffer, and millions to shed tears. It has impoverished kingdoms, depopulated countries, destroyed cities, plundered churches, and ruined cathedrals. It has robbed the wife of her husband, the child of its father, the girl of her lover, and the mother of her boy. It has banished happiness and enthroned sorrow; it has driven weal from every European fireside, and brought woe to every European home. It has murdered millions of men on the battle field; it has crazed millions of boys in the trenches; it has starved millions of babes in their mothers' arms. Such are the melancholy results of the European War. The countries engaged in this titanic struggle, battling not only for victory but for national existence, impelled by hatred, blinded by fury, and guided by desperation have abrogated treaties, invaded the rights of neutral nations, and violated the very laws of humanity. In their reckless and remorseless work of exterminating each other, the belligerent nations have incidentally rifled our mails, seized our ships of commerce, and destroyed the lives of our citizens.

Many times during the last two years conservative and courageous men have feared that we would be forced to appeal to arms to save American rights from utter annihilation. But as often as it has seemed that no earthly hand could rescue us and no earthly power could deliver us from the European inferno, just so often the great scholar, statesman, and pacificator has proved himself the savior of his country, the champion of its honor, and the defender of its flag [applause on the Democratic side]; just so often the Wilson administration has kept this country out of the European war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The President, with his incomparable diplomacy, has obtained the fullest possible measure of redress for every injury we have suffered at the hands of the war-crazed countries of Europe, and his victories have been won without the surrender of a single American right, without the loss of a single American life, without the loss of a single drop of American blood.

In spite of our diplomatic triumphs, in spite of the fact that we have by peaceful means wrung full recognition of our rights under international law from the proudest, haughtiest nations of Europe, the Republican platform, "darkening counsel by words without knowledge," declares for a "courageous foreign policy," while the Republican candidate for President scolds Democracy for not having put such a policy into operation. But while the Republican platform condemns and the Republican candidate scolds, the thoughtful patriotic Republican voters, as well as the voters of all other parties, will remember that when Woodrow Wilson settles our international difficulties with the pen of diplomacy instead of the crimson sword of war he is following the example set by the most illustrious statesmen that this country has ever produced or the world has ever seen. All but the fire-eaters and the jingoes know that the Father of his Country, the elder Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Franklin Pierce, Benjamin Harrison, Ulysses S. Grant, and the immortal Lincoln all settled our difficulties and adjusted our differences with other countries by means of diplomacy, just as the President has done. Let it be borne in mind that to repudiate the foreign policy of Woodrow Wilson is to repudiate the foreign policy of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln.

When our opponents urge a "courageous foreign policy" upon the country, we shall remind the people whom we represent that Austria and Servia adopted "courageous policies" two years ago and that Austria and Servia went to war; we shall remind them that England, France, Germany, and Russia all adopted "courageous policies" a little while ago, and that all these great nations are now at war; we shall further remind the people that "courageous policies" have, during the last two years, cost the warring nations of Europe, including killed, missing, and wounded, the grand and gloomy total of 13,033,000 men. With these startling figures before them, and these appalling results to warn them, do the American people want to experiment with "courageous policies" on American soil? This is the question that must be answered by the voters on the 7th day of November. If a "courageous" policy means in the United States what it has meant in the blood-soaked countries of Europe, to adopt such a policy here would be to thrust a spear into the quivering side of Peace; it would be to crucify the civilization and the Christianity of the Western Hemisphere upon a cross, carved by the hand of cruelty from the tree of hate, and planted by the demons of destruction upon the calvary of despair. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the exalted name of the greatest and grandest Government on the globe, in the sacred name of American patriotism, in the hallowed name of the human race, let the "courageous policy" of the Republican platform and party be rejected before it casts a blight upon the American people, before it seats the ghost of a slaughtered soldier at every American fireside, before it hangs crêpe on the door of every American home. And as the voters, with their ballots, reject the "courageous" policy of our opponents, so let them continue the priceless policy of peace of the Wilson administration until the dark days of war in Europe and danger in America are ended; until the flames of Europe's conflagration have been extinguished; until the last spark from Europe's fire has ceased to glow in our sky. Let the policies of Woodrow Wilson be supported by patriotic men of all parties until war ceases in every country and peace prevails in every land; until hate dies and love lives in the hearts of all the children of men. [Applause.]

"Till the war drum throbs no longer and the battle flags are furled,
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

[Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks and extend them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech of Secretary McAdoo on the occasion of the induction into office of the new Farm Loan Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this speech has already been printed in another body?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure I do not know. It was given to me by Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. BENNET. Another speech of Mr. McAdoo's was printed two or three times in the RECORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. This is a good speech, and it will do no harm to print it several times. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. RAINEY. I presume, Mr. Speaker, if it has already been printed consent can be granted, subject to the discretion of the Public Printer, and if it has not been printed before it can be printed now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I will first ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROGRESSIVE PLATFORM PRINCIPLES AND DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, having been reared in a district of eastern Tennessee more consistently Republican perhaps than any other district in the United States I grew up a Republican, with prejudice against everything Democratic.

Realizing finally that the Republican Party had become so involved that it was not the medium through which the will of the common people could find expression, I became a Progressive and assisted in the organization of that party, being sent from my State—Utah—as a delegate to the first national convention held in Chicago in 1912, by which this platform entitled "A contract with the people" was adopted. Upon that platform I was elected to this House as a Progressive.

Having been a Republican by heredity, a Progressive through conviction, I desire to state my reasons for supporting the administration of President Wilson. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAYS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. That platform upon which the gentleman was elected contained a protective tariff plank and a tariff commission plank, did it not?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Do you still support them?

Mr. MAYS. I support them as set out in this platform. It does not call for a high tariff. I will refer to that briefly.

Mr. HILL. It calls for a tariff sufficient to provide for the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman, but I would be glad if the gentleman would answer and explain that.

Mr. MAYS. Yes; it also denounced the Payne-Aldrich bill as unjust to the people and demanded a revision.

Mr. HILL. And got it.

Mr. MAYS. Yes; got it in the Underwood law.

Mr. CARAWAY. It also denounced the Republican Party as it was organized then and as it is now organized.

Mr. MAYS. It certainly did in terms of the severest nature.

While never taking active part in the councils of the Republican Party, I believed it to be a party of progress and of freedom. All my life I had heard its orators state that the party had overcome the most colossal rebellion in the world's history; that it had stricken the shackles from the limbs of 3,000,000 slaves and made them citizens; that it had preserved the Union; that it was the party of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley; that it pointed with pride to its "unparalleled" record of legislative achievements. This argument, especially that of pointing with pride, was, of course, most convincing to its loyal membership.

Through a long process of education, however, the unwelcome conviction gradually came to many members of that party that it was controlled by interests who paid for, demanded, and received an undue share of the country's wealth and prosperity. As asserted by men high in the party's councils, it had become the agency through which the interests, grown by special privilege, operated to further exploit the people.

ONLY REPUBLICANS CAPABLE OF GOVERNING.

The statement often made, even until the present time, that the Republican Party alone was capable of governing the country caused some apprehension in my mind, lest the leaders and bosses should not be spared to us. It seemed proper that training should be given to others in order that the people's independence of any party might be preserved.

Having voted for Taft in 1908, upon the emphatic promise of his party that the tariff which had admittedly worked great injustice to the consuming masses would be revised downward, many Republicans were surprised at the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Many others were discouraged and disgusted at the exhibition of bossism in the Congress of the Nation. These influences caused the defeat of the Republican Party in the election of 1910, and, together with the high-handed methods of arrogant leaders of that party, caused its disruption at its national convention in 1912 and the organization of the Progressive Party.

Republicans now encourage themselves by saying that the party then formed was the result of a spasm of anger, and that when the anger cooled the members would return to the old régime. Some will return, but will the larger number? The causes were far deeper seated and of much longer duration.

In the campaign of 1912 Woodrow Wilson received over 6,300,000 votes; Roosevelt received over 4,100,000; Taft received 3,600,000, carrying the great States of Utah and Vermont. The time allotted me on this occasion would not be sufficient to repeat the charges and accusations made by the Progressives against the Republican Party. The rules of the House would not permit the use of language employed by either side. However, the same old guard, against which these bitter charges were made, are now in the saddle controlling, dominating, and directing the affairs of that party.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MAYS. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. How do the Progressives of Utah regard the recent attempt to sell and deliver the Progressive Party to the Republicans?

Mr. MAYS. They repudiated the bargain, and they have an independent ticket.

Mr. CARAWAY. They are not abiding by the contract?

Mr. MAYS. No. A positive lack of confidence, an absolute distrust, was expressed by Progressives everywhere. Who can say that any evidence of reform or change of heart has been furnished? The question as to the new allegiance of the 4,000,000 votes supporting the Progressive ticket of 1912 is really the most important, politically, of the hour. They will represent a larger body of independent voters than ever before exercised the franchise in any campaign. They are not to be controlled by the old-time prejudices or traded to any party at the dictation of any self-appointed boss. These people were sincere and of high average intelligence. They were intensely patriotic and deeply interested in the welfare of the humble people of moderate means and those unfortunate people without any means. They were students of economic conditions. They adopted a platform which for clearness of expression of humanity's needs has rarely been equaled. The rank and file of that party firmly believed in the necessity of the enactment of those principles and promises into legislation. They still believe so. They still distrust the bosses and representatives of the interests who ruled the Republican Party in 1910 and 1912, and rule it now with even more arrogance and self-assurance. What will the Progressives do? An answer to that question decides the election. Hughes must get at least 75 per cent of their vote. Does he and the party by which he was nominated deserve such support? Wilson must receive a small percentage of the Progressive vote. Does he, and the party cooperating with him, through actual deeds done, deserve such support? That is the question I desire to discuss to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Early in this session of Congress, having occasion to visit New York, I was invited to call upon the financial head of the Progressive Party. The conference disclosed to me that this gentleman was so much interested in such corporations as the United States Steel, the Bethlehem Steel, the Harvester Trust, and was so desirous of a large preparedness program, and incidentally was so tired of financing the Progressive Party that he was ready to accept practically any candidate the Republicans would nominate and enter into an agreement to sell and deliver the Progressive Party to the Republicans like so many sheep and cattle. His sole objection offered to the administration was its tendency to place some limit upon expenses for the Naval and Military Establishments and for failure to go into war with Mexico. This war has made many millions for himself and associates, and he was willing to realize many millions more. He believed the Republicans to be better friends—more subservient friends—to the vast enterprises in which he was so deeply interested.

I then let it be known that I had joined the Democratic Party because the obituary of the Progressive Party seemed only postponed for trading purposes and because not a solitary ray of hope appeared of remedial legislation from the Republican Party in the interests of the people, and because the Democratic Party, under its leader, the President, had been offering convincing proof of its sincere interest in the general good by putting on the statute books a program of wise and wholesome legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman by his remarks intend to charge that Mr. George W. Perkins was guilty of any corrupt bargain?

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman may put his own conclusion upon my words.

Mr. BENNET. I was rather anxious to get the gentleman's conclusion.

Mr. MAYS. I do not know whether the gentleman would consider such a bargain and sale corrupt or not.

I want, therefore, to compare the demands of the Progressives with the actual performance of the party now in power. If it can be shown that the essential principles enunciated by that platform have been crystalized into legislation, and if the Progressives were sincere enough in their profession of interest in the supreme needs of the Nation to care more for their country and for its people than for any party's success, then they will sustain the administration, lest their refusal to do so might cause the beneficial legislation to be repealed.

I have here the platform in question. On its face it states:

If you want these things done, ratify this contract on November 5.

Let us recite briefly the essential things promised and determine in what measure the actual performances of the administration of President Wilson square with the demands of that great body of American people.

PAYNE-ALDRICH TARIFF BILL.

It is admitted that the revulsion of the people against the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, so evidently written at the dictation of the favored few, chiefly caused the defeat of the party responsible in the election of 1910, and finally caused the disruption of the party and its overwhelming defeat in 1912. What did the Progressives demand in the way of tariff legislation? The platform on that subject declares as follows:

We demand tariff revision, because the present tariff is unjust to the people of the United States. Fair dealing toward the people requires an immediate downward revision of those schedules wherein duties are shown to be unjust and excessive.

Evidently the Progressives repudiated the time-worn Republican doctrine that the foreigner pays the tariff. Otherwise, what mattered if it was excessive? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The platform affirmed the tariff unjust to the people and demanded its downward revision. What did the Democrats do? They revised the tariff downward, giving due regard to the needs of revenue of the country, and especial attention to the necessities of life and to the consumers of the same. They constructed a bill which reduced the tax paid by the common consumer to the extent of about $100,000,000 per year, and raised the amount in lieu thereof by increasing the corporation tax and by enacting an income-tax law. What would the Republican Party do to the tariff? According to the statements of their leaders, they would call a special session of Congress and substantially reenact the Payne-Aldrich law. Do the Progressives desire that done? They emphatically say not in their platform. They use this language:

We declare the Payne-Aldrich bill to be unjust to the people. The Republican organization is in the hands of those who have broken and can not again be trusted to keep the promise of downward revision.

TARIFF AND WAGES.

Evidently they doubt the beneficial effect of Republican tariff upon wages, because they say:

We believe the benefit of any tariff should be disclosed in the pay envelope of the laborer.

If so, the verdict must be in favor of the present law, as the pay envelope of the laborer discloses more wages per day, of shorter hours, and a higher degree of prosperity than under any previous tariff law in the history of the country.

Asserting that Republican policies confined prosperity to a favored few, the Progressives demanded that "prosperity be passed around," such results are being developed by the administration. Mr. Hughes, busy explaining this prosperity, as if he were personally grieved, and expressing the hope that it is only temporary, claims that it is caused by the shipment of less than 3 per cent of our manufactured goods as war munitions. In this, however, he is not sustained by the captains of industry supporting him.

Realizing that the consumer pays the tariff, the Progressives declare that no industry deserves protection which is unfair to labor and which is operating in violation of the Federal law.

We believe that the presumption is in favor of the consuming public.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Knowing that the tariff question had disturbed business more than all other questions combined; that the continual threats to revise the tariff laws by the old logrolling, unscientific methods had resulted disastrously to the honest business of the country and assisted in plunging the Nation into periods of depression and panic, the Progressives used this language:

We pledge ourselves to the establishment of a nonpartisan, scientific tariff commission.

This administration is establishing just such a commission, supplying it with just such powers, and charging it with substantially the same duties as the Progressives demanded. Should not this great piece of legislation be approved and sustained by the Progressive voters?

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

On the subject of the high cost of living the Progressive Party said:

The high cost of living is due partly to world-wide and partly to local causes. The measures proposed in this platform, such as the tariff, the trusts, and conservation, will of themselves tend to remove the artificial causes. There will remain other elements, such as a tendency to leave the country for the city, waste, extravagance, bad system of taxation, poor method of raising crops, bad business methods in marketing crops.

Has the administration given intelligent attention to all of these causes? Has it enacted beneficial legislation? With the exception as to those causes which are world-wide, over which it has no jurisdiction, it has done so. It has revised the tariff downward. It has curbed the trusts; it has provided for conservation both of human and natural resources. It has endeavored to prevent the exodus from the country to the city by establishing a just system of rural credits, enacting good-roads legislation, passing avocation laws, suggesting better business methods, establishing an Office of Markets, and passing other measures in the interest of country life. Should not the Progressives sustain the power that thus performs?

INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT.

Throughout the Progressive platform the severest criticism is aimed at what is called the invisible government. They said:

Behind the ostensible government, sits enthroned an invisible government, owing no allegiance and acknowledging no responsibility to the people.

That was said of the Republican régime after 16 years of uninterrupted Republican control. Are the Progressives willing to reinstate that same invisible government? They say not. Instead they say:

To destroy this invisible government, to destroy this unholy alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics is the first task of the statesmanship of the day.

Can they perform that first task of statesmanship by voting back into power the same old guard that established on its throne the invisible government and formed the unholy alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics? Is not that invisible government supporting the Republican candidate? It is. Are not the same old elements in complete control? They are. Will Progressives place them back in power? They will not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

THE FEDERAL RESERVE AND CLAYTON ANTITRUST ACTS.

What has the Democratic Party done to destroy the invisible government? Undoubtedly the interests constituting the invisible government were fostered most by the unjust tariff system. That was revised. A few trusts, through interlocking directorates, wield an insidious power. The Clayton antitrust law was directed at the evil. The unscientific currency system permitted the money kings in the great financial centers to throttle business to create panics that they might compel the Government to do their bidding. The Progressives realizing this stated that "there exists imperative need for prompt legislation for the improvement of our national currency system." They denounced the methods inaugurated and continued by the Republicans as harmful and unscientific. They stated that—the issue of currency is fundamentally a Government function, and the system should have as basic principles, soundness and elasticity. The control should be lodged with the Government and should be protected from domination or manipulation by Wall Street or any special interest.

They denounced the Aldrich currency bill, to which the Republican Party was committed. How has the administration met that very proper demand of the Progressive Party? By enacting the Federal reserve law—the greatest single piece of constructive legislation placed upon our statute books in 50 years. It has been well said by nonpartisans that if the administration had done nothing else it would have deserved the commendation of the American people. In the Republican platform no criticism or threat to repeal this measure occurs. Will the Progressives sustain the legislation, the need of which they emphatically announced and which they promised to enact? If sincere, they must do so.

SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL JUSTICE.

We Progressives asserted in the platform that the supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice. We pledged ourselves to work "unceasingly in State and Nation" for a long list of industrial reforms. We demanded a child-labor law. The administration is now performing. We asked for an eight-hour-a-day law. Such a law is in operation. We asked for a workman's compensation law. The measure has been constructed and passed by this Congress. We demanded safety for railroad employees. Such a law has been put into force. We asked for a bureau of labor safety. It has already been granted by a bill now on the statute books. A large portion of the legislation demanded by the Progressives in the interest of social and industrial justice and for the benefit of labor has either passed or is pending in Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Since the days when I worked as an ordinary miner in the zinc mines of Kansas and Missouri labor has asked for an anti-injunction law. Labor had petitioned and supplicated the Republican Party for such a law, but in vain. The Progressive platform demanded it. The Democrats have actually enacted it, every Democrat and every Progressive voting for the same upon its final passage. Should labor not remember and reward those who answer labor's just demands? In the further interest of labor we, as Progressives, "pledged our party to establish a Department of Labor, with a seat in the Cabinet and with wide jurisdiction over matters affecting labor."

The administration realized the importance and justice of this demand and responded, and such a department is installed in the Cabinet and is working out the problems relating to the life of the laborer and working masses of our country.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

We Progressives solemnly asserted that—the existing concentration of vast wealth under a corporate system, unguarded and uncontrolled by the Nation, has placed in the hands of a few men enormous, secret, irresponsible power over the daily life of citizens—a power insufferable in a free government and certain of abuse.

No severer condemnation of the party responsible for such conditions has ever been recorded. Would the Progressives reinstate the same guilty culprits into power? We think not. What remedy did the Progressives suggest? They demanded as a remedy for this intolerable abuse, this flagrant misuse of power—a strict regulation by a strong Federal administrative commission.

To this demand the Democrats can show ready response in the law creating a Federal Trade Commission. This commission would have made impossible the accumulation of such vast wealth and power in the hands of a few, as is illustrated by the Standard Oil Co. and other like monopolies fostered and sanctioned by the Republican Party. That party might have promised such legislation, but would not have been permitted by the controlling interests 'till doomsday to redeem the promise.

The Progressives stated that such a commission must enforce complete publicity of corporate transactions of public interest, must attack unfair competition, false capitalization, and special privilege, and by continual trained watchfulness guard and keep open equally to all the highways of American commerce. They predicted just such results as are being obtained by the operations of the law. Would the Progressives rebuke the administration that thus measures up to their platform standards and so substantially complies with their demands?

MERCHANT MARINE.

Our Progressive platform recognized the supreme necessity of extending the scope of America's commercial activity. The necessity of a merchant marine, to enable our products to be delivered to the markets of the world, has been apparent for many years. The ship-purchase bill, passed by this House, is the first step toward the solution of that problem.

CONSERVATION.

The Progressives have a decided opinion in favor of the conservation of our natural resources. Every essential demand made in their platform in this regard has been met by laws either pending or passed or in process of passage.

FLOOD CONTROL.

The platform demanded the improvement of our waterways, and especially the Mississippi River, whose devastating floods, carrying the water of 32 States, annually bring destruction to hundreds of lives and many millions of property, causing scarcity and high prices of farm products. All parties promised to extend such Federal aid. This administration has developed a special committee on flood control, which carefully investigated the actual conditions and formed and passed a bill designed to bring the long-sought relief.

GOOD ROADS.

In the Progressive platform we find a demand for good roads. A law is passed and signed by the President appropriating a total of nearly $100,000,000 during the next 10 years toward that very essential improvement.

CORRUPT PRACTICE.

Realizing the evils growing out of the misuse of wealth toward perpetuating men and parties in power, the Progressives stated that they pledged legislation—

Compelling strict limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures and detailed publicity of both.

Such a law the Congress has enacted and supplemented. Every Democrat and every Progressive supported it in its final passage.

DIRECT ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

The Progressives demanded the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people in order to avoid repetition of the deadlocks and scandals due to the fraudulent use of money. Such a law has been given the country by the administration. Every Democrat, every Progressive, and every progressively inclined Republican supported the bill. Every standpatter, every reactionary opposed it. Will the Progressives forget so soon and refuse to sustain the administration for such legislation?

PENSIONS.

On the subject of pensions, the Progressives used this significant language:

We pledge ourselves to a wise and just policy of pensioning American soldiers and sailors and their widows and children by the Federal Government, and we approve the policy of the Southern States in granting pensions to their Confederate soldiers and sailors and their widows and children.

Nothing like the last sentiment probably ever occurred in a national platform. It signifies the disappearance of prejudices, growing out of the Civil War. This Congress has provided generously for the welfare of the country's defenders in their hour of need. The Republican platform never mentions the old soldiers and sailors.

PARCEL POST.

The Progressives pledged—the creation of a parcel post, with rates proportionate to distance and service.

This important piece of legislation, the Democrats have placed on the statute books, and its beneficial effects have been extended to the people generally.

PREPAREDNESS.

On the important subject of preparedness, the Progressives pledged the building of two capital ships a year. This administration has provided for the building of four times that number.

RURAL CREDITS.

The Progressives were solicitous for the welfare of the farmer, stating when he is properous the country is prosperous, and realizing that his rights and interests have been shamefully neglected by the Republican Party. It therefore pledged itself to—

Foster the developement of agricultural credit and cooperation.

The rural-credits bill meets this demand. That bill, too long deferred, was supported by every Democrat, every Progressive, and all but 10 of the Republicans in the House. Did the standpat party ever enact such legislation? Through the tedious years of their control they never did do it. As to whether they ever would have done so, a resolution recently passed against the measure by the New York State Chamber of Commerce is the most significant criterion.

The laws demanded by the Progressives in the interest of the great agricultural classes have been passed by this administration with few, if any, exceptions. The warehouse law, the law preventing gambling in farm products, the grain-grade bill, the Lever Agricultural extension bill, the good roads bill, and others have been given the farmer, all of which are to his peculiar interest and in accord with the spirit of the Progressive platform. Will not the farmers, who are fair-minded and just, give credit where credit is due? We believe that they will do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

REVENUE.

The extension of governmental aid in so many new directions has, together with the vast appropriations of more than $600,000,000 toward naval and military establishments, necessitated the collection of much revenue. How would the Republican Party have accomplished this? By the imposition of still higher tariff laws. Yet even the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, denounced by the Progressives and repudiated by the whole country as too high, would produce less than one-fourth of the amount required. How would the Progressives raise this money? Not by higher tariffs, because they severely denounced the Republican measure as being too high. Undoubtedly the Progressives would have pursued essentially the same course as has the present administration. We find in the Progressive platform the following:

INHERITANCE AND INCOME TAXES.

"We believe in a graduated inheritance tax." The Democrats are now in process of perfecting that law.

Further the platform says:

We favor giving the Government power to levy an income tax.

Beyond question, Mr. Speaker, an income tax law is by far the most equitable means of producing revenue for the necessities of the Government ever devised by the wisdom of man. It seeks to secure the money from those who can pay without hardship or deprivation. A widow might have to sell her cow to pay the tax on her humble home, but a man with an income of $20,000 per year has the money at hand. The Progressives favor this tax; the Democrats have enacted it into law. The President urged it.

The candidate of the Republican Party for the Presidency is on record against it, causing its defeat before the Legislature of New York when he was governor, and greatly jeopardizing the success of the law. Do Progressives want to repeal the income-tax law? The great interests that influenced the governor of New York are still just as much opposed to the system, are just as powerful in the councils of the Republican Party. Would the Progressives relieve the colossal fortunes, already swollen to a dangerous condition, of their proper share and place the burdens upon the consuming public? We believe they will very generally refuse to do that. If sincere in desiring the enactment of such wholesome legislation, they will sustain the administration and uphold the hands held out to their rescue from oppression and injustice.

The present income-tax law was supported by every Democrat, every Progressive, and by 34 patriotic Republicans, who loved their party not less but their country more. Every standpatter, whose kind absolutely controlled the Chicago convention and now dominate the Republican Party, voted against this measure. What will the Progressives do?

SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE TO PROGRAM DEMANDS.

Mr. Speaker, in going over the Progressive platform again and again I find that there remain for future consideration the demands of the Progressives for initiative, referendum, and recall; for legislation touching suffrage; the power of the courts and recall of judicial decisions. The President stands upon the platform of his party on suffrage. Our platform was essentially the same. The platform of the Republican Party is no more favorable. Candidate Hughes showed his real concern in the rights of women by vetoing the bill seeking to secure the same wages for women school-teachers as men for the same work and by failing to vote for suffrage. The President has shown his attitude toward the reactionary tendency of the courts by such appointments as that of Louis Brandeis to the Supreme Court of the United States. Every standpatter voted against his confirmation.

The platform of that party called for a most beneficent program of constructive legislation. The founders of that party are to be commended for their high sense of justice, for their sincere interest in the rights and welfare of the people of every class and condition; and if we are to be fair we must see that the President and his associates be commended and sustained in carrying through to effective legislation the great ideas expressed in our platform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This contract with the people has been fulfilled by the present administration more fully than any party ever carried out its promises. The tariff was to be reduced downward. The Underwood law accomplished that result. The consumers were to be given the benefit of such revision. The Underwood law has done that. A tariff commission was demanded. It is to be accomplished fact, ready for duty. The currency was to be reformed to give elasticity and free our country from the domination of Wall Street. A masterpiece of legislation is the response to this demand. Monopoly was to be suppressed. The Clayton Antitrust Act is in operation. An administrative Federal commission in the interest of honest business was demanded. The Federal Trade Commission is at its duty. The invisible government was to be dethroned. That is done.

A parcel post was to be established and extended to those oppressed by the railroad and express monopoly. The people are now enjoying its benefits.

Corrupt practice was denounced. A law now will prevent it.

United States Senators were to be elected by the people. Such a law is in operation and working perfectly, though denounced by every standpatter.

Social and industrial justice was to be of first importance. Practically all the suggested laws to that end are passed or are in process of passage.

Labor was to come into its own and receive its just dues. No administration ever passed one-half of the remedial legislation in the interest of labor.

The farmer was to be given a long-neglected consideration. Never in the history of the Nation have so many constructive laws in his interest been passed.

An inheritance and income tax was pledged. Just such legislation is enacted.

Conservation of our great natural resources was emphasized. All laws suggested are passed or are in process of passage.

PEACE.

In conclusion I will refer briefly to the sentiment of the Progressive platform on the subject of peace. It reads as follows:

The Progressive Party deplores in this age of civilization the barbaric system of warfare among nations, with its enormous waste of resources and the consequent loss of life of the toiling masses. We pledge the party to use its best endeavors to substitute judicial and other peaceful means of settling international differences.

Would not the patriotic people who gave deliberate utterance to that sentiment approve the President's course in so managing this country's negotiations with foreign nations in such extreme crises as to keep our people at peace with all the peoples of the world? The conflict now raging throughout two-thirds of Christendom is a disgrace to civilization. Words can not describe its atrocities; reason can not conceive its blighting effect upon humanity's hopes and aspirations. It is as if the world had lapsed into the savagery of the dark ages, retaining only the sinister ingenuity to slay.

The President has met every crisis with patient firmness. He has maintained the Nation's honor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The candidate of the Republican Party for the Presidency, with an astonishing lack of dignity, charged in his first speech the loss of life by the sinking of the Lusitania to the President of his country, thereby implying that other nations, the lives of whose citizens were lost, might look to this country for reparation. He charges mistakes as to Mexico but does not say what he would have done, except to recognize an assassin as ruler. Later he assumes the rôle of a common scold. Can any but those calloused hopelessly with party prejudice give such utterances the favor of a passing thought?

A former President, now supporting that candidate, states that his man would write but one note on any subject. He seems to speak advisedly and with authority, as his statement is not denied. The President has written more notes than one on such complicated subjects as the submarine question. Many claim he was too firm and severe; some say that he was too lenient. However that may be, he has kept us out of war with honor to the Nation, just as the Progressive platform so wisely demanded.

Should Progressives now forget the demands of their platform? Should they now refuse credit where credit is due? Should they ignore the blessing of peace preserved to their country? They will not show such ingratitude. On the contrary, they will sustain the President. They will uphold his hands. They will rebuke the scheming demagogues and intemperate jingoes. They will repudiate the bargain of the bosses selling their birthright without their consent. This is evidenced by the action of Progressives in many States. They will not be delivered as planned at the billion-dollar dinner. They will justly approve those acts which have crystallized into laws the fundamental principles of the party's "contract with the people." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

MIXED FLOUR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in a remote corner of the Egyptian quarter of the British Museum can be seen to-day a little group of farming implements—a rusted sickle, a broken wooden plow, some sticks tied together with a leathern thong, and some tassels that probably hung on the horns of oxen. These farming implements were taken out of the tomb of an Egyptian Emperor who died 3,000 years ago. They were the bread tools of Egypt, used by her when she had an army and navy and a complicated system of government, and when there was a high development of the arts and sciences. These were the same tools used by her savage neighbors in that far-away period. They were the tools used by farmers for 3,000 years. The center of civilization moved slowly around the Mediterranean, and farmers still laboriously cut grain with a sickle as the centuries passed. During all that period of time every bushel of wheat gathered consumed three hours of a man's time. England was famine swept repeatedly as the centuries slowly passed. Herbert A. Casson, in his interesting publication, "The Romance of the Reaper," to which I am indebted for some of these facts, calls attention to the hunger which prevailed in the world for 3,000 years. During that period of time Rome said, "The first thing is empire"; Egypt said, "The first thing is fame"; Greece said, "The first thing is genius"; not one of them said, "The first thing is bread."

BREAD TOOLS OF TO-DAY.

In 1831 Cyrus H. McCormick, one of the greatest men this country has yet produced, the son of a Virginia farmer, perfected his reaper, and as he drove into a Virginia wheat field a mob of white laborers followed him up and down the field with boisterous expressions of disapproval. Here was an invention which threatened to deprive them of the right to work. To-day we have the self-binder, which has reduced the time of harvesting wheat to 10 minutes a bushel. Five or six hundred combined harvesters and thrashers are manufactured in this country each year for use in the Northwest. Drawn by 32 horses, they thrash and sack eleven hundred bushels of grain per day. Four hundred thousand mowers and grain harvesters are manufactured each year, but 30,000 of the old back-breaking cradles are still manufactured each year here for use in the eastern and southern portions of the United States. I can remember myself when a thrashing machine consisted of a separator operated by horsepower; there were two band cutters, two feeders, three measurers and sackers, and three or more men stacked straw in a cloud of dust. I can remember myself when a small army of men were required to harvest a field of wheat. To-day in the entire wheat field there is but one man—the man who drives the binder. This work may even be done by a boy. To-day a thrashing-machine outfit comprises a self-feeder, an automatic band cutter, automatic weighing and sacking devices, and an automatic swinging stacker, with a steam or gasoline engine for power.

PRICE OF BREAD TO BE INCREASED.

Yet, with all these time-saving and labor-saving devices, we are to-day advised that the rapidly forming food trust of this country proposes to increase the price of bread. To-day wheat is selling for $1.50 per bushel. This seems to be the excuse for increasing the price of bread. In July, 1915, wheat sold in Chicago for $1.53 a bushel and nothing was said about increasing the price of bread. In June, 1909, wheat sold in Chicago for $1.60 a bushel, and in July of that year for $1.40 a bushel. In May, 1898, wheat sold in Chicago for $1.85 a bushel. In September, 1888, wheat sold in Chicago for $2 a bushel. In May, 1876, it sold for $1.76 a bushel; in July, 1868, for $2.20 a bushel; in May, 1867, for $2.85 a bushel. Yet during all those years bread sold to the ultimate consumer at 5 cents a loaf. Frequently during that period of time 5-cent loaves of bread were larger and heavier than they are now.

PRICE OF BREAD IN EUROPE.

In view of the threat to increase the price of bread now being heard throughout the land, it is interesting to note the price of bread made out of pure wheat flour in other sections of the world. In some of the cities of the United States the weight of a loaf of bread is regulated by city ordinances. There are, so far as I know, no State laws on the subject. A 5-cent loaf of bread usually contains 12 or 13 ounces. Last Friday I purchased in the Washington market five loaves of bread of different popular brands. They each weighed on the morning I purchased them 13 ounces. On the next day at the same hour they weighed approximately 12 ounces, and on the next day at the same hour these same loaves weighed approximately 11 ounces each. Each loaf lost an ounce in weight each day.

In 1914, after the European war started, according to our consular reports, 26 ounces of bread sold for 7½ cents in Munster, Ireland. This bread was made out of Minneapolis flour, which at that time cost the bakers there $11 per barrel. Minneapolis flour is selling in the United States at $8.75 per barrel at the present time. At this rate, in 1914 war-time prices in Ireland to the ultimate consumer were at the rate of 3¾ cents for each 13 ounces of pure wheat bread made out of Minneapolis flour at $11 per barrel. On August 27, 1915, in Trieste, Austria, 35 ounces of wheat bread could be purchased for 12 cents. At this rate 13 ounces would cost 4 cents. On January 28, 1915, in London, England, 64 ounces of bread could be purchased for 15 cents, at the rate of 3 cents for each 13 ounces. Before the war, in London, on March 16, 1914, 64 ounces of bread sold for 13 cents. At that rate 13 ounces would cost there approximately 2⅝ cents at that time. Before the war, in Paris, France, on December 22, 1912, 16 ounces of bread sold for less than 4 cents. At that rate 13 ounces would cost a little over 3 cents. On November 13, 1911, in Lyon, France, 35 ounces of bread sold for less than 8 cents. At that rate 13 ounces would cost a little over 2½ cents. On September 2, 1910, in London, England, 64 ounces of bread sold for 12 cents, at the rate of 3 cents for each 13 ounces. In 1900, in Havre, France, bread sold for 3 cents for 16 ounces. In 1900 in the same place 16 ounces of bread cost 4 cents.

The war-time prices I have just quoted are for pure wheat-flour bread. In portions of German and Austria potato flour and wheat flour are being mixed at the present time, and a bread still cheaper than this is being manufactured. Under these circumstances it is difficult to understand under any rule of ordinary common honesty why the large commercial bakers of the country propose to increase the cost of a loaf of bread. There is absolutely no reason for it except that the rapidly forming Food Trust in the United States demands even larger profits than the unreasonably large profits now accruing to them.

PRICE OF WHEAT BREAD IN ARGENTINA.

Yesterday a representative of this administration in Argentina called attention to the fact that under the direction of the Government wheat bread was being sold at less than 9 cents for 38 ounces without the loss of a single cent.

CHICAGO PACKERS LEADING THE MOVEMENT.

Paul Schultz, the executive head of one of Chicago's largest baking concerns, seems to be conducting the publicity campaign and is at the head of the movement in this country to increase the price of bread. In a recent interview given out by him he insists that—

If flour prices remain at their present high figure, and I fear they will go higher, it will be impossible for bakers to sell the small-size loaf for 5 cents.

And in his interview he gives out the information that bakers throughout the country are preparing to act concertedly in advancing the price of a 5-cent loaf of bread to 6 cents. This interview was given out on August 17, 1916. At the present time the best standard spring wheat patent flours are selling at from $7.90 to $8.75 per barrel. It is exceedingly difficult to understand why if 13 ounces of bread made in Munster, Ireland, can be sold to the ultimate consumer for 4 cents, made out of Minneapolis flour at $11 per barrel, the price of 13 ounces of bread, made out of Minneapolis flour at $8.75 per barrel in the United States, should be increased at the present time to 6 cents per loaf. In this connection it is interesting to note that the Chicago packers, who control the meat supply of the country, are declaring dividends on their capital stock of from 18 per cent to 77 per cent a year, and it is interesting to note that the firm of Swift & Co., which in 1914 paid a dividend on its capital stock of over $5,000,000 and in 1915 paid a like dividend, and during those two years added to their surplus nearly $13,000,000, control the Schultz Baking Co. in Chicago, which is leading in this movement for a 6-cent loaf. Therefore the packing interests in Chicago are leading the movement in the United States for a 6-cent loaf of bread.

MIXED FLOUR.

The Spanish-American War-tax measure of 1898 imposed a tax of 4 cents a barrel on mixed flour, and an occupation tax of $12 per year. It was discovered in the early nineties that 20 per cent of corn flour and 80 per cent of wheat flour made a most excellent bread mixture, and from a mixture of that kind a loaf of bread could be made as valuable for human food and hardly to be distinguished from bread made from pure wheat flour. A new industry commenced to develop in the country and wheat flour and corn flour were mixed and sold as flour. About that time there was also an attempt to place on the market mineral adulterants. All this lead to the insertion of the mixed-flour tax in the Spanish-American War tax measure of 4 cents per barrel. Every vestige of the Spanish-American War tax disappeared long ago except this tax of 4 cents per barrel on mixed flour. It has never yielded a revenue.

In 1899 it yielded nearly $8,000, and at that time there were 116 persons or firms engaged in the business of manufacturing, packing, or repacking mixed flour. By 1905, however, the total collections amounted to only $1,600, and there were only 17 persons engaged in the business. In 1915, on account of the great price differences between corn and wheat, 35 persons or firms were engaged in the business, and a little over $5,000 was collected. It has never been a revenue measure, and it has always cost more than the amount collected to collect the tax. The effect of the tax and the moonshine whisky regulations which go with it, to wit, the destruction of containers, the keeping of books, and so forth, has completely destroyed the business. The small amount of tax collected is collected principally from the makers of the so-called health flours and the makers of pancake flours. I introduced in the last Congress a bill to repeal the tax on mixed flour used in the manufacture of health flours and pancake flours. Later on I introduced a bill in the House to remove the entire tax. The objection made to this throughout the country was that it might permit adulterations of flour and might permit again the sale of mixed flours at home and abroad under representations that the packages contained pure wheat flour. I thereupon drew the bill upon which hearings have been had before the Ways and Means Committee, and which bill is now pending before that committee. The repeal of the mixed-flour tax has been recommended by the Treasury Department, and the mixing of corn flour and wheat flour has been recommended by the Agricultural Department in numerous press bulletins issued by them. The pending bill, known as the "Rainey mixed-flour bill," requires that mixed flour shall contain only the product of wheat or wheat flour ground and mixed together with the product of other grains, and the bill requires that the packages containing it be labeled "Mixed flour," and the percentage of the ingredients be plainly and conspicuously marked upon the package. It is impossible under the mixed-flour bill to mix mineral substances with mixed flour. This can be done, however, under the mixed-flour law as it now stands. At the present time, on account of the existing mixed-flour law, no mixed flour is made in this country for the purpose of making bread, except for the purpose of making the pancake flours and the health flours to which I have called attention. Some corn flour is made, however, for other purposes. Notwithstanding the fact that my bill has been indorsed by farmers' organizations throughout the country and by the food departments of various States—in fact, by almost every agency to which the proposition has been submitted—it is being fought most vigorously by the wheat millers of the country and by the commercial bakers, headed by the Schultz Baking Co., of Chicago, by the Minneapolis millers, the Minneapolis Board of Trade, and by the wheat elevator interests of the country generally.

WHAT THE RAINEY MIXED-FLOUR BILL WILL ACCOMPLISH.

If the mixed-flour bill should become a law, it will increase at once the available bread supply of the country 20 per cent, and if the mixed-flour bill should pass, there will be no 6-cent bread. The Chicago packers, the Minneapolis millers, and the wheat elevators of the country together make up the food menace in the United States to-day. The assistance of small bakers throughout the United States is being invoked in the movement, and the assistance of the smaller wheat millers throughout the country. Some Members of Congress have received as many as 100 telegrams from millers in their districts, who know nothing at all about this bill, protesting against its passage. The milling papers of the country, influenced by their advertisers, are almost without exception advancing the interests of the rapidly forming Food Trust of the country and protesting first of all against the mixed-flour bill. Throughout the corn belt of the country small wheat millers with waving fields of corn growing up to their very doors are protesting most violently against the passage of the mixed-flour bill. They accept the advice of the rapidly forming Food Trust of the country, as contained in the trade papers they receive, and blindly protest against the passage of a measure of which they will be the principal beneficiaries.

THE FIGHT FOR CHEAPER BREAD.

The movement in the world for cheaper bread has always been attended by such opposition as this. It was claimed that the use of iron and steel plows poisoned the land, and for that reason wooden plows should not be abandoned. It was claimed that steam power for thrashing machines would lessen the price of the horses the farmers might have to sell, and for that reason the old horsepow methods should prevail. The mobs which followed Cyrus H. McCormick through a Virginia field as he demonstrated his first reaper protested against this device upon the theory that it would deprive them of the right to labor, and it was 10 years before he succeeded in selling any of his machines. The millers of the country fought most violently the displacement of the old burstones by roller mills, and the modern system of roller mills was only adopted after a long fight; and so to-day we find wheat millers in the corn belt of the country protesting against the adoption of a measure which will place upon the market a perfectly wholesome flour under regulations which will make it the purest flour known to the trade, as well as the cheapest. The Minneapolis millers, the elevator interest, and the great commercial bakeries understand the situation. They realize the menace presented by this bill to the enormous profits they now enjoy, and the small wheat millers of the country seem inclined, without investigating things for themselves, to accept as true the statements made to them by the larger millers.

THE REASON FOR THE OPPOSITION TO MIXED FLOUR.

In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee Gov. Lind, of Minnesota, representing the milling interests of his section, very frankly admitted that those interests were prospering, that it was not the tax that prevented the mixing of wheat flour and corn flour, but it was the odium carried by the Government stamps and the implication of impurity which saved them from competition with mixed flour, and this was the reason they did not want the stamps removed. Therefore at the present time we are keeping off the market, by taxing it and imposing upon it moonshine whisky requirements, a perfectly wholesome food product—a loaf of bread made out of mixed flour that will contain 16 ounces and sell for 5 cents.

MIXING GRAIN.

Alison Secor, in Successful Farming for February, 1916, calls attention to a mixing process at the Duluth elevators which prevails throughout the country. In 1902 the Duluth elevators took in 15,000,000 bushels of No. 1 northern wheat and shipped out 19,000,000 bushels of the same kind of wheat. They took in 19,000,000 bushels of No. 2 northern wheat in that year and shipped out only 15,000,000 bushels. They took in 892,000 bushels of rejected wheat and shipped out 94,000 bushels of rejected wheat. They took in 2,500,000 bushels of no-grade and shipped out only 268,000 bushels of no-grade wheat. In 1904 the Duluth elevators took in 12,500,000 bushels of No. 1 northern wheat and by a sleight-of-hand process shipped out 18,000,000 bushels. In that year they took in 2,500,000 bushels of No. 2 northern wheat but shipped out only 283,000 bushels. What happened at Duluth is going on throughout the country in the larger elevators. The way in which this is accomplished is that they simply mixed the rejected wheat and the no-grade wheat with the No. 1 northern and the No. 2 northern, and the result is that in these two years they shipped out at Duluth many million bushels more of No. 1 northern wheat than they took in. By the method in vogue of grading wheat at the great elevators wheat farmers are robbed and the Food Trust reaps enormous profits, and yet the same interests which mix wheat of different grades or of no grade in the great elevators of the country are opposed, all of them, to the mixed-flour bill, which would permit the sale on the market of perfectly pure corn flour and perfectly pure wheat flour combined. The process of mixing different grades of wheat which goes on in the elevators of the country goes on, of course, in the large flour mills of the country, and perhaps also in many of the smaller flour mills, and yet these industries, which consider that sort of practice perfectly proper, are objecting most strenuously to this bill which means cheaper bread.

OUR PRINCIPAL PRODUCT.

We raise more corn than can ever be raised in all the rest of the world. We have a monopoly of the world's supply of corn. Wheat, however, is a world crop. They raise half as much wheat in France as we raise in the United States. They raise in Europe three times as much wheat as we raise in the United States. They have in Europe a hundred and twenty million acres of land in wheat. We have in the United States only 47,000,000 acres of wheat. James J. Hill, a short time before his death, called attention to the fact that we had completely developed our wheat lands and that the yield per acre was constantly decreasing. He also called attention to the fact that before many years pass we will be importing wheat in the United States. Notwithstanding all these facts, the Food Trust of the land continues its advocacy of the present mixed-flour tax, which operates as a discrimination against our greatest cereal. The action of the Food Trust ought to receive the severest condemnation from every farmer in the land who raises corn, whether his local wheat miller favors the retention of the mixed-flour tax or not.

OUR GREAT COMMERCIAL BAKERIES.

In the great bakeries located in our large cities we convert flour into bread cheaper than they do in any other country in the world. Our bakeries are marvels of efficiency and economy, not exceeded in this particular by the great plants of the Chicago packers. Without being touched by human hands, flour and the other ingredients which make bread are mixed, move on endless belts through ovens, and come out golden-brown loaves ready for consumption, even labeled with the trade-mark of the maker. They are gradually driving out of existence the small bakers in our smaller towns and cities who make bread by cruder methods. Thousands of carloads of bread leave our cities every morning consigned to rural communities. Bread making in our homes is getting to be a lost art. The commercial bakers of our great cities practically control the bread supply of this country to-day, and have commenced to demand already a 6-cent loaf.

WATER IN BREAD.

One reason for the opposition of the great commercial bakers to a loaf of bread made out of mixed flour is this: The loaf will be an honest loaf, and it will be impossible for it to carry as much moisture as a loaf made entirely out of wheat flour. I have in my possession a number of clippings made from milling papers, some of them being made from the Northwestern Miller, one of the principal organs of the Food Trust, others being made from the trade papers which reach bakers. The Northwestern Miller, which protests so vigorously against the iniquity of mixed flour, announces that the firms advertising in that paper are thoroughly reliable and responsible. In the issue of the Northwestern Miller of February 16 of this year the National Milling Co., of Toledo, Ohio, advises the commercial bakers of the land that they are the "strategic millers," for the reason that the "Osota flour" they manufacture will produce from 5 to 20 more loaves to the barrel than any other flour, and that if you use the flour made by this mill you will be able to "bake more loaves for less money and sell more for more money." The Star & Crescent Milling Co., of Chicago, Ill., advertise that their flour has "great water-absorption power." The Campbell Milling Co., of Owatonna, Minn., advises commercial bakers that their flour will "absorb enough water to insure the baker of the greatest number of loaves to the barrel." The Eagle Roller Mill Co., of New Ulm, Minn., advises bakers that their flour will "absorb large quantities of water." The Akin-Erskine Milling Co., of Evansville, Ind., advises bakers that they produce "a thirsty bread flour for bakers' use." The Acme-Evans Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., represent that their flour has "high absorption power." The Red Wing Milling Co., of Red Wing, Minn., insist that their flour is the "big bread producer." The Ismert-Hincke Milling Co., of Kansas City, Mo., advises bakers that with their "Thunderbolt" flour they can "use more water." Every one of these mills advocating this character of dishonest flour is, of course, protesting against my mixed-flour bill. Every great commercial baker in the country anxious to sell water mixed with bread is opposed to my mixed-flour bill. The weights I have made myself of bread, and to which I have called attention in this address, produced here in Washington show what can be done in the matter of weighing out water with bread. This can not be done with a loaf made out of mixed flour and the commercial bakers of the country and the great wheat millers of the country know it; therefore their opposition to the mixed-flour bill.

Durham wheat was in disrepute a few years ago. It was known as goose wheat, bastard wheat, and other opprobrious terms were applied to it. When it was found, however, that flour made out of it had tremendous water-absorption power flour made from it became at once a popular flour. Durham wheat now is more in demand than any of the northern wheats. Not many years ago milk dealers mixed water with milk but a growing public sentiment has produced a change in that particular, and the milkman who would advertise at the present time that his milk could carry more water than other milk would not find many customers.

HOW MIXED FLOUR IS MARKED UNDER THE PRESENT LAW—HOW IT WILL BE MARKED UNDER THE PROPOSED LAW.

Many of the smaller millers of the country are flooding Members of Congress with letters and telegrams asking them to vote against the Rainey mixed-flour bill, for the reason that if the present tax is repealed it will be possible to mix mineral substances with mixed flour, and most of these smaller millers have been lead to believe, by the misrepresentations in the trade papers controlled by the rapidly growing Food Trust of the country, that this would be true. As as a matter of fact, mineral substances if not injurious to health can be included now in mixed flour under the law this bill seeks to repeal. The only thing which prevents the addition of mineral substances to pure-wheat flour or mixed flour is the pure food law of 1906. This is the only law which has prevented injurious food adulterations so common prior to its enactment. Under the proposed mixed-flour law nothing can be mixed in making flour except wheat flour and the flour of some other grain. It will be impossible under its terms to mix anything with it except leavening agents; and leavening agents consist merely of such substances as salt, bicarbonate of soda, and so forth, which are now contained in the self-raising flours used for the purpose of making biscuits, pancakes, and so forth, sold in small packages. Under the testimony of departmental officials, produced at the hearing before the Ways and Means Committee under the present mixed-flour law, a sack of mixed flour labeled as indicated on the card I now produce would be sufficiently marked:

Doe's best fancy patent flour, 49 pounds net. Richard Doe & Co., Minneapolis, Minn. Mixed flour: Wheat and corn flour.

Under the proposed mixed-flour law the labeling would be as indicated on the card I now display, under the testimony of departmental officials, which reads as follows:

Fourty-nine pounds net. Star brand mixed flour: Corn flour 20 per cent, wheat flour 80 per cent, John Doe & Co., Chicago.

I respectfully submit that the labeling under my proposed bill is much more satisfactory and stronger than that provided for in the existing law.

MINERAL SUBSTANCES IN FLOUR.

Recently I addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a letter containing four questions and received his answer to the same. The questions had reference to the mixed-flour bill now pending (H. R. 9409, 64th Cong., 1st sess.). The questions and answers are as follows:

1. Question. Under the definition of mixed flour therein contained can any mineral substances be added to the product sold under the designation mixed flour as provided in the bill, whether injurious to health or not?

1. Answer. Under the definition of mixed flour as provided in this bill, no mineral substance whether injurious or not, could be legally added to a product sold under the name of mixed flour, unless the clause on line 14, page 2, "Whether the same contains a leavening agent or not," offers a loop hole for this to be done, as the term "leavening agent" might possibly be construed so broadly as to include some mineral substances. For instance, under a technical and chemical definition certain leavening agents, such as salt, bicarbonate of soda, etc., might be termed "mineral substances or compounds."

2. Question. Under the definition and under the labeling provided for in this bill can any products other than such food products as may be obtained from the grinding or mixing together of wheat or wheat flour with any other grain or with the product of any other grain be included in any package sold as mixed flour?

2. Answer. This is answered in part by the first. The definition and labeling provided for by this bill would limit the term "mixed flour" to a product composed of wheat or wheat flour mixed with other grains, or the product of other grains.

3. Question. It is insisted that a number of years ago mineraline and similar products were mixed with flour. If the bill H. R. 9409 is enacted into law will it be possible to mix with the product known as mixed-flour mineraline or similar products whether injurious to health or not?

3 Answer This office has received no direct official information of the use of mineraline as an adulterant of flour.

If H. R. 9409 is enacted into law it will prevent the use of such substance as mineraline in flour or mixed flour, unless it is combined with some other ingredient and used under the provision permitting a leavening agent.

4. Question. Under the pure-food laws as they now stand is it possible to mix mineraline marble ground into flour, or similar materials with flour provided said products are not injurious to health?

4 Answer This office is not in a position to answer this question concerning the effectiveness of the present pure-food laws, as these are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, but if this question refers to the internal-revenue acts relating to mixed flour, there is nothing in this act to prevent the use of mineraline, marble dust, or any other substance in mixed flour if any manufacturer desired to use the same, pay the tax on the product, and brand it as required by the law and regulations.

If any manufacturer at the present time should use a deleterious substance in mixed flour, the only law, if any, to which resort could be made to prevent such practice, would be the pure-food law, act of June 30, 1906, as the act of June 13, 1898, as amended, would not cover such a case.

RECENT CONVENTION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MASTER BAKERS.

This convention met in Salt Lake City a short time ago. The Bakers' Weekly, in its convention issue of August 19, calls attention to the fact that President Burns of the association, in his keynote speech, announced that a "comprehensive publicity campaign" would be inaugurated for a higher selling price of bread "which would require many thousands of dollars," but the master bakers were assured that arrangements had been made to raise the necessary funds.

The statement of the treasurer submitted at that convention showed that in 11 months which preceded the 1st day of August, 1916, he had collected in dues a little over $9.000 and in that period of time had expended considerably over $13,000. There seems, however, to have been some cash in bank on the last day of August, 1915, which prevented a deficit. The statement shows that during that period of time over $4,000 was expended in salaries. It is therefore apparent that this organization is not in a position to pay for a publicity campaign costing many thousands of dollars out of its funds. Just why a publicity campaign is necessary in order to bring about simultaneously throughout the country an increase in the price to the consumer of a loaf of bread is not easily understood. An examination, however, into recent events makes the whole matter plain enough. The campaign, however, is going on at the present time. Anyone who reads the papers can see what it is and where this enormous publicity fund, in part at least, may be obtained.

WHAT THE CHICAGO PACKERS HAVE TO DO WITH THE PROPOSED INCREASE IN THE PRICE OF BREAD.

On August 16 the Associated Press carried the interview with Paul Schultz, head of one of the largest baking concerns in the world, to which I have called attention. Representatives of the Swift Packing Co. interests own controlling shares of stock in this bakery. Mr. Schultz, in this interview, said, "Bakers throughout the country are preparing to act concertedly in advancing the price of a 5-cent loaf of bread to 6 cents. The advance may come within the next two weeks." With this interview the publicity campaign announced by the president of the Association of Master Bakers commenced, and every newspaper in the country to-day is discussing the proposed increase in the price of bread. In this way the concerted action mentioned by President Burns is brought about. They expect that small country bakers, who sell an honest loaf of bread at an honest price, will join in this Nation-wide movement. Already in a few localities in the country the price of bread has been increased to 6 cents a loaf, and it is hoped by the bakers that the movement will continue.

Part of the propaganda was to expel from the National Association of Master Bakers the Columbus Laboratories of Chicago. The Columbus Laboratories have been admitted to associate membership. Dr. Wesener, of the Columbus Laboratories, had testified before the Ways and Means Committee in the hearing on the mixed-flour bill that under the proposed bill mineral substances could not be used, and that flour made out of pure wheat flour mixed with corn flour would make a pure food suitable for human consumption. Dr. Wesener is a chemist of world-wide reputation and one of the greatest food experts in the United States. This was the offense committed by the Columbus Laboratories. This firm was expelled, and their expulsion is being published in all the papers that reach bakers, in order to more completely terrorize the members of that organization.

It is interesting to note in this connection that a great commercial bakery, which has its establishments in New York, Brooklyn, Cambridge, and other cities, recently admitted to Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, that a certain brand of flour used in making bread put out by this bakery contained gypsum or plaster of Paris. This firm belongs to the National Association of Master Bakers, and was represented at the Salt Lake City convention, and there was not the slightest protest at that convention against this kind of food adulteration, and yet the report of the convention bristles with resolutions, reports, and speeches protesting against the mixing of perfectly wholesome corn flour and wheat flour.

The publicity campaign, which is to cost thousands of dollars, is on at the present time. The packers, the Minneapolis millers, and the great commercial bakers of the country seem about to win their fight for higher prices for bread. They can only be prevented from doing it at the present time by an aroused public sentiment and by removing the restrictions placed in this country upon a perfectly wholesome product created by the mixing of corn flour and wheat flour.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask who is next on the Speaker's list?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Next on the list is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to inquire if he is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is not present. Next after him is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS].

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to inquire if he is present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not.

Mr. RAINEY. That completes the program on our side for to-day, I believe.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. RAINEY. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I would like a few minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will take only a few minutes.

Mr. KEATING. I will reserve the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FREE TRADE IN FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have listened this afternoon to a number of political speeches. I have been entertained and instructed. The other day I was down in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. In that wonderful workshop I witnessed the employees manufacturing paper money of all kinds, stamps, and so forth. I came to one division where it was the duty of the employees to detect imperfections in the work the others had done. Like these employees, it is the duty of the Republicans at this time to point out the imperfections in the policies and in the management of national affairs by the party now in power. In the Bureau of Printing and Engraving it is necessary that those people whose business it is to point out the errors, mistakes, and imperfections of others shall have a high degree of skill. They must be experts.

But that is a qualification we Republicans as critics do not need to possess. It does not require a high degree of skill to point out the mistakes and blunders of the present Democratic administration or to show the imperfections of its economic policies.

There was a bill called up in the House this morning (H. R. 17350) entitled "A bill to promote export trade." There is another bill which has passed both Houses of Congress, but which has not become a law, which is known as the administration shipping bill. The object of this bill is to promote export trade. These bills have a good purpose in view. There never has been a time during the last half century when there was so great a need of promoting export trade. The shipping bill proposes to appropriate $50,000,000 to aid in the purchase or construction of merchant ships. The other bill to which I referred repeals the antitrust law and permits the organization and operation of trusts or combines among American manufacturers and producers who are engaged entirely in export trade. Without passing on the merits of these two measures, in my opinion they will not accomplish their purpose so long as this Nation follows the present Democratic economic policies.

The fact is that outside of Europe, where the favorable trade conditions are entirely the result of the European war, our foreign trade is in a deplorable condition, and has been going from bad to worse since the tariff-for-revenue-only policy of the present administration went into effect.

In the fiscal year of 1913 this country in its trade with non-European countries had a favorable trade balance of $66,667,538. In other words, in our trade in that year with non-European nations we made $66,667,538 net profit. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, in our trade with non-European countries there was an unfavorable trade balance against us of $247,155,325. We lost this amount in our trade with non-European nations in 1916. In going from a favorable trade balance to an unfavorable trade balance in the amounts indicated above means an annual loss to us in net profits of $313,822,863. Taking all non-European countries in groups, including North America, South America, Asia, Africa, and Oceania, and comparing our favorable trade balances of 1914, 1915, and 1916 with our favorable trade balances with these countries in 1913, the United States has had a net loss in its favorable trade balance of $830,060,751. Excluding Russia in Asia, where war orders have enormously increased our exports, our total net loss in favorable trade balance for these three years has been $962,944,138. Now, the way to regain our profitable trade balance with these countries is to return to the Republican protective tariff policy under which the United States for half a century enjoyed the most profitable trade balance that has ever been carried on by any nation in the history of the world.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that we would have exported a good deal more from the United States if it had not been for the British black list, under which Americans can not export in American ships from American ports goods to South America?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have no doubt that the course that some nations have been pursuing has had some bad effect upon our export trade; but I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the "black list" has only been in force a few weeks, while the loss of the foreign trade has been going on since October 3, 1913, when the new tariff policy was put in force, so it can not be charged to the "black list."

But, Mr. Speaker, the tariff-for-revenue-only policy has not only destroyed our profitable trade with non-European countries but it has had an injurious effect upon our two great fundamental industries, namely, agriculture and manufacturing. The Underwood Tariff Act was approved October 3, 1913. It is a tariff-for-revenue-only measure. I did not vote for it, because I believe in a protective tariff policy. A number of gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle have boasted of the good times we are now having, and, of course, attribute present business conditions to the effect of Democratic policies. I do not care to make a political speech in this House and I certainly shall not make a partisan speech anywhere.

I do not, however, believe in free trade or in a tariff for revenue only. I believe in the policy of protection. The prosperity we have now, all candid men will admit, has been brought about by the large demand the European war has made for both our manufactured products and the products of the farm. The war orders have stimulated the work of the factory and the farm. The increased demand has greatly enhanced the price of farm products as well as the products of our mills, mines, and factories. Thousands of men engaged in various fields of labor have been called home to Europe to join the colors in the armies of Europe. The war has also largely stopped immigration, so that from this source labor has not received the usual increase of supply.

The result has been to make labor scarce, and as the general result wages have increased. All this is only temporary. The European war will not last always. We all devoutly hope it will soon end. But when the European war closes things will be different. We must go back to normal conditions. The 30,000,000 men now in arms in Europe will return to the avocations of peace. The abnormal and extraordinary demands for our goods, merchandise, munitions, war supplies of all kinds, and including the great demand for farm products and foodstuffs will cease. The demand for labor will not be so great. The tendency will be to reduce wages. The war market now boosting the price of farm products will not exist. That the prices of farm products will go down is certain. The farmers of this country should also bear in mind that the European war has taken the surplus supply of farm products from every neutral country in the world. But when this great war is over, the countries which have a surplus of farm products will be seeking a market. Now, this brings me down to the main question I wish to discuss.

The tariff law, approved October 3, 1913, so far as farm products are concerned, establishes a free-trade policy. The chief farm-products are placed on the free list. I do not believe that free trade in farm products is a good thing for our farmers or a good thing for our country. I think the farmers of the United States, before they cast their votes for President and for Representatives and Senators in Congress should know the facts, reach a conclusion as to what policy they think will best serve their interests, and then vote accordingly. Most of my constituents are farmers. I represent an agricultural district. The people who live in the cities, towns, and villages of my district are dependent upon the wealth produced by our farmers. Under no circumstances would I cast a vote which I thought was inimical to the welfare of my constituents. In politics my constituents are fairly evenly divided. I am desirous of serving all my constituents regardless of politics. But I can not understand how farmers, living in the same State, in the same county, and the same community can hold opposite views on the question of whether or not there shall be some protection in the home market for the American farmers. I do not comprehend how an American farmer can vote for free trade in farm products—vote to give the farmers of Canada, of Mexico, of all the Central and South American Republics, and of Australia, New Zealand, and China and Japan free access to their markets.

The American farmers know that in Canada, in Mexico, in the Central and South American Republics, and in Australia and New Zealand land is cheaper, farm labor is cheaper, the cost of production is less, the standard of living is lower, and that especially in Mexico and in the Central and South American Republics the character of citizenship is far inferior. I can not see how the farmers of the United States should want to be placed in free competition with these countries and their people. Yet, I fear that many good American farmers will go to the polls on election day and vote for the Democratic candidate for President and for Democratic candidates for Representatives and Senators in Congress, knowing these men, if elected, will vote to perpetuate the present policy of free trade in farm products. I know why the tariff was taken off of farm products. It was done to gain political favor with the millions of voters living in the great cities. I do not believe in building up antagonism between those who live in our great centers of population and those who live in agricultural districts. But the farmers of the United States and those who live in the smaller towns and cities, where agriculture is the chief source of wealth for everybody, should be keenly alive to their own interests and to the prosperity of the great industry which sustains them. It must not be forgotten that the great commercial, industrial, and financial interests centered in our great cities look out for their interests. The farmers, on economic policies, which vitally affect their industry, their prosperity, and their welfare, should vote together.

I shall now submit a table. The left-hand column shows the rates of duty upon farm products under the Republican tariff law of 1909, and the right-hand column shows the rate of duty under the Democratic tariff act approved October 3, 1913:

AGRICULTURAL ARTICLES.

Under act of 1909.	Under act of Oct. 3, 1913.
CATTLE.
Cattle, if less than 1 year old, $2 per head; all other cattle, if valued at not more than $14 per head, $3.75 per head; if valued at more than $14 per head, 27½ per cent ad valorem.	Free list (except when such importations would spread disease among cattle of the United States).
SWINE.
$1.50 per head.	Free list.
HORSES AND MULES.
Horses and mules valued at $150 or less per head, $30 per head; if valued at over $150, 25 per cent ad valorem.	10 per cent ad valorem.
SHEEP.
Sheep 1 year old or over, $1.50 per head; less than 1 year old, 75 cents per head.	Free list.
POULTRY.
Poultry, live, 3 cents per pound; dead, 5 cents per pound.	Poultry, live, 1 cent per pound; dead, 2 cents per pound.
BROOM CORN.
$3 per ton.	Free list.
CORN.
15 cents per bushel.	Free list.
CORN MEAL.
40 cents per 100 pounds.	Free list.
OATS.
15 cents per bushel.	6 cents per bushel.
OATMEAL AND ROLLED OATS.
1 cent a pound ($1 per 100 pounds).	30 cents per 100 pounds.
OAT HULLS.
10 cents per 100 pounds.	8 cents per 100 pounds.
BUTTER AND SUBSTITUTES.
6 cents per pound.	2½ cents per pound.
RYE.
10 cents per bushel.	Free list.
MILK.
2 cents per gallon.	Free list.
EGGS.
5 cents per dozen.	Free list.
POTATOES.
25 cents per bushel.	Free list.
HAY.
$4 per ton.	$2 per ton.
APPLES, PEACHES, ETC.
25 cents per bushel.	10 cents per bushel.
PEANUTS.
Unshelled, one-half of 1 cent per pound. Shelled, 1 cent per pound.	Unshelled, three-eighths of 1 cent per pound. Shelled, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound
BACON AND HAMS.
4 cents per pound.	Free list.
FRESH BEEF, PORK, ETC.
Fresh beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork, 1½ cents per pound.	Free list.
WOOL.
First class, 11 cents per pound. Second class, 12 cents per pound. Third class, 4 cents per pound (when valued at less than 12 cents per pound).	Free list.
WHEAT.
25 cents per bushel.	Free list.
WHEAT FLOUR.
25 per cent ad valorem.	Free list.
BISCUIT AND BREAD.
25 per cent ad valorem.	Free list.
MEATS.
Not specially provided for, 1½ cents per pound.	Free list.

From the foregoing table it will be observed that cattle, swine, sheep, poultry, corn, corn meal, rye, milk, eggs, potatoes, bacon and hams, fresh beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork, wool, wheat, wheat flour, biscuit and bread, and meats were placed on the free list. There is a countervailing duty on wheat, but this is not protection to the American wheat producers, as it is within the power of the foreign Government to remove this duty at any time and obtain free access to our markets. Besides, the countervailing duty may not be sufficiently high to afford the necessary protection to the American wheat producers.

Upon the other articles mentioned in the above list the duties have been reduced to such a point that they will not afford adequate protection to American farmers.

On September 30, 1913, when the Underwood tariff bill was pending, I protested against the policy of free trade in farm products as being an injustice to American farmers. I predicted that the effect of this free-trade policy would result in a large increase in the importation of farm products to be sold in the markets of the United States in competition with the products of our own farms. As shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, among other things, I said:

"The reduction of the duty on many farm products below the point of protection and the placing of all other farm products on the free list will largely increase the importation of such products. These importations will come from Canada, Australia, Cuba, Mexico, South American Republics, and from every other country that has cheap lands, cheap labor, cheap living, or cheap men. The supply of farm products in the United States will be greatly augmented. These imported farm products will be on sale in all the great markets of the United States in competition with the farm products of Oklahoma and of all other States of the Union. These imported farm products will come in the main from countries where land is cheaper than it is generally in the United States, where the cost of production is less, where farmers receive less compensation for their services, where farmers and their families live on a low standard and occupy an inferior social position. All this must have a tendency to lower the price of lands in the United States, to reduce the compensation which our farmers receive for labor upon the farm, and to place our farmers and their families in their manner of living and the social position they occupy upon a level with the poorest and most ignorant farmers of the world."

The prediction which I made came true. There was a large increase in the importation of various kinds of farm products.

Under the Republican tariff law of 1909, during the months of October, November, and December of 1912, and January of 1913, there were imported into the United States 250,000 bushels of corn. In the same months of October, November, and December of 1913, and January of 1914, under the free-trade policy established under the Underwood tariff law, there were imported into the United States 7,034,159 bushels of corn. This importation of corn came from Argentina, one of the progressive and rapidly growing South American Republics. Argentina has a vast area and has wonderful opportunities for the expansion of agricultural interests.

During the same months for 1912 and 1913 the importation of oats was 23,580 bushels and under the present law in the same months in 1913 and 1914 the importation of oats was 16,194,145 bushels.

During the same months in 1912 and 1913 butter to the value of $122,000 was imported into the United States. During the same months for 1913 and 1914 butter to the value of $1,631,000 was imported into the United States.

Under the old law in these four months potatoes to the value of $84,000 were imported and during the same four months in 1913 and 1914 potatoes to the value of $1,476,000 were imported into the United States.

Under the old law there were no importations of eggs during the four months of 1912, but during the four months of 1913 and 1914 $612,000 worth of eggs were imported into the United States. Grouped together—10 agricultural products—the total importations in 1912 and 1913 under the old law in these four months were valued at $14,503,000—while under the new law—for these 10 agricultural products—the importations were valued at $54,750,000. I insert here a table showing the importations of the 10 farm products above referred to:

Recapitulation of imports of principal farm products during months of October, November, December, 1912, and January, 1913, and the corresponding four months of 1913–14.

Products.	1912-13	1913-14
Corn	$139,765	$4,656,213
Oats	11,704	5,626,406
Potatoes	122,309	1,031,759
Animals	3,464,392	12,278,166
Breadstuffs	5,364,523	18,534,956
Eggs		612,759
Beans	141,728	331,730
Peas	160,370	268,634
Wool	3,545,669	5,219,138
Woolens	1,468,228	4,668,349
Total	14,503,330	54,706,929

August 1, 1914, the European war broke out, as I have heretofore pointed out, and this war created extraordinary demands for many kinds of farm products not only in the United States but in the Central and South American Republics, and in Australia, and in every neutral country. This demand not only stimulated exports of farm products from the United States to European countries but stimulated the exportation of farm products from every other neutral country to the European countries at war. The effect of the war, therefore, was to check the importation of farm products into the United States.

However, the European war has not entirely overcome the inflow of farm products into the markets of the United States in competition with the products of her own farms. This is shown by the following statistics published by the Department of Commerce. The importation of all kinds of foodstuffs, including food animals, into the United States for 1913 to 1916 were as follows:

Imports of all foodstuffs, including food animals.

1913	$405,719,720
1914	475,591,950
1915	509,654,655
1916	561,542,511
In 1914, increase over 1913	69,872,230
In 1915, increase over 1913	103,934,935
In 1916, increase over 1913	155,822,791
Total for 3 years	329,629,956

An examination of the above table shows that the imports of all kinds of foodstuffs and food animals for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, were $69,872,230 in excess of the imports of such articles for 1913; the imports for 1915 were $103,934,935 in excess of 1913; and the imports for the fiscal year 1916 were $155,822,791 in excess of 1913. The total increase in the value of the imports of all kinds of foodstuffs and food animals in 1914, 1915, and 1916, compared with 1913, was $329,629,956. The result has been as I predicted. Since we have adopted the policy of free trade in farm products we have largely increased our purchases of foodstuffs and food animals from abroad. The increase has averaged more than $100,000,000 annually. This great influx of farm products from other countries has come notwithstanding the demands created by the European war. Had times been normal the importations of food products would have been much larger. Now, this extra $329,000,000 was sent abroad to help the farmers of other countries. It should have gone to our own farmers. Fortunately for our farmers the demands of the European war have in a large measure counteracted the natural effect of the free trade in farm products policy. It has limited importations and made prices high. But the intelligent farmers of the United States know the war will soon end and that the flow of farm products from other countries will come with ever-increasing volume.

DECLINE OF PRICES.

With an increased supply, with no material increase in the demand, and with a diminished and restricted market, naturally, logically, and inevitably there will be a decline in the prices of farm products in the markets of the United States.

The problem of prices is as important as the problem of production. The profits of the farmer depend as much upon the prices he receives as upon the quantity of his products. The annual wealth produced by the farmers of Oklahoma is not measured in pounds and bushels but in dollars and cents. Any marked decline in the price of farm products in the United States would be a public calamity. No one can with any accuracy foretell how much decline there will be in the prices of farm products of the United States as a result of the new tariff policy. But before we enact any legislation that will tend to reduce the prices of farm products we should carefully estimate the possibilities of loss to our farmers. Take my own State, Oklahoma. Our annual farm products are valued at approximately $250,000,000. If the new tariff policy would cause a reduction in price of only 1 per cent, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $2,500,000; if prices declined 5 per cent, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $12,500,000; and if prices should decline 10 per cent, which is not improbable, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $25,000,000. If this annual loss should continue for four years in succession it would entail a loss upon the farmers of Oklahoma of $100,000,000—one-fourth the amount that it has cost to build the Panama Canal.

A reduction of 10 per cent in the prices of farm products of the entire country would mean an annual loss to the farmers of the United States of $900,000,000. Should these low prices continue for a period of five years the farmers of the United States will have lost the incomprehensible sum of $4,500,000,000—a sum that is four times the total interest-bearing national debt and a sum larger than the total amount paid in pensions to the soldiers of this country and their widows and orphans since the Revolutionary War.

FARMERS HELPLESS.

When prices are low the farmers have no means within their power to arbitrarily advance them. It is different in many other lines of business. When transportation rates are low the great interstate railway companies may secure an advance of rates to insure profits. When the prices of manufactured products are low the great industrial corporations, having large monopolistic power, may at their will increase prices to enable them to declare proper dividends. When business is dull the bankers who have in custody the money of the people may at their pleasure adjust interest rates to make their business profitable. When trade is slack the merchants may mark their prices up or down to meet the conditions of business. When wages are low, hours of labor long, and conditions of labor unsatisfactory, organized labor may, through mediation, conciliation, and arbitration, or, finally, by a strike, secure redress of grievances. How different with the farmer! When farm products are low, hours of labor long, or when labor conditions are unfavorable to health and comfort, they have no alternative except to sell at the market price, toil on 16 hours per day, contending with the elements, facing storm and drought, patiently bearing their burdens, until a better day shall come.

I believe free trade in farm products is unjust to the farmers, and I believe it is an unwise policy for the Nation. We are appropriating vast sums in the line of preparedness and increasing the Military and Navy Establishments, but we really can not be prepared unless we are self-sufficient as a nation, and above all we ought to provide our own food, we ought to feed our own people. If you pursue a policy of free trade in farm products, you are pursuing a policy which discourages the farmer, reduces the prices of his products and the profits of his business, which restricts and limits the amount of the products of his farm, and I believe it is wholly unwise.

This Congress has passed a rural-credit bill, which I think is the greatest of the measures we have passed; and yet if free trade in farm products should go on permanently as the policy of the Nation, the farmers will lose more through that than they gain through the rural-credit system, even if the Government should lend the farmers money free.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Does the gentleman understand that as long as the export surplus must go to foreign countries that the price of that surplus sets the price at home, and that the tariff in no way relieves the farmer?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Now, I am surprised that a gentleman usually sound in economics as is the gentleman from Texas, should really present that idea.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the bulletin boards in Liverpool set the price of cotton before the farmer in the South gets up every morning on God's earth, and set the price of wheat before the wheat raiser gets up, and the message comes on the cable line setting the price in this country?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not know so much about cotton, because we export so large a percentage of our cotton crop. The European market doubtless affects the price here. In other farm products we export but a small per cent of it. The home market dominates the price. The exportation of our farm products to foreign markets means more freight, more shrinkage, more commissions, more fees and charges, more exactions from middlemen, and less money for the farmer. If I were a voter and a candidate for Congress should say to me that Liverpool was a good enough market for my farm products, I would say to him that Liverpool was a good enough place in which for him to get votes, and I would give my vote to some one else. [Applause on the Republican side.] I never will vote for any tariff bill which does not give the farmer the same protection that it gives to the manufacturer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

DEVELOPMENT OF MANUFACTURING.

I now turn from agriculture to manufacturing. What will be the effect of the new tariff policy upon the development of our manufacturing interests? I will use Oklahoma as an illustration and example.

Oklahoma possesses all the natural advantages to enable it to become a great manufacturing State. She has 10,000 square miles of coal land, which are said to cover 79,000,000,000 tons of coal. She has more than 24,000 producing oil wells, adding every week more than a million of dollars to the wealth of the State. She has a natural-gas supply not equaled in any other State in the Union. In some localities immense water power may be developed. At the very minimum of cost power may be developed to turn countless wheels of thousands of mills, factories, and manufacturing establishments.

Hidden beneath the surface of the soil are vast deposits of lead, zinc, asphaltum, glass sand, cement rock, gypsum, granite, limestone, clays, shales, and other mineral awaiting the coming of men with means and men with intelligence, energy, and industry to transform this great storehouse of mineral wealth into bright, shining, golden dollars, to go out into circulation to bless and help the people of Oklahoma and to contribute to the strength and greatness and glory of this mighty Republic.

With these natural advantages in wealth-producing power manufacturing should be in equilibrium with agriculture. But manufacturing lags far behind. We have 200,000 farmers with only 18,034 persons employed in manufacturing. We have 1,100,000 people supported by agriculture with less than 100,000 supported by manufacturing. In 1910 our farmers produced over $200,000,000 in wealth, while our manufacturing establishments added to the wealth of the State but $19,529,000.

In 1910 North Carolina's 281 cotton mills added to the wealth of the State $23,992,000. We produce as much cotton as North Carolina and have cheaper fuel. In 1910 Massachusetts's 182 cotton mills added to the wealth of the State $81,305,000. Massachusetts sends thousands of miles for her cotton and transports her fuel from Pennsylvania and Canada. Oklahoma has one small cotton mill. The State will lose $40,000,000 annually until she has the mills to manufacture raw material. To defer for five years the building of these mills will be a loss to the State of $200,000,000. The new tariff will defer the building of our cotton mills. Low rates of duty will encourage importations from abroad, and the markets of the United States will be flooded with cotton goods manufactured in Europe. Our people will become patrons, customers, and supporters of foreign cotton mills.

Our lead, zinc, asphaltum, glass sand, cement rock, gypsum, granite, limestone, clays, shales, and other minerals—all found in abundance in the State—offer vast possibilities for the development, expansion, and enlargement of mining and manufacturing in Oklahoma.

But the new tariff policy makes sweeping reduction in the duty upon glass and cement and upon zinc, asphaltum, gypsum, and all the products of these minerals. Importations of these minerals from abroad will make less demand for the products of Oklahoma mines, reduce the price thereof, lessen the annual wealth obtained therefrom, and materially retard the development of our mineral resources. As a consequence our mineral wealth will lie dormant, while an ever-increasing stream of wealth goes abroad to develop the mineral resources of other countries.

Nowhere in the United States is there a more attractive field for the development of manufacturing industries than in Oklahoma. Natural advantages are great, local conditions are favorable, and the people, through their commercial clubs and other organizations, are ready to offer every reasonable encouragement and inducement to secure any substantial manufacturing establishment.

With all this in our favor, the National Government is pursuing a tariff policy that will deter men from investing capital in mills and factories in Oklahoma. Our natural advantages will count for nothing, and the efforts of our people will be in vain, while ships are daily landing in our harbors to unload great cargoes of foreign-made goods that will be distributed throughout the entire country, displayed in every shop window, and sold over every counter.

Capital will seek other lines of investment. Oklahoma's industrial progress will be delayed. Our natural resources will remain undeveloped. Our natural gas will continue to be wasted, our coal will be unmined, our gypsum, cement rock, limestone, glass sand, granite, asphalt, zinc, and lead will be unused. Our material development will be dwarfed, stunted, restricted, and circumscribed. In the long years of waiting that must follow our farms and city real estate will not advance in value, our business will not expand, our commerce will not enlarge, our villages, towns, and cities will not grow, and the people of the State will suffer incalculable loss through the unwise tariff policy pursued by the party in power.

The new tariff policy will not add an acre to the cultivated area of Oklahoma; it will not cause the erection of a single new mill, factory, or manufacturing establishment within the State; it will not build a single new railway, open a new mine or quarry, or establish a single important industry; it will not furnish a new market for or add to the price of a single product produced within the State; it will not give employment to a single additional man or in any way contribute to the material development of the State; it will not add to the wealth of the State, contribute to the happiness of the people, or aid them in the upbuilding of their institutions.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on August 23, 1916, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolutions:

H. R. 16700. An act to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913;

H. R. 15575. An act to amend the act of March 22, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes";

H. R. 11860. An act for the relief of Halvor Nilsen;

H. R. 17058. An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17398. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in said county and Commonwealth;

H. R. 15947. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15522. An act to establish a national park service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15048. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 17498. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8234. An act to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16003. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of drainage assessments on Indian lands in Oklahoma";

H. R. 14338. An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15494. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 16290. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 17501. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio;

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898; and

H. J. Res. 298. Joint resolution providing for the relief of flood sufferers in the State of West Virginia.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Tuesday, August 29, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1338); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1339); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and a joint resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1171), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DEWALT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17567) to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the East Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1172), which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1176), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 17601) to amend section 3354 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act approved June 18, 1890; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 17602) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Polk County, Minn., and Grand Forks County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 17603) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a wagon bridge across the St. Francis River at a point one-half mile northwest of Parkin, Cross County, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 17604) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept a deed of Gallops Island, in Boston Harbor, Mass., subject to certain covenants and agreements; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 17605) to amend the first and seventh paragraphs of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of April 9, 1906; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 17606) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 23, 1913; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GLASS: A bill (H. R. 17607) to amend section 6 of an act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900, as amended by the act of March 4, 1907, and by the act of March 2, 1911; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 26, 1916.

(Legislative day of Monday, August 21, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

PRINTING OF TITLES OF SPEECHES.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to correct the RECORD in a little matter. On yesterday I asked unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at some future time the titles to certain speeches that I have made on the tariff, but I did not mean to ask that the speeches themselves should be reprinted.

The reason for my request was that a technical gentleman ruled some time ago that nothing would ever appear in a reprinted speech except what was found in the RECORD. Those titles were not found in the RECORD and an index that I used was not found in the RECORD. I asked simply to have consent at some future time to print the titles and index in the RECORD so that they might be used in the reprint; that was all; but not to reprint the speeches.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. MYERS. I ask consent to submit a report from the Committee on Public Lands, and I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this bill. I understand it will provoke no debate.

Mr. OWEN. What bill is it?

Mr. BORAH. It is a public land bill to correct a mistake in the bill which we passed about three weeks ago.

Mr. MYERS. I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. 17375) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, and I submit a report (No. 820) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, be amended by adding thereto an additional section to be known as section 7:

"SEC. 7. That any person who has made or shall make homestead entry of less than 320 acres of land of the character herein described, and who shall have submitted final proof thereon, shall have the right to enter public lands subject to the provisions of this act, not contiguous to his first entry, which shall not with the original entry exceed 320 acres: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall first have been designated as subject to this act or the act of February 19, 1909 (35 Stats., p. 639), as provided by sections 1 of said acts: Provided further, That in no case shall patent issue for the land covered by such additional entry until the person making same shall have actually and in conformity with the homestead laws resided upon and cultivated the lands so additionally entered, and otherwise complied with such laws, except that where the land embraced in the additional entry is located not exceeding 20 miles from the land embraced in the original entry no residence shall be required on such additional entry if the entryman is residing on his former entry: And provided further, That this section shall not be construed as affecting any rights as to location of soldiers' additional homesteads under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I observe in the Washington Post, second page, column 5, that—Congress is getting ready to adjourn next Friday, if possible, ignoring all threats of Members to press special bill for consideration over the protests of administration leaders.

It is expected that a joint resolution to provide for adjournment Friday evening will be submitted to both Houses next week, as soon as the general deficiency appropriation bill has passed the House, probably on Tuesday. Democratic leaders declare the resolution will be adopted, and that this will operate to check a threatened prolonged fight in the Senate over the Owen corrupt-practices bill, which aroused a fusillade of charges and countercharges of political corruption Thursday.

OWEN MAY MAKE FINAL EFFORT.

Senator OWEN'S determination to demand a vote on a motion to take up the corrupt-practices bill still hangs over the Senate, and Senator SMITH of South Carolina intends to seek another opportunity to pass the immigration bill.

To clear the way for adjournment, Majority Leader KITCHIN sent urgent telegrams yesterday to all House absentees, asking that they return at once for the final legislative drive of the session. The House has the shipping bill as amended and the forthcoming revenue bill conference report to dispose of next week. In the Senate it is planned to lay aside the revenue bill to pass the deficiency appropriation bill as soon as it gets through the House.

TO RUSH REVENUE BILL THROUGH.

"When that is done," said Senator SIMMONS, chairman of the Finance Committee, "all general debate on the revenue bill will halt, and it will be rushed through. In the meantime Senate amendments to the House bill are being informally considered with Ways and Means Committee members, and a final report will be ready almost as soon as the bill reaches the House to be sent to conference. With the revenue bill passed, I do not think that anything can stop adjournment of Congress, unless something entirely unexpected should develop."

Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Finance Committee, whether there is an agreement with the Republican side or an understanding of any kind that general debate on the revenue bill will halt under those conditions?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there has been no agreement with the Members of the Senate representing the other side. There has been a great deal of formal interchange of views with a view to ascertaining what is the real legislative situation with reference to legislation and prospective adjournment.

Of course I am not to be held strictly to the representations of newspapers as to what I have stated in conversations with their reporters. However, speaking generally, while there has been no understanding, no agreement, as the result of conferences that I have held with individual Senators on the other side expressing their attitude with reference to matters discussed there, I can say to the Senator now that I have the impression from what has been said to me by representatives of the other side that there is not likely to be any final vote upon the revenue measure until after the urgent deficiency appropriation bill has come over from the House.

Now, that does not represent my attitude nor the attitude of this side. We would like to have a vote as soon as we can. We would like to take up the amendments and have action upon them——

Mr. OWEN. I so understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Without any further debate; but my understanding is—not an agreement, but my understanding from conversations that I have had with Senators on the other side—that they are not willing that the revenue bill shall come to a vote until after the urgent deficiency bill has come from the House and been acted upon by the Senate. My understanding from them is that as soon as we have finished the consideration of the amendments we can then fix by agreement if necessary with the other side a date certain or an hour certain for beginning the vote upon the bill and all the amendments to it. But until that is done our friends on the other side I understand are not willing to come to any agreement with us with reference to a time to vote on the bill.

I think I have stated the situation about as well as I can, and if I have misstated it Senators on the other side can correct me.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that as I understand it, when the amendments are to be taken up there will be a great deal of discussion upon them, and most of that discussion will be upon the Democratic side of the Chamber. Therefore, as far as I am personally concerned, I think the Senate ought to take up the bill now for action on the amendments and let those amendments be disposed of. I have heard different Senators upon the other side say that they are going to discuss the amendments at length. Therefore I take it that the best thing to do would be to take up the amendments and discuss them first before we talk about the date of final adjournment or anything else.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator to mean that until the deficiency appropriation bill is passed they will not consider any request for unanimous consent to fix a time for voting upon the revenue bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be impossible to agree on a time to vote upon the bill now. That is out of the question.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he understands that general debate on the revenue bill will halt and it will be rushed through after the date of adjournment is fixed?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not so understand, but I want to say to the Senator if the deficiency appropriation bill should come over to the Senate and be passed before the revenue bill should be and there were any Republicans who wanted to speak upon the revenue bill they are going to do so. It does not make a particle of difference whether the revenue bill is passed first or not.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has acquiesced in this proposal?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not acquiesced in anything.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It is not within the power of any Senator to cut off debate, but I desire to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that any report in the newspapers or elsewhere to the effect that any program has been agreed upon binding the Republicans as to any specific bills that are to be passed is not founded upon facts.

Mr. OWEN. I understand very well the methods of negotiation between the two sides of the Chamber, and I should like to have the country understand equally well that when leaders on the other side give a certain intimation in delicate language that is thoroughly well understood by the leaders on this side it has the effect to all intents and purposes of a binding agreement on that side. That is what it means, and it does not mean anything less than that.

Mr. BORAH. It has not a particle more effect on this side than it has upon that.

Mr. OWEN. That may be true.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will take the time to examine into the RECORD for the last three weeks, he will find that——

Mr. OWEN. I am familiar with the RECORD——

Mr. BORAH. I say to the Senator now there has been no agreement, and there will be no agreement upon the part of anyone to bind the Republicans upon this side as to a program. No one is authorized or will be authorized to make any such agreement.

Mr. OWEN. I think that may be the attitude of the Senator from Idaho, and I have no question whatever about his sentiment in regard to it as being his own opinion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator to understand that I have not stated, and I do not state now, that there has been any agreement between this side or representatives of this side and representatives of the other side.

Mr. OWEN. I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean simply to say as the result of information as to the situation which exists here, gathered from some conversations with the other side, I have assumed that when the deficiency bill was acted upon there would be no further disposition upon the part of the other side to needlessly hold this measure up.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think the country ought to know, and certainly the Senate does know, the Senate perfectly well understands, that the minority have a power to coerce and compel the majority to yield to their demands by threatening endless debate, through well-understood intimations that convey the meaning though too cowardly to assume the responsibility before the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The country ought to know and the country undoubtedly does know that there can not be any contract made without contracting parties, and there can not be any program agreed upon here without authorized representatives from both sides agreeing.

Mr. OWEN. Yes, the Senator may understand; but I do not think the country really does understand that under the rules of 1806, the lack of a previous question in the Senate, the power of unlimited debate in the Senate puts a threat in the hands of the minority that can dictate to the majority, and is dictating to the majority now to prevent the passage of the corrupt-practices act though the minority is too cowardly to confess the truth of this matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The RECORD will, in my opinion, show that during the last 90 days, for every six hours which have been utilized in debate here, four hours have been utilized by the Democratic side.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator if he has made an estimate of that kind, or if it is simply a sort of a guess?

Mr. BORAH. I will leave it to the Senator from Missouri to look at the RECORD and make the calculation himself. I have looked into it and I believe it a correct estimate.

Mr. REED. I have been away some, but when I was here I heard an awful lot of long talk on the other side of the Chamber, at least it seemed to me awfully long.

Mr. BORAH. We have been furnished to the same by the other side.

Mr. REED. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from Oklahoma, to ask the Senator a question. He has always stood, I believe, for clean politics. I think he is of that part of his political organization which has protested in the past against many of the methods employed by its management. I do not think he was in accord with the program of Mr. Hanna to fry the fat out of the protected industries and to use the funds for corrupting the electorate.

I am sure in times past and gone so far that they are almost forgotten; if the Senator was taking any part in politics, he was opposed to the Dudley program of buying voters in "blocks of five." I believe the Senator wants to see elections conducted in this country, not with money but with ideas. I want to ask him if he is not willing to cooperate in the passage of a corrupt-practices act, and if not, why not?

Mr. BORAH. Is that addressed to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I said to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] four or five days ago in the Republican cloakroom that I would vote with him at any time to take up his bill. The Senator from Oklahoma understands that.

Mr. OWEN. I do. That is true, and I am rejoiced to know that.

Mr. BORAH. And I have stood ready to do so. It is for that reason, in connection with the immigration bill, that I say that there has been no program agreed upon, and there will be no program agreed upon.

Mr. REED. I am glad to know now that the Senator from Idaho is willing to cooperate in the passage of a corrupt-practices act. There are some more Senators on the other side of the Chamber who, I hope, are in the same frame of mind. If they are, and if all Senators on the other side are willing to pass a law that will protect the ballot boxes of this country against fraud, corruption, and bribery, then this bill could be passed with but one or two days' debate.

Mr. BORAH. Now, may I ask the Senator from Missouri, will he cooperate with me in passing the immigration bill?

Mr. REED. I am opposed to the immigration bill. That is well known. I made so many speeches against it at the last session of Congress when it was up that my position can not be doubted. I am opposed to it on principle; I am opposed to it because the test that is put in the immigration bill is not a test that will protect this country against the evils we suffer from foreign immigration. I am in favor of passing a stringent immigration bill, embracing what I think is a proper test.

Now, since the Senator from Idaho has spoken, and because he has always been regarded as among the progressive Republicans, if I may trench further upon the time of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I should like to put the question pointedly, if I can do so without offense, to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and ask him if he is not willing to cooperate in the passage of a corrupt-practices act at this session?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma, I know, is thoroughly conversant with my desire in that matter. I am not only willing, but I am anxious to cooperate for the passage of an adequate corrupt-practices act, and I shall vote at any time to take up the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma. I think possibly there should be some amendments to it, in order to make it more workable; but I shall be found at all times helping in the passage of the corrupt-practices act.

Mr. REED. I felt sure that was the Senator's position.

Mr. MYERS. As the Senator from Missouri is asking questions, will he permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator from Idaho, if I agree to stay here and try to pass the immigration bill, will he agree to stay here and pass the corrupt-practices act?

Mr. BORAH. I have a couple of dates very late in October in the Senator's State, if that is what he has reference to. [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. While I am always delighted to hear the Senator from Idaho speak, I should be very glad if some program would prevent him from keeping those dates.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I feel sure I will be here helping with the immigration bill and the corrupt-practices act as long as the Senator from Montana shall remain.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, not only the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is in favor of a corrupt-practices act, as I understand, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is also in favor of it, but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], I am sure, is also in favor of it, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] certainly is in favor of it; and I think there are other Progressive Senators on the other side in favor of it. I believe that it is practically the unanimous desire on this side of the Chamber that we should have a corrupt-practices act. The only thing that stands in the way is a threat of a filibuster under cover of debate on the revenue bill from the Republican side of the Chamber. If that is not true, I should like some Senator on the other side to rise and dispute it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Oklahoma seen any evidence of a filibuster on the revenue bill? Does the Senator not think the debate has been legitimate up to the present time?

Mr. OWEN. I think that legitimate debate would have confined itself to a consideration of the bill itself and to the proposed amendments; but speeches have been made here for days of a generally discursive character. I do not think that is proper debate of a revenue bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oklahoma has set a shining example for that kind of debate.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; I may have set a shining example; but now I want a corrupt-practices act.

Mr. GALLINGER. And he has set a shining example of what one Senator can do at the end of a session as a filibusterer. The Senator has done that very successfully on one occasion.

Now, let me say this much: I know of no agreement concerning any matter of legislation as between the two sides of the Chamber, and it is not very courteous in the Senator to say that we have agreed to or that we intend to filibuster on anything. This revenue bill is a very important bill. The amendments are yet to be considered; the members of the committee have not yet given their reasons for the amendments that are in the bill. Some of us propose to discuss them, and we shall discuss them in our own way, of course, not to be dictated to by the Senator from Oklahoma or by any other Senator on either side of the Chamber.

Mr. OWEN. We perfectly well understand what that means, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, the Senator is altogether too intellectually acute; he is a mind reader of the first water when he undertakes——

Mr. OWEN. One does not have to be a mind reader, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. When he undertakes to say what Senators on this side of the Chamber propose to do. Possibly the Senator is within his rights when he charges us with a purpose that we have not assented to, and when he continues to charge us, as he has done during the past few days——

Mr. OWEN. Well, does the Senator deny that it is his purpose to prevent the passage of the corrupt-practices act?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no desire or wish to answer any question of that kind propounded by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Well, the Senator can not answer it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall take care of myself. I do not recognize the right of the Senator to ask that question.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator can not answer it; and therefore he evades it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not relevant; and it is impertinent.

Mr. OWEN. But the Senator does not answer the question. He can not answer it without saying that he will oppose the corrupt-practices act.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has no right to ask the question; he has no right to stand there and interrogate a Member of this body as to what he is going to do. He is not within his rights when he does it.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New Hampshire constantly does that very thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire does not agree to that proposition.

Mr. OWEN. I am sorry that the Senator does not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator understands my position.

Mr. OWEN. I do not; but I well know what the Senator's position is—that he is going to oppose the corrupt-practices act to a finish but that he will not say so.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oklahoma does not understand the position of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. OWEN. That is what I believe.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator may believe it.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator will not deny it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has doubtless a great many false beliefs in his alleged brain.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator will not deny it; the Senator can not deny it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not recognize the right of the Senator to interrogate me on anything.

Mr. OWEN. But the Senator does not deny it, and he can not deny it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, I will express my views at the proper time.

Mr. OWEN. After the election?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is not a very courteous question.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the comment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Well, you had better withdraw your criticisms of this side of the Chamber and attend to your own side of the Chamber.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he discovers any change of heart on the other side of this Chamber toward permitting the passage of the corrupt-practices bill?

Mr. OWEN. I have a number of times asked unanimous consent to have a day fixed for a vote upon it, but the other side constantly, through their chosen representative, the Senator from Utah, has refused consent. I now ask that one week from to-day or 10 days from to-day we may have a definite vote upon a corrupt-practices act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have been in session nine months. I have sat here through the heated term for the purpose of helping to make a quorum. The Senator from Oklahoma, who is now lecturing the Senate and assuming to lecture the minority side of the Senate, during the present session has been away a great part of the time. From the beginning of the present session of Congress to August 23, 1916, there have been 226 record votes and 283 quorum calls. The Senator from Oklahoma has responded to 90 of the quorum calls, or 31.8 per cent, and he has voted on 87 of the record votes, or 38.5 per cent. Why has not the Senator been here during these nine months to urge consideration of the measures in which he is interested?

Mr. OWEN. It is not necessary for a Senator to vote upon formal votes when he is paired. I do not respond on every vote that is had when I know, being paired, that my vote will not change the result a particle. I sit in this Chamber and do not vote in the absence of my pair, the Republican colleague of the Senator from New Hampshire, who is now absent on his campaign in New Mexico.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator could not get up his bill when he was absent from the city. The Senator has been disporting himself at the seashore, while we have been sitting here doing the best we could. But now the Senator comes in and lectures us as to what we shall do in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I was interrupted by the eloquence of the Senator from New Hampshire. I think I ought to explain to the Senator from Oklahoma why I asked the question I did.

It is very evident to me, from the recent Republican convention held in Delaware and the nominations made at that convention, that, if those nominees should be elected the Senate will probably be called upon in some proceedings before it to act in a very disagreeable way after the next election; and I want to avoid that, if I can.

We in Delaware have had a very sad experience. It has come to the point where the motto upon the flag of the Democrats of Delaware is that "A briber is a traitor and a grafter is a thief"; and that is the main plank of the Democratic platform in Delaware. I sincerely hope that the Senate before this session of Congress adjourns will consider the corrupt-practices bill.

I know there are many Senators on the other side who will vote with us, and that we have enough votes in this body to pass this bill, if we can ever get it considered.

I am thoroughly in accord with the efforts of the Senator from Oklahoma to get this bill up, and it is because of the experience that we have had in my own State that I am so much in earnest and so insistent in my support of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that, in all probability, this bill will not come up by unanimous consent, but it does seem to me beyond a question that at the proper time the bill can be brought up by motion. I think there are votes enough here to take it up by motion.

Mr. OWEN. I offered a resolution on yesterday, which reads as follows:

> That immediately following the disposition by the Senate of the revenue bill (H. R. 16763) the corrupt-practices act (H. R. 15842) shall be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] gave notice that when the resolution came up he would make a point of order against it, that it could not be received. He may do that on parliamentary grounds. I then changed the form of it, so as to read:

> That immediately following the disposition by the Senate of the revenue bill the corrupt-practices act shall be immediately taken up for consideration.

I do not know whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will make a point of order against that or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would have made the point of order on parliamentary grounds against the Senator's resolution, because it is manifestly contrary to our procedure and our rules.

As to the political matter which the Senator has in mind, which he now puts in the shape of a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, I will say to the Senator that I much prefer that the immigration bill should be made the continuing order of the Senate after the present bill is out of the way and the deficiency bill shall have been acted upon. I believe the immigration bill is of infinitely greater importance than the Senator's bill.

Mr. OWEN. Well, I ask unanimous consent that we vote upon the corrupt-practices act on Thursday next.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator knows very well that he is taking his present course for no other purpose than to try to secure some political advertisement throughout the country. The Senator knows that he can not be deprived of the opportunity of moving to take up the bill, and if the Senate wants to vote to take it up, it will be taken up. So there is no need at this time for the Senator to undertake to ask unanimous consent that the bill shall be considered on next Thursday, as it is impossible to do so.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent, nevertheless.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, then I object.

Mr. OWEN. Then I ask whether the Senator from Utah represents the other side in objecting?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not represent anybody but myself, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not need to.

Mr. SMOOT. And I do not need to; I have the right to object; and the Senator knows very well that, so far as the corrupt-practices act is concerned, I am perfectly willing to enter upon the consideration of a corrupt-practices act at the proper time, and I will go as far as the Senator in passing such a bill; but in the closing hours of this session is not the proper time. The Senator is trying to secure unanimous consent, which he knows he can not secure while the revenue bill is under consideration.

Mr. OWEN. It only took two or three hours to dispose of it in the House, and why should it take an indefinite number of days in the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not stated the number of days it may take, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, if I may——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah or the Senator from New Hampshire, who are very prominent, and deservedly prominent and influential Members on the other side, why they, parrotlike, repeat each what the other says about adjournment and the closing days of this session? What do they mean by that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I mean that I have been here every day but one in the last nine months. The Senator from Missouri has been here part of the time and the Senator from Oklahoma a third of the time. I feel that it is time that the closing days were reached, and they are reached, and we ought to adjourn. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. STONE. The Senator, then, is simply expressing his desire that there shall be an adjournment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. STONE. Of course, I should dislike to part with the Senator, but still we would excuse him for a little vacation.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have disliked to part with the Senator from Missouri frequently, but he has disappeared, and we could not help it. We mourned over it, of course.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is at perfect liberty to himself exercise the same privilege.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. STONE. But that is neither here nor there. I wanted to understand by what authority or on whose assurance the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Utah undertake to tell the Senate that these are the closing days of the session? We have from now until December to hold this Congress, and we have sat here much later than the 1st of September. I suppose the Senators have some authority, or they think they have, for making that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the only authority the Senator from New Hampshire has is his own opinion; that is all. If, however, we are going to turn the Senate into a schoolhouse to have certain schoolmasters here interrogate us and compel us to answer questions that are irrelevant and, as I suggested a moment ago, impertinent, then we will never do anything. I think we ought to go on with the business of considering the bill that is before the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Oklahoma, and notwithstanding the intimation of the distinguished Senator who has just taken his seat, that any one is impertinent who asks another Senator a question, and waiving the right to suggest that that objection might well be made by the Senator who was interrogated, instead of being made for and in his behalf by the Senator from New Hampshire, I nevertheless venture to ask the Senator from Utah, who, a moment ago, said that we were simply trying to play politics by calling up this bill, how we can gain any political advantage out of it, unless it be by demonstrating to the country that the Democracy and the progressive Republicans are willing to pass a law that would insure, as far as laws can, an honest election, and that the old standpat element of the Republican Party, that is now running the party and running the candidate, wants a corrupt election?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Democracy and the progressive Republicans want to pass a corrupt-practices law at this session of Congress there is no power that can prevent it.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes, there is; the power to talk 16 or 17 hours, as the Senator did in a celebrated filibuster not long ago; the power of other men with equal lung power and physical endurance to stand and not only wear out the bodies of their associates but wear out the time. That is the power; and that is the power that I venture to charge the Senator from Utah will employ, and intends to employ. If not, why not consent to vote on a day certain, and that will end all that question?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it ill-becomes the Senator from Missouri to talk to the Senator from Utah about the number of hours that he speaks in this body. I think if the RECORD is measured up it will be found that the Senator from Missouri occupies five or six pages to one of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. REED. I am willing to jeopardize my seat in the Senate on that and resign if that is true, if the Senator from Utah will do the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not any doubt but that that statement is true. Now, I want to say also, as far as a filibuster is concerned, that there is no intimation, so far as I know, of any particular filibuster.

Mr. REED. Not "any particular filibuster"!

Mr. SMOOT. I think, as far as the country is concerned, everybody who prevented the passage of that vicious, undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American shipping bill at the last session of Congress will at some time or other receive the plaudits of the American people for its defeat.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to allow me just to finish what I have to say. I shall be brief; and then the Senator can ask any question he desires, although I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the revenue bill is before the Senate now; that is, I think it is before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. No one would ever suspect it, but it is before the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I think it is before the Senate. We can proceed with the consideration of that bill; and, as I say, if a majority of this body wants to consider the corrupt-practices bill a vote can be taken, and it will be taken up. The Congress can not adjourn until a majority of the Senate votes for the adjournment, and the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Missouri know it. Therefore this is a waste of time, as far as the Senate is concerned; but, of course, if the Senator from Oklahoma thinks he can get the headlines of the papers of the country, and in the meantime make political capital by bringing up this matter every day, under the rules of the Senate he can do so, and I am not going to object as long as the Senator is within the rules of the body.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to say this: The Senator from Utah, in reply to a remark I made, undertakes to justify the filibuster at the last session by saying that those who filibustered to prevent the passage of the shipping bill were engaged in a great work of serving the country. Mr. President, they have so well served it that the shipping rates across the ocean on everything the farmer raises are about five or six times, and in some instances ten times, what they were before the war, and very much higher than they would have been if there had been some Government ships to transport the farmer's grain. That great burden has fallen upon the farmer, because the cost of transportation to the market comes, in most instances, from the producer. There is such a shortage of ships now that only within the last few days railroads have refused to receive grain for shipment to ports, because when the grain arrived at the ports there was no ship to carry it. There is such a shortage of ships that the municipality of Portland is now raising money for the purpose of building ships to be operated by the municipality or under its direction. So that the Senator who stood here and talked 17 hours, I believe, against the passage of that bill——

Mr. OWEN. Twenty-six hours, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-six. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator might as well say 46, or 56. Make it a little larger.

Mr. REED. Well, I thought it was 26. It sounded longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was not present.

Mr. REED. Oh, I was here, and I have never quite had my nervous system restored to its usual normal condition since then. [Laughter.] The Senator can be as proud as he likes of that glorious achievement. He postponed this relief. He held it back from the people.

The Senator can make as many statements as he desires about the ability of this side, by a majority vote, to make the corrupt-practices bill the unfinished business of the Senate. We all know that. We understand that; but we also understand that the only way it can be passed in a reasonable length of time is by securing unanimous consent to fix a day to vote—in other words, for the other side of the Chamber to waive its right to filibuster; and we are simply asking that that right to filibuster be now waived. One man, of course, can prevent a unanimous-consent agreement, and the Senator from Utah is entitled to the glorious distinction of having been the first man to object.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the revenue bill be voted on next Thursday.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I stated to the Senate that no one could tell whether discussion on the revenue bill will cease by next Thursday or not, and it has not been the practice in this body to ask unanimous consent to vote upon a bill until after the discussion had been virtually exhausted. It has not been exhausted in this case—and by that I mean legitimate debate. Even members of the committee have not spoken upon the bill yet; and I shall object to any such unanimous-consent agreement at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma permit me?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Oklahoma has just made a request to which, of course, I have no objection; but the Senator spoke to me about making a similar request early after he took the floor, and I told him that I was so thoroughly satisfied, from my knowledge of the situation, that it was impossible to secure unanimous consent that I did not think it was worth while to make the request, and for that reason I did not do it at that time. I will make that request whenever I think there is the slightest possibility of its being acquiesced in.

Mr. OWEN. I thank the Senator for that purpose. I hardly had any hope that it would be acquiesced in, but since the adjournment was announced for next Friday I thought perhaps it might be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator did not understand me as referring to the corrupt-practices bill.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was referring to the revenue bill.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I know. And I really was not within my rights in asking unanimous consent in regard to the revenue bill, which is especially in charge of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection. I simply wanted it understood——

Mr. OWEN. I did so without really thinking of the usual practice.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will not understand me as complaining.

Mr. OWEN. No; I did not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply giving the reason why I had not myself made that request in the open Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I do not wish to detain the Senate longer. I gave notice yesterday that I would bring up the conference report on the amendments to the Federal reserve act and would present it to the Senate and ask for its present consideration under Rule XXVII.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I have been interrogated very sharply as to why I suggested that we were in the closing days of the session, I want to read the record of a recent meeting of the Republican conference, held on the 10th day of August, 1916. As this has been in the newspapers, I feel at liberty to read it:

> The conference met at 10 o'clock a. m., and, a quorum being present, the chairman laid before the conference a resolution presented by the Democratic steering committee, which read as follows:
> "Resolved, That it is the judgment of this committee that no seriously contested legislation should be undertaken during the present session except—
> "First. The appropriation bills and conference reports.
> "Second. The shipping bill.
> "Third. The revenue bill.
> "Fourth. The workmen's compensation bill.
> "And that the Congress should adjourn sine die as soon as said matters are disposed of."

I read this, Mr. President, to refute the repeated and reiterated charges against the minority that we are obstructing legislation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will ask what action the conference took on that, by the Republican conference?

Mr. GALLINGER. The conference took this action, which I think is very wise:

> That the power to control both legislation and adjournment rests with the Democratic majority in Congress. The Republican Senators reserve the right to support or oppose or request action on any legislation now pending, and they further urge that the immigration bill shall be taken up, considered, and acted on at this session.

Mr. OWEN. Then, if that was a Democratic proposal, it was not accepted by the Republicans?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not accepted.

Mr. OWEN. I should like, therefore, to have my colleagues on this side understand that if there was a proposal made, it was not accepted and that they are in no way bound. I thank the Senator for giving the record.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was prefectly understood. Of course the Senator was not here to know what happened at that time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado; or, if he will permit me, I should like first to answer the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Senator from Oklahoma spent two days on business within the last month. He spent a week-end, Saturday and Sunday, with his family on Long Island. When the Democratic convention met at St. Louis, he attended it. Otherwise, he has been in Washington. There has been no record vote made where the Senator's absence cut any figure whatever, or where his vote was not adequately recorded.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for a few moments in regard to the discussion that just ended.

Quite a number of the Members of the majority of this body, and of the minority as well, acting upon the theory that their duties in the Senate involved close attention to its official affairs, have stayed here, and many of them have been paired as well, for the purpose of keeping a quorum and transacting business. I count myself one of that number, having been absent on two or three occasions only. I have been here almost constantly since the first Monday of last December. So have a great many of my associates. They have not spent week ends anywhere, believing that too many absences might result in the complete suspension of business, a situation for which we did not care to be responsible.

Mr. President, it has been a long time from the month of December to the month of August with those of us who have been constant in our attendance upon the Senate and in the transaction of Senate business. We indulged the hope some days ago that we might be able to get away from here in time to obtain at least a little recreation before the next regular session of the Senate shall convene in due course, and were upon the eve of what seemed to be a possible agreement or understanding whereby the end of the session could be attained and the unfinished business go over, so that we could get away from here. But with the first intimation of a possible adjournment various measures have been pressed, I will not say for the first time, but pressed with unusual vigor and determination—the immigration bill, the corrupt-practices bill, and some others.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the immigration bill. I shall probably vote for the corrupt-practices bill, if we shall decide to remain here for its consideration. But I for one am getting weary of my long attendance here. We hear a good deal about the people and the interest they are manifesting in these measures. I think the people want Congress to adjourn. My impression is that they are tired of this long session, and would welcome a resolution of adjournment more than anything that we could do—more than an immigration act, more than a corrupt-practices act, more than anything except the dispatch of the business that is absolutely exigent and which, of course, demands our attention.

But it is now quite evident, Mr. President, that we shall not secure this desired vacation.

Certainly we will not if it is intended to press these measures to a final vote. Those who are anxious to pass them—and, of course, I do not in the slightest degree question their motives—have by their queries and by assertions which have not been challenged revealed the fact that if the bills are to be pressed they will provoke controversy, they will encounter opposition, they will in all probability inspire a resort to those parliamentary practices which are so common here, and so easy to resort to for the purpose of defeating or postponing objectionable legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And easy to resort to without detection.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; as the Senator suggests, easy to resort to without detection.

Now, of course, I shall remain here, Mr. President, cancel whatever engagements I have made, and be at my post as long as my health will permit if the program that after we get through with these important measures is to continue with other matters that are assumed by others to be so important. But I, for one, declare that I shall vote against a motion to take up either of these measures at this time. They are important, but I do not think they are the most important things before the country; and as one of the Members of the Senate who has been here all the time, I think I am justified in making this announcement, to the end that, if possible, we may obtain a slight respite from our duties between now and the first Monday of December.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 13391.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the motion is put, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not withhold the motion until I can get word to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]?

Mr. OWEN. I will withhold it for an hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not ask the Senator to withhold it longer than the Senator from Massachusetts can be present.

Mr. OWEN. I know exactly what the Senator from Massachusetts desires. He does not object to the report, but he wanted to make a comment on the rejection of the amendment of the Senate with regard to branch banks in cities, which he thought ought to remain in. The reason why it was left out was because when the House passed the bill the first time it was imposed as a condition by the Republican leader [Mr. MANN] that that provision should not go into the bill, and when it came back from the Senate the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House felt bound by parliamentary conditions to object to it, and it was dropped out.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator understands I have no objection to taking up the report.

Mr. OWEN. I understand that. I am willing to wait for another hour, but I would like to dispose of it to-day, because I gave notice yesterday, and this is the fourth time I have tried to get it up.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Massachusetts will no doubt be here soon.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. As soon as the Senator is ready, I will ask to lay aside the revenue bill and let him take it up.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, there has been some discussion lately about what the issues of the presidential campaign should be. Different individuals will decide that question for themselves in accordance with their information, their temperaments, and their occupations. Several important and fundamental policies are involved in it, concerning which I entertain strong convictions, but the importance of one consideration so far exceeds all others in my examination of the situation that before this Congress adjourns I desire to have it stated in the RECORD.

Believing that national honor and good faith must be placed above all other considerations of public policy, to my mind the unforgivable thing done by President Wilson was the lifting of the embargo on February 3, 1914, to allow munitions of war to go to Villa and Carranza in Mexico. According to the New York Sun, 72,000 rifles and more than 35,000,000 rounds of ammunititon went there by August 15. As Col. Harvey described it in the following September the result was that Mexico has been "a shambles compared with which devastated Belgium is as a German garden."

The President had been trying to depose Huerta by what he called "the steady pressure of moral force." He had sent a message ordering him to resign, he had sent John Lind to persuade him to resign; but this method was not succeeding very fast, so he concluded to arm all the robbers and bandits that Villa could collect to force him to resign. To strengthen this generous and noble program two months later, on April 20, when he heard of the expected arrival of a German cargo of munitions for Huerta he sent the Navy in hot haste to Vera Cruz to prevent its landing, on the pretext of a salute to the flag, which perhaps added to the respect entertained in Mexico and South America for a flag which later at Kansas City he said stood for "honor and not for advantage."

Mr. Wilson could not have been in ignorance of the horrible deeds his action would cause. It was not done impulsively as the result of a crisis; John Lind had been urging it for several weeks, while Nelson O'Shaughnessy was protesting against it from Mexico City, and Dr. Ryan went from there to Washington to add his protest, in vain. A policy was at stake, peaceful means had failed, so a President whose campaign cry is that he has kept this country out of war used as an instrument the most horrible and indefensible kind of warfare; and all the forces of murder, robbery, and unbridled passion and lust were armed and encouraged to conduct a conflict in which nothing was sacred, not even the altars of religion.

With what does it compare? How does it differ from Gen. Burgoyne arming the Indians against America in 1777, with instructions that though they might scalp the men, women, and children of the American frontier, they must see that their victims were dead before they were scalped—a system denounced by Edmund Burke in the Parliament of England and defended by Lord Suffolk on the ground that it is "perfectly justifiable to use every means which God has put into our hands." So God, 140 years later, gave the power to an American President to arm these Indians of Mexico and start them on a no less bloody career, and the verdict of the American people will decide whether such an act is justifiable in this generation. History will decide it later according to the facts, as it has decided about Burgoyne and Suffolk.

Or, it compares with Warren Hastings in India four years before Burgoyne imitated him in America. Hastings sold the armies of England to the Nabob of Oude to destroy a neighboring people, the brave and warlike Rohillas, for some hundreds of thousand pounds that were very acceptable to the exchequer of the East India Co., and then turned upon the dynasty he had made an alliance with, robbed and despoiled it of its possessions, even as Wilson used the brutal capacity for war of Villa to destroy Huerta, and in turn uses Carranza to destroy Villa. Those who are curious can read the story in the seething indictment of the same Edmund Burke who protested against the use of Indians in civilized warfare, when, on behalf of the Commons of England, he impeached Hastings before the House of Lords; or it can be found condemned in the sonorous sentences of Lord Macaulay.

The American public knows almost as little of the things that have been happening in Mexico as it remembers of Burgoyne and Hastings. It has not been a history that the administration cared to call attention to. When Americans in Mexico, protesting against what Secretary Lansing subsequently described as "outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity," and "uncivilized acts of mutilation," declared that their lives were being threatened and their property destroyed, and asked that their statement be made public, the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, replied:

> Your message has been laid before the President. He does not think it would contribute to the welfare of Americans there to give your statement to the press.

But no censorship is strong enough to entirely conceal such events as were happening in Mexico. Rumors of them appeared in the press, and criticisms were being published. They were appearing when President Wilson was talking about morality and honor in the West, and the President's answer, made at Indianapolis, was that though the editors—> thundered with rising scorn at watchful waiting, Woodrow sat back in his chair and chuckled, knowing that he laughs best who laughs last.

That was the attitude of the man who now asks for an indorsement of his acts from the humanity of America; an attitude not of sorrow, of pity, nor of regret, for sufferings across our border no less appalling than the massacres in far-off Armenia that have often aroused Americans, but delight that such a policy could be pushed to success. So amid all these horrors Wilson laughed—Woodrow chuckled—while Mexico was being despoiled, as Nero fiddled when Rome was burning.

What will historians in the next century say of Americans to-day if they reelect to office this laughing and chuckling President, and so make themselves partners in the shambles of Mexico?

Mr. GRONNA obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me now to make a disposition of the conference report?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Oklahoma will pardon me, I have just had a conference with the Senator from North Dakota, and, with his consent, I wish to ask that the bill be taken up for amendment at this time.

I suggest that the Secretary begin the reading of the bill for the purpose of considering first the committee amendments and that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. The first title of the bill relates to income taxes, the second to inheritance or estate taxes. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is a member of the Finance Committee, has given special attention to those two titles of the bill, and during their consideration he will have charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator yield to me to let me dispose of the conference report?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am going to leave the city this afternoon, and I wish to make some remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. OWEN. I will yield for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a moment to correct a statement in the RECORD?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I discovered it only last night.

On page 15275 of the RECORD there is a table of figures furnished me from the Treasury Department. At the close of the table there is a note 2, which says:

Exclusive of $6,636,592.60 grants from the Treasury for deficiencies in postal revenues in ordinary disbursements.

It should be "inclusive" instead of "exclusive," and at the close of the sentence there should be the words "and $4,696,716.37 paid from postal balances," so that the entire note would read:

NOTE 2.—Includes $6,636,592.60 grants from the Treasury for deficiencies in postal revenues in ordinary disbursements and $4,696,716.37 paid from postal balances. These sums will make the $11,000,000 difference in the last two figures in third column.

I corrected the statement, but I had two tables, and by mistake the reporter received the one that was not corrected.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator to make a further correction, because the figures furnished him by the department are not correct.

In the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in the table furnished the Senator, the amount for the fiscal year 1917 is given as $13,827,734.72. The real amount that the law calls for is $12,841,907.10.

Again, in the fortifications bill——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before I yield to the Senator, let me state that my sole object was to make the statement in the RECORD conform to the statement furnished me by the department. I had two tables. The department telephoned me and called attention to the fact that they were not correct, and I corrected it, but I had two, and by mistake the reporter was given the one which was not corrected instead of the one which was corrected. I only wanted to give the figures as the department furnished them to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will continue and tell the Senator about errors which were in the figures furnished him by the department. I have already stated that there was an error of $985,827.62 in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. In the fortifications bill the figures given by the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To which table is the Senator referring?

Mr. SMOOT. I am referring to the table the Senator gave.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I gave two.

Mr. SMOOT. The one that gives the amounts of appropriations in the different appropriation bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For 1915-16?

Mr SMOOT. For the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a different table. I will turn to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to have the figures given incorrectly. I will say that the error was made by the department by giving the Senator the figures as the bill passed the Senate, but not as the conferees agreed upon them.

In the fortifications bill there is a difference of $500. In the naval appropriation bill, as it became a law, the amount was $313,300,095.84, whereas the figures furnished the Senator by the department were $316,726,556.54, or a difference of $3,426,460.70. That $3,426,460.70 was taken out of the bill in conference.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was based on the then condition of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. At the date the statement was made.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to be discourteous, but I yielded to the Senator from Georgia at his request to make a correction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator. I did not intend to go into a discussion of the matter.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, we have before us again a bill to increase the revenues. Less than three years ago we passed a tariff bill that contained a provision levying a new tax—the income tax. About two years ago we passed another revenue bill—the so-called emergency revenue bill—levying new taxes, among them the annoying stamp taxes; this was necessary because the revenues did not equal the expenditures. And now we are called upon to pass still another revenue measure for the reason that the expenditures of the Government for this fiscal year will be far in excess of the revenues. This bill increases the income tax, continues most of the taxes provided for in the revenue act of 1914, and levies in addition thereto an inheritance tax and a tax on the manufacture of munitions of war.

The reason for this further tax legislation is the astounding increase in appropriations. Never before in our history, not even during the Civil War, have the appropriations reached the totals of this year. According to the statement of the Treasury Department, submitted by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the appropriations for this year are as follows:

Appropriations for the fiscal year 1917.

Army	$267,596,530
Agriculture	24,948,852
Diplomatic	5,355,097
District of Columbia	13,827,735
Fortifications	25,747,350
Indian	10,967,645
Legislative	37,925,630
Military Academy	1,225,044
Navy	316,726,557
Pensions	158,065,000
Postal Service	322,937,679
Rivers and harbors	40,598,[illegible]
Sundry civil	128,299,285
Permanent appropriations	131,074,[illegible]
Good roads	6,000,000
Rural credits	6,100,000
Miscellaneous	2,000,000
Deficiencies	45,077,178
Deficiency, Army and Navy	27,536,069
Shipping bill	50,000,000
Nitrate plant	20,000,000

I have included the items for the nitrate plant and the shipping bill, which the Treasury Department did not include in its table of appropriations, but referred to in a footnote. In addition to these there is a flood bill pending in Congress providing for an appropriation of $50,000,000, and there is a treaty pending which, if ratified, will necessitate an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the purchase of the Danish West Indies. Besides the general deficiency bill has not as yet been reported from the House Committee on Appropriations, and it may be found that when passed the amount carried by this bill will be in excess of the estimate.

At any rate, if the flood bill is passed—and it will make no difference whether it is passed at this session or postponed until next session, as the appropriation will be made during this fiscal year—the total appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1917, will be well in excess of $1,700,000,000. As the total appropriations for the fiscal year of 1916 were $1,115,000,000 this means that the appropriations for this year will be about $600,000,000 greater if the flood bill is passed, and if the flood bill should not be passed, about $550,000,000 greater. And it deserves to be noticed that, except the last year of the Civil War, the appropriations for last year were the largest in our history up to that time.

In the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention of 1912, the platform on which the present administration came into power, I find the following:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

The appropriations made by the last session of Congress in which the Republicans were in control of both Houses totaled $1,027,000,000. If these were denounced as lavish and extravagant appropriations, how is the party now in power going to justify appropriations totaling almost $700,000,000 more?

It is rather interesting to note that the economy declaration in the 1912 platform is almost word for word the same as in the platform of 1896, adopted when a Democratic administration was in power.

The Democratic platform of 1908 contains the following:

The Republican Congress in the session just ended made appropriations amounting to $1,008,000,000. * * * We denounce the needless waste of the people's money, which has resulted in the appalling increase, as a shameful violation of all prudent considerations of government and as no less than a crime against the millions of working men and women, from whose earnings the great proportion of these colossal sums must be extorted through excessive tariff exactions and other indirect methods. * * * We demand that a stop be put to this frightful extravagance, and insist upon the strictest economy in every department compatible with frugal and efficient administration.

If the Republican appropriations were "appalling," constituted "a shameful violation of all prudent considerations of government," and were "no less than a crime" against the taxpayers, what can be said of the appropriations of a Democratic Congress which total almost twice as much?

And I may call attention to the fact that during those years when our friends on the other side of the Chamber took such pleasure in denouncing Republican appropriations we built the Panama Canal, appropriating each year from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 for construction, besides paying the French Canal Co. $40,000,000 and Panama $10,000,000.

In spite of this Democratic record of appropriations piled on appropriations, of taxing acts after taxing acts being enacted in order to provide funds for the payment of these enormous expenditures, the Democratic platform of 1916 actually declares:

We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the Government.

As to whether our friends the Democrats are better platform writers than administrators, or whether this plank was inserted in the expectation that the next administration will be Republican, I shall not discuss at this time.

It has been usual for the Democrats to blame the deficit on the European war, contending that the war caused such a falling off in our imports that the present tariff law as a consequence produced far less revenue than it would otherwise have done. It is a fact, however, that our imports, except during the first few months of the war, have been greatly in excess of our imports under the Payne Tariff Act, and that the deficiency in the customs revenue is not due to a lack of imports, but to the removal or reduction of the tariff on those imports. I submit herewith a table showing the value of imports, customs revenues, proportion of imports admitted free, average tariff rates on dutiable imports, and average tariff rates on all imports for the last six years. Mr. President, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate by reading all of these figures, but I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Without objection, that will be done.

The table referred to is as follows:

Year.	Imports.	Revenues.	Per cent free.	Average rate, dutiable imports.	Average rate, all imports.
1911	$1,527,226,105	$314,497,071	50.84	41.22	20.20
1912	1,653,264,934	311,321,672	53.33	40.12	18.58
1913	1,813,608,234	318,891,396	54.47	40.05	17.69
1914	1,893,925,657	292,128,528	59.53	37.60	14.88
1915	1,674,169,740	209,268,109	61.74	33.43	12.40
1916	2,197,883,510	211,866,222	67.91	30.04	9.72

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to call attention to the year 1916. For that year the imports were $2,197,883,510 and the revenue collected was only $211,866,222; the percentage of imports free was 67.91; the average duty on dutiable imports 30.04 per cent; and the average rate on all imports 9.72 per cent.

Mr. President, I want to say in passing that my figures agree, or very nearly agree, with those of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He called attention to the fact that the rate of duty had been decreased. He did not, however, call attention to the fact that 67.91 per cent of all our imports came in free, and that only 32.09 per cent were taxed.

To further analyze the figures in the table, the imports for the year ended June 30, 1915, the first year of the war, were greatly in excess of the imports for any year under the Payne Tariff Act except the year of 1913, yet the revenues for that year were 50 per cent less. For last year our imports exceeded by almost $400,000,000 the greatest imports under the Payne law, and the revenues were more than $100,000,000 less. In 1911 almost 50 per cent of our imports paid a duty; in 1912, 47 per cent; and in 1913, 46; while in 1916 duties were paid on only 32 per cent of our imports. In 1911 the average rate of duty collected on all imports was 20.29; in 1916, as I have said, it was 9.72. Yet the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], chairman of the Finance Committee, asked me on yesterday how I would increase the customs revenues.

Obviously if you cut the tariff rate in two you necessarily reduce the revenues collected from the tariff. The failure of the present tariff law to produce the needed revenues is not due to a failure in imports, but to the fact that the American markets have been thrown open to the foreign producer and his products are admitted free or at greatly reduced rates. In 1916, 68 per cent of our imports were admitted free. If a tariff bill is to produce revenue, it must levy tariff duties on the goods imported. When the present law is pointed to as a revenue producer on the strength of the collections during the year 1914 it must be remembered that for three months of that year imports paid duties under the Payne tariff law.

Several days ago the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] submitted a statement showing an excess of receipts over disbursements for the year 1916, the first year under this administration, in which there has not been a deficit if we include the Panama Canal expenditures. It can not be maintained, however, that this showing for the year 1916 is due to the present tariff law. In October, 1914, we passed the so-called emergency revenue act, increasing the former internal-revenue taxes and adding others, among them the annoying stamp taxes, which had theretofore been resorted to only in times of war; and last December we passed a joint resolution continuing those taxes, and the fact that we had a surplus instead of a deficit last year is due to the amounts raised by these taxes. If we had not had those taxes the deficit would have reappeared at the end of last June with its customary regularity.

In order to raise sufficient revenue to run the Government in time of peace, practically every available source of revenue is to be tapped. And yet, even these new taxes will not be sufficient for the increased expenditures. The $130,000,000 which it is estimated the experiment of keeping the National Guard on the Mexican border will cost up to the end of December, the $50,000,000 for purchasing and building ships, and the $20,000,000 for the nitrate plant—all these sums are to be raised by the sale of bonds. And with all these taxes and this bond issue there will still be a deficit of $30,000,000 to be taken out of the general fund, according to the estimate of the chairman of the Finance Committee. And this does not take into consideration the $25,000,000 which we are to pay for the Danish West Indies nor the $50,000,000 which will be appropriated if the flood bill passes.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said about the present era of prosperity, and the country is being appealed to to let well enough alone and reelect the present administration in order that the prosperity may continue. As showing the effect of the enactment of the present tariff law on the prosperity of this country, I wish at this point to insert a few tables taken from a report by the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, showing the imports and exports of gold, the receipts of railways, bank clearings, and business failures for the calendar years 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, and the first four months of 1916, which I ask to have printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. The falling off in our favorable trade balance during the year following the enactment of the Underwood tariff law—in the months of April, May, June, and July, 1914, our imports actually exceeded our exports—resulted in heavy exports of gold, and during the calendar year 1914 we exported $150,000,000 more gold than we imported. It was not until the war began, with its disarrangement of the commerce of the European countries, that this steady stream of gold leaving this country stopped, and since that time the placing of huge war orders in this country has resulted in enormous imports of gold, $450,000,000 being imported in the calendar year 1915.

Mr. President, it seems to me that our present prosperity, at least in so far as it depends on our foreign commerce, is in a precarious condition. I submit herewith two tables, one showing our exports for the last three years of articles the demand for which is due wholly or mainly to the war, and one showing the exports of articles the demand for which has been directly increased by the war, which I ask to have printed without being read. The figures for 1914 and 1915 were taken from Commerce and Navigation for 1915, and the figures for 1916 were taken from the Monthly Summaries of Foreign Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to just a few of these articles.

In 1914 we exported horses to the value of $3,388,819, in 1915 we exported horses to the value of $64,046,534, and in 1916 we exported horses to the value of $73,531,146.

Of manufactures of brass we exported in 1914 only $3,966,645 and in 1916, $128,331,820.

Of gunpowder we exported in 1914 only $247,200 and in 1916 we exported gunpowder of the tremendous value of $173,736,374, an increase of more than 70,000 per cent.

Of other explosives we exported less than a million dollars' worth in 1914, while in 1916 we exported $252,368,391.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a few of the items in the table which I have prepared, designated as Table No. 2.

In 1914 we exported wheat of the value of $87,953,456 and in 1915, $333,552,226. And yet the Democrats say to us that they have been the cause of this prosperity, that their tariff bill has really been a blessing in disguise and has helped to increase the value of the products of the farm!

In constructing these tables care has been taken to include only those articles the increased exports of which have gone to the countries at war, and the increased demand for which may consequently be considered due directly to the war. Articles the increased exports of which have gone to neutral countries have not been included, although the increased demand for these has probably been due to the war, and although in many cases there might be reason to believe that a considerable portion of such exports ultimately reached some country now at war. Many articles have also been excluded where the statistics for 1916 showed great increases in their export but did not show to what country such increased exports were sent. In view of this, I believe it safe to say that these tables understate rather than overstate the facts.

Exports of articles the demand for which is wholly or mainly due to the war are found to be, in round numbers, $130,000,000 in 1914, $417,000,000 in 1915, and in 1916 they had reached the staggering total of $1,432,000,000, 11 times as great as in 1914, an increase due to the war of $1,300,000,000.

The value of articles exported, the increased demand for which is directly due to the war, is found to be as follows: 1914, $460,000,000; 1915, $918,000,000; 1916, $1,109,000,000. The increase for 1916 over 1914 in the export of these articles is, in round numbers, $650,000,000.

Of both classes of articles our exports were of the value of, in 1914, $590,000,000; in 1915, $1,335,000,000; and in 1916, $2,541,000,000. Our exports of these articles in the year ended June 30 last were almost $2,000,000,000 greater than in 1914. In other words, $2,000,000,000 of our exports last year is due to the war. We pride ourselves on our exports for the year 1916, having a value of $4,272,397,774, a record to which no other country in the world can point, and yet it must be confessed that one-half of this is represented by goods the demand for which is directly due to the war.

As a matter of fact, the exports due to war orders are even greater than these tables show. In addition to the reasons for this given above is the further fact that the allied powers have placed restrictions on our commerce with the neutral countries of Europe, which in many cases have reduced our exports to them below those in time of peace. For instance, in 1914 we exported to the Netherlands 958,000 barrels of flour; in 1916 only 220,000 barrels. In 1914 we exported to the Netherlands 179,000,000 pounds of copper; in 1916 less than 5,000,000 pounds. In 1914 we exported to the same country almost 14,000,000 gallons of lubricating oil; in 1916 a little over 2,000,000 gallons. The result of this is when we compare the exports for 1916 with those for 1914 to make the increase due to the war orders smaller than it really is.

I submit herewith a table showing our exports to the allied powers, the only countries now at war with which we have an appreciable commerce remaining, for the years 1914 and 1916. I ask that this may be inserted without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. GRONNA. The total exports to the countries were in 1914 of the value of $1,427,000,000, in round numbers, and in 1916 $3,462,000,000, an increase of $2,035,000,000, practically all of which may be considered due to the war, a result which agrees very closely with that arrived at from the tabulation of the exports.

Mr. President, the war had two effects on our industries. In the first place it cut off a very large part of the imports which were competing with the products of our industries, in the case of some countries cut them off completely. It served the same purpose as a protective tariff. In the second place it created a vastly increased demand for a number of articles which the United States was the only Nation able to supply on a large scale.

This surrendering of the American markets to the American producer and at the same time throwing open an immense new market to our producers necessarily revived our languishing industries. But, to the extent that the resulting prosperity is based on the production of these articles, the main demand for which exists only in time of war, to this extent it rests on a false foundation, and when the demand is withdrawn it may have a more disastrous effect than the creation of the demand had a beneficial one.

In June, 1916, our exports of the articles enumerated in Table No. 1, which are almost wholly articles the demand for which will not outlast the war, amounted to between $175,000,000 and $180,000,000, and the exports of articles listed in Table No. 2 amounted to almost $100,000,000. If the war should suddenly end, the demand for the first class of articles would immediately stop; the demand for the second class of articles would decrease, the rapidity and extent depending on the ability of the belligerent powers to supply their own needs at the end of the war, and also depending on what steps will be taken by the different governments, in accordance with the recommendations of the recent Paris conference, to conserve their markets for their own producers and those of their allies. That this demand of between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 a month can suddenly be stopped without having a serious effect on our industries I do not believe.

In addition to the withdrawal of the demand for these articles, there will be the further effect of the suddenly renewed competition of European industries with our own. Remembering the industrial depression caused by this competition before the war, can we expect, unless we take steps to protect our industries, to escape without injury after the war, intensified as the competition will be by the urgent necessity of our competitors and with their efforts directed and perhaps directly aided by their own Governments?

We do not, perhaps, ordinarily realize the full extent to which the conditions created by this war protect us against foreign competition. We all know that the energies of the different nations have been so fully occupied with the stupendous struggle in which they are engaged that those countries with which we have had free intercourse have not been able to retain the hold they had gained in our own markets or in other neutral markets. We do not usually stop, however, to reflect that the present high ocean freight rates have also served as a protection. Such of our foreign competitors as have been able to continue to manufacture goods for export have no longer been able to ship their goods across the Atlantic for the same freight charge as a manufacturer in this country would have to pay for shipping his goods a few hundred miles. The high ocean freight rates have served the same purpose as a protective tariff.

It has been one of the contentions of our friends, the Democrats—and I heard the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] say so this morning—that when a tariff is levied on an article imported into this country the American consumer has to pay the tariff on that article as well as a higher price for every similar article manufactured in this country. If this were true in regard to the tariff charges, it would also be true of every other charge incident to bringing such article into this country. And yet it has been maintained in connection with the shipping bill that because of the high ocean freight rates we have received less for our goods exported than we should otherwise have received. In other words, it has been contended that if goods are imported we have to pay the tariff and other charges, and that if goods are exported we have to pay the charges in that case also.

I shall not consume any time on this phase of the matter except to say that in this case it appears to me that the facts are exactly the reverse. When, as has been the case during this war, we are not selling the goods in competition with others, when the foreign countries have purchased our goods because they were in urgent need of them—could not, as a matter of fact, get them elsewhere—after having purchased them in this country, the cost of getting them over to the foreign country, including the cost of ocean carriage and any tariff charges they might have to pay, would be borne by the buyer. And the high ocean freight rates have operated to raise the prices in Europe rather than to depress them in this country. On the other hand, when a foreign producer attempts to invade our own markets, when he sends his goods over here to sell in our markets in competition with the goods of our producers, he must pay the cost of getting those goods to our markets, including ocean carriage and tariff duties.

There have been indications that the European war is to be followed by a commercial war, and not as we would usually understand the term, but a commercial war where the attacks on the other countries' commerce are to be directed and perhaps financially aided by the Governments of the respective countries acting in conjunction with the Governments of their allies. While the reports as to the aims of the central powers of Europe do not so far indicate anything beyond a customs union, which would of course make it impossible, or at least very difficult, for us to compete in the markets of any country that was a member of such union in the sale of any articles produced by another member of the union, the agreement of the allies at the Paris conference indicates that these countries are prepared to take much more extreme steps. While there are no specific statements as to the measures to be adopted, the Paris resolutions indicate a determination to prosecute economic warfare ruthlessly against German commerce, and some find in those resolutions suggestions of a control of the relations of neutral countries with the Teutonic nations. In view of the unjustified restrictions placed upon our commerce during this war, and the even greater restrictions placed upon that of other neutral countries, it may be doubted whether any commercial warfare would long be carried on against the Teutonic countries without seriously interfering with our trade with the various European countries.

Even if the action of the allied powers should extend only to the establishment of preferential tariffs whereby their allies would be given preference in their markets, this would be a serious blow to our trade. It must be remembered that the allied countries and their dependencies have an aggregate area of more than 30,000,000 square miles, or more than one-half of the earth's land surface. Their total population is more than one-third of the earth's total population. They produce practically everything that those countries may need, and there would be very few commodities for which they would be dependent on the outside world. If formed into a customs union, we could secure entry into their markets only if we could offer in return privileges in ours. If our markets are open to their producers without any concessions on their part, we should receive no concessions.

And I may say here that, strange as it may seem to those who have always been so ready to throw the farmers' market in this country open to the producers of agricultural products in other countries, even England is now considering whether it would not be an act of the highest wisdom to encourage its agriculturists in order that the land which is now lying waste may produce crops and thus reduce the amount which they are now paying for food brought from other countries.

As showing that the English Government has already begun subsidizing commercial concerns, one of the steps suggested in the resolutions adopted by the Paris conference, I submit herewith a report from Consul General Skinner, contained in the Commerce Reports for August 16:

BRITISH SUBSIDY FOR TRADE-EXPANSION PURPOSES.

[Consul General Robert P. Skinner, London, Aug. 3.]

A very interesting departure in British methods of securing trade in European countries was discussed in Parliament on July 31, a departure in which the Government itself appears as a full partner by the contribution of a subsidy of £50,000 ($243,325) per annum. On the occasion named the chancellor of the exchequer reported that a British company, under the title of the British-Italian Corporation (Ltd.), with a capital of £1,000,000 ($4,866,500), was registered on July 20. There will be no public issue, the capital having been subscribed privately, chiefly among banks.

The British Government agrees to contribute to the company by way of subsidy, during each of the first 10 years after its incorporation, an annual sum of £50,000 ($243,325), or the equivalent of 5 per cent upon its paid-up capital if less than £1,000,000. In consideration of the subsidy the company agrees to pay to the Government amounts equal to any dividend above a cumulative dividend of 5 per cent per annum which the directors may distribute to the shareholders in any year—after making such provisions as the directors may think desirable for bad and doubtful debts and the establishment of a reserve fund—until by such means the Government has been repaid (without interest) the amount so received by the company by way of subsidy.

A COLLABORATING ITALIAN COMPANY TO BE FORMED.

A company under the style of the Compagnia Italo-Britannica will forthwith be formed under Italian law, with a capital of 10,000,000 lire, one-half of which is to be taken by the British-Italian Corporation and the other half by the Credito Italiano and their friends. Out of the nine directors of the Italian company three will be British.

The chancellor concluded:

"The two companies will work together in close collaboration, and arrangements have been made by which their interests will be as far as possible identified, except that the subsidy of the British Government will naturally remain for the benefit of the British company exclusively.

"The primary object of the two companies is the development of the economic relations between the British Empire and Italy and the promotion of undertakings in the commercial and industrial field in Italy. They will carry out banking and financial operations which do not necessarily fall within the strict definition of banking as understood in this country."

These things to my mind indicate that the present prosperity is not a healthy one, having for its foundation immense war orders and the shutting out of competition by the war. When the war is over the European countries will stop taking our products on this immense scale, they will, if their reported intentions are carried out, to a large extent close their markets against our products, they will attempt to displace our goods in neutral markets, and they will invade our markets if they remain open and undefended. And it must be borne in mind that this is not likely to be the competition experienced before the war, but a competition of greater intensity perhaps directed and directly aided by the respective Governments.

The proper steps for us to take would appear to be to conserve our markets for our own producers and to strengthen our own industries. It seems to be a fact that many of our iron and steel manufacturers in catering to the demand from abroad for articles useful in war, are imposing hardships on those of our manufacturers who are dependent upon supplies of iron and steel in their industries, and the purchasers of such manufactures in turn are compelled to bear the burden. The Implement and Tractor Trade Journal says in regard to this situation:

FOREIGN ORDERS BLOCK OUR MATERIAL MARKET—IN BOOKING SO MUCH INORDINATELY PROFITABLE WAR BUSINESS THE STEEL PRODUCERS ARE CRIPPLING THE FARM-EQUIPMENT INDUSTRY AND MENACING THE EFFICIENCY OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURE.

In presenting these facts and opinions on the desperateness of the steel situation, as viewed from the standpoint of the manufacturer and distributor of farm operating equipment and the user of that equipment, the Implement and Tractor Trade Journal has no wish to set up as a "trust buster." High-pitched protest will avail little in the direction of actual relief. That is what the farm operating equipment trade wants above all else. It is glad and willing to forego the pyrotechnics of a "campaign" if only what has come to be very like a crisis in the material market can be substantially alleviated.

Conditions have arisen in the steel trade because of the war abroad that have begun to work almost unbearable hardships on the manufacturers dependent upon the mills for most of their material. Prices are rapidly approaching the prohibitive and deliveries are so "certainly uncertain" that many manufacturers are in despair. Such a situation has never before confronted the farm operating equipment industry.

Ultimately, it is not the manufacturers who will suffer most. It is the farmers and the people at large. Advances in price have been steady, each following hard upon the one before. Most of these have been explicable. The implement trade does not expect to see the world undergoing such a cataclysm as the great war without feeling something of its inevitable effects. Any other attitude would be utterly unreasonable.

A SPECIAL COMMITTEE IS AT WORK.

Some months ago a special committee of the National Implement Vehicle Association was appointed to investigate the steel situation in behalf of the farm operating equipment manufacturers. This committee has attended at least one conference in New York City with representatives of the steel producers. No report has yet been made public, although the committee expects to make an announcement to the implement and vehicle trade eventually. No doubt progress has been made in the direction of adjustment.

* * * * * * *

Several days ago the president of an Illinois manufacturing organization asked the manager for his latest information on steel. The manager dictated this note, from which the names only have been omitted:

"A large manufacturer advises that he had a contract for a large tonnage of steel at a low price with one of the largest mills in the Pittsburgh district and was promised delivery last August. In August they again promised rolling in September; in September they again promised rolling in October; in October they again passed it over to November, and at that time advised him that date of rolling particular sizes mentioned was uncertain.

"The party then placed order for the identical material with one of the large steel warehouses in Chicago, and in two weeks got two carloads of the steel, which had come from the same mill with whom he was under contract.

"I was also advised by parties in touch with the steel business that the mills were furnishing thousands of tons of shrapnel steel at $90 per ton—this in view of the fact that our own contract for steel at $24 per ton is not so attractive to the rolling-mill people as $90 business, and again explains the difficulties in securing materials.

WHY DOMESTIC CONTRACTS SUFFER.

"The above incidents partially explain the inability of manufacturers to obtain supplies as needed and go to show that steel producers, in some cases at least, are apparently giving preference to higher-priced orders or premium business rather than taking care of domestic contracts at a lower price."

This is the sort of inside information that passes to and fro among manufacturers within their own organizations. If these were only egregious examples, things might not present so gloomy a front, but they seem to be typical, although, in fairness, it should be said that a few manufacturers report no difficulty.

One manufacturer ordered material about a year ago this month for September and October delivery, 1915. The material has not yet been delivered, and the mills do not promise it sooner than February or March, 1917—virtually 20 months between order and delivery. This may be an extraordinary case, but manufacturers relate many other instances of similar purport.

Finding it impossible to get delivery in time to manufacture goods for this year's market, the manufacturer in question instructed one of his executives to go out and buy the needed material wherever it could be had outside of the mills. This was done, and the executive bought $50,000 worth for $100,000, or just 100 per cent in advance of the soaring market price.

CONTRAST OF TWO ATTITUDES.

Not typical, possibly, but very indicative of the drastic measures to which some manufacturers are forced to resort in order to supply their trade. Contrasted with the general behavior of the steel men, such expensive solicitude for the customer shines like a beacon.

For a good many months the steel situation as it directly affects most manufacturers of agricultural implements has been becoming more and more critical. War orders at inordinate profits have been too alluring for the steel producers to withstand. Inevitably, domestic manufacturers have borne the brunt of the resulting difficulties. And it is far more than a matter of price; it is a question of getting the material at any price.

Mr. President, if the Democratic Party is sincere in its support of some of the provisions of the pending measure, I welcome their conversion to the policy of protection. Both the duties proposed for the encouragement of the dye industry and the provision for a tariff commission are tacit admissions that our policy henceforth, no matter which party is in power, must be protection for American industries. I may say that I have long favored a tariff commission, but a commission reporting to Congress and not to the President. In a speech which I made in 1909, when the Payne tariff bill was under consideration in the House, I said:

The only way in which we can obtain information that will enable us to construct a tariff with any approach to scientific exactness is to create a tariff commission which will obtain the data necessary in order to determine what rates ought and ought not to be fixed—a commission that would not merely have hearings where interested persons often succeed in avoiding giving any information that would not advance their interests, but that would investigate the different industries and examine the books of the different concerns in order to determine the cost of production, and that would also examine into the matter of the prices that foreign producers could afford to sell their products at, and that would reduce the results of their investigation to such a form that each Member of Congress could have it at his disposal in a usable form before the drafting of a tariff bill was begun.

It was not until 1916 that the Democratic Party in its platform indorsed "a nonpartisan tariff commission to make impartial and thorough study of every economic fact that may throw light either upon our past or upon our future fiscal policy with regard to the imposition of taxes on imports or with regard to the changed and changing conditions under which our trade is carried on." Our versatile-minded President, however, declared for a tariff commission about 18 months ago and further declared that he had obtained one through a "joker" in the Trade Commission act. Presumably he has changed his mind on the question of whether or not he has a tariff commission, since he favors creating one by express legislation. Exactly what the plank in the Democratic platform means, whether it means that the commission is to determine whether we shall pursue a protective-tariff or free-trade policy, I presume we shall be duly enlightened as to during the campaign.

It is rather interesting at this time to note the different platform declarations of the Democratic Party on the subject of the tariff.

The Democratic platform of 1868 declared for—

A tariff for revenue upon foreign imports and such equal taxation under the internal-revenue laws as will afford incidental protection to domestic manufactures, and as will, without impairing the revenue, impose the least burden upon and best promote and encourage the great industrial interests of the country.

The platform of 1872 did not declare either for or against protection.

The platform of 1876, after denouncing the then existing tariff as "a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense," concludes "We demand that all customhouse taxation shall be only for revenue."

The platform of 1880 declares for "a tariff for revenue only."

The platform of 1884, after denouncing the existing tariff law and demanding a reduction of duties, continues:

The necessary reduction and taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

The platform of 1888 contains the following on the subject of tariff reform:

Our established industries and enterprises should not and need not be endangered by the reduction and correction of the burdens of taxation. On the contrary, a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurance of an extended market and steady and continuous operations.

The Democratic platform of 1892 is more outspoken. It declares:

We denounce Republican protection as a fraud—a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purposes of revenue only.

The platform of 1896 declares:

We hold that tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, such duties to be so adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country and not discriminate between class or section.

The platform of 1900 condemns the Dingley Act and declares:

Tariff laws should be amended by putting the products of trusts upon the free list to prevent monopoly under the plea of protection.

The platform of 1904 declares:

We denounce protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, and we favor a tariff limited to the needs of the Government, economically administered.

The platform of 1908 says:

We favor the immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties. Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products should be placed upon the free list; material reductions should be made in the tariff upon the necessaries of life, especially upon articles competing with such American manufactures as are sold abroad more cheaply than at home; and gradual reductions should be made in such other schedules as may be necessary to restore the tariff to a revenue basis.

The platform of 1912, upon which this administration was elected, is interesting at this time. It says in part:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government, under the Constitution, has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

This fundamental principle of Democracy appears to have been lost since President Wilson was inaugurated. At least it does not reappear in the platform adopted last June. This platform declares:

We reaffirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government economically administered, and unreservedly indorse the Underwood tariff law as truly exemplifying that doctrine. We recognize that tariff rates are necessarily subject to change to meet changing conditions in the world's production and trade.

The platform declarations of the Democratic Party vary from flat assertions that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to levy any tariff duties except for revenue to more or less vague declarations in favor of a reduction of tariff duties. In one platform the declaration is for a tariff for revenue only, in others the declaration is for a tariff for revenue. At times the "fundamental principle of the Democratic Party" is emphasized, and at other times it seems to be indirectly intimated that if the voters will elect a Democratic administration the party will in turn consent to waive at least for a while the fundamental principle.

This administration was elected on a platform which reaffirmed the "fundamental principle." Now, at the end of three years, we find a bill before us, drafted by a Democratic committee, agreed to by a Democratic caucus, and agreeable to a Democratic President, which provides for new duties which in their nature are frankly protective duties and submitted without any pretense that such duties will add materially to the customs revenues. What has become of their constitutional scruples about duties of that kind has not been stated by the committee drafting the measure. Whether the explanation is that the Democrats have come to the conclusion that the principle which they enunciated four years ago is fundamentally wrong or whether they are sacrificing principle to expediency I shall leave for some spokesman of the party to declare.

In addition to these new protective duties on dyestuffs, provision is also made for a tariff commission. It is difficult to explain the need of a tariff commission except on a protective tariff basis. If a tariff is to be levied for revenue only, there is no need of a commission to ascertain the necessary facts. The data which the Treasury and Commerce Departments can furnish are sufficient on which to base a fairly reliable estimate as to what given tariff duties will produce. It is when we come to consider what effect the tariff rates will have on American industries, when we attempt to determine what rate it is necessary to levy in order that the cost of production at home and abroad may be equalized—in other words, when we come to levy a protective-tariff duty—that we find the necessity for a tariff commission. And it is further to be noted that this law provides for a permanent commission. If its work was to be merely an investigation of the exceptional conditions which will follow the present European war, as the Democratic platform suggests, a temporary and not a permanent commission would be provided for.

The Democratic Party came into power on a promise to reduce the cost of living; it has had no success in that, but has succeeded admirably in reducing the revenues of the Government. The administration was elected on a platform condemning Republican extravagance and promising the strictest economy in the conduct of the Government; this session has almost doubled the largest appropriations ever made in time of peace by a Republican session of Congress. The Democratic Party promised to reduce the burdens of taxation; they have piled taxation upon taxation, increasing the old taxes and imposing many new ones. The Democratic Party has in the past been the implacable foe of the policy of protection; realizing that events have proved them wrong on this question, as well as on other great questions which have in the past confronted our people, at least part of the party is now tacitly confessing the error of its ways and taking halting and reluctant steps toward the maintenance of a protective tariff.

AMENDMENT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 533).

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to take up the conference report on the bill amending the Federal reserve act?

Mr. OWEN. I should be glad to have that taken up now. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hughes	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Husting	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Jones	Penrose	Smoot
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Sterling
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Ransdell	Stone
Curtis	Lane	Reed	Thomas
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Warren
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Williams
Gallinger	McLean	Sheppard
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Harding	Nelson	Simmons

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will allow this announcement to stand for the rest of the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] are absent on departmental business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the Secretary call the roll of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the absent Senators to attend the session of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. COLT, and Mr. MARTIN of Virginia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

The Senator from Oklahoma has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I suggest that it is not necessary to read the conference report. Printed copies are on the desks of Senators, and the matter is understood.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"That the act entitled 'Federal reserve act,' approved December 23, 1913, be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

"At the end of section 11 insert a new clause, as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power, from time to time, by general ruling, covering all districts alike, to permit member banks to carry in the Federal reserve banks of their respective districts any portion of their reserves now required by section 19 of this act to be held in their own vaults.'

"That section 13 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may receive from any of its member banks, and from the United States, deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, Federal reserve notes, or checks, and drafts, payable upon presentation, and also, for collection, maturing bills; or solely for purposes of exchange or of collection, may receive from other Federal reserve banks depsits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, or checks upon other Federal reserve banks, and checks and drafts, payable upon presentation within its district, and maturing bills payable within its district.

"'Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States. Notes, drafts, and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days, exclusive of days of grace: Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding six months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board.

"'The aggregate of such notes, drafts, and bills bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower, whether a person, company, firm, or corporation, rediscounted for any one bank shall at no time exceed 10 per cent of the unimpaired capital and surplus of said bank; but this restriction shall not apply to the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values.

"'Any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances of the kinds hereinafter described, which have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than three months' sight, exclusive of days of grace, and which are indorsed by at least one member bank.

"'Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than six months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace, which grow out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods; or which grow out of transactions involving the domestic shipment of goods provided shipping documents conveying or securing title are attached at the time of acceptance; or which are secured at the time of acceptance by a warehouse receipt or other such document conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples. No member bank shall accept, whether in a foreign or domestic transaction, for any one person, company, firm, or corporation to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 10 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus unless the bank is secured either by attached documents or by some other actual security growing out of the same transaction as the acceptance and no bank shall accept such bills to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than one-half of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus, except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as said board may prescribe, but not to exceed the capital stock and surplus of such bank, and such regulations shall apply to all banks alike, regardless of the amount of capital stock and surplus.

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make advances to its member banks on their promissory notes for a period not exceeding 15 days at rates to be established by such Federal reserve banks, subject to the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, provided such promissory notes are secured by such notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or bankers' acceptances as are eligible for rediscount or for purchase by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of this act, or by the deposit or pledge of bonds or notes of the United States.'

"Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows: 'No national banking association shall at any time be indebted, or in any way liable, to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock at such time actually paid in and remaining undiminished by losses or otherwise, except on account of demands of the nature following:

"'First. Notes of circulation.

"'Second. Moneys deposited with or collected by the association.

"'Third. Bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit to the credit of the association, or due thereto.

"'Fourth. Liabilities to the stockholders of the association for dividends and reserve profits.

"'Fifth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act.

"'The discount and rediscount and the purchase and sale by any Federal reserve bank of any bills receivable and of domestic and foreign bills of exchange, and of acceptances authorized by this act, shall be subject to such restrictions, limitations, and regulations as may be imposed by the Federal Reserve Board.

"'That in addition to the powers now vested by law in national banking associations organized under the laws of the United States any such association located and doing business in any place the population of which does not exceed 5,000 inhabitants, as shown by the last preceding decennial census, may, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, act as the agent for any fire, life, or other insurance company authorized by the authorities of the State in which said bank is located to do business in said State, by soliciting and selling insurance and collecting premiums on policies issued by such company; and may receive for services so rendered such fees or commissions as may be agreed upon between the said association and the insurance company for which it may act as agent; and may also act as the broker or agent for others in making or procuring loans on real estate located within 100 miles of the place in which said bank may be located, receiving for such services a reasonable fee or commission: Provided, however, That no such bank shall in any case guarantee either the principal or interest of any such loans or assume or guarantee the payment of any premium on insurance policies issued through its agency by its principal: And provided further, That the bank shall not guarantee the truth of any statement made by an assured in filing his application for insurance.

"'Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than three months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace, drawn under regulations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board by banks or bankers in foreign countries or dependencies or insular possessions of the United States for the purpose of furnishing dollar exchange as required by the usages of trade in the respective countries, dependencies, or insular possessions. Such drafts or bills may be acquired by Federal reserve banks in such amounts and subject to such regulations, restrictions, and limitations as may be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board: Provided, however, That no member bank shall accept such drafts or bills of exchange referred to this paragraph for any one bank to an amount exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of the paid-up and unimpaired capital and surplus of the accepting bank unless the draft or bill of exchange is accompanied by documents conveying or securing title or by some other adequate security: Provided further, That no member bank shall accept such drafts or bills in an amount exceeding at any time the aggregate of one-half of its paid-up and unimpaired capital and surplus.'

"That subsection (c) of section 14 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'(c) To establish accounts with other Federal reserve banks for exchange purposes and, with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, to open and maintain accounts in foreign countries, appoint correspondents, and establish agencies in such countries wheresoever it may deem best for the purpose of purchasing, selling, and collecting bills of exchange, and to buy and sell, with or without its indorsement, through such correspondents or agencies, bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions which have not more than 90 days to run, exclusive of days of grace, and which bear the signature of two or more responsible parties, and with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board to open and maintain banking accounts for such foreign correspondents or agencies.'

"That the second paragraph of section 16 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the local Federal reserve agent for such amount of the Federal reserve notes hereinbefore provided for as it may require. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the local Federal reserve agent of collateral in amount equal to the sum of the Federal reserve notes thus applied for and issued pursuant to such application. The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances rediscounted under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange indorsed by a member bank of any Federal reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14. The Federal reserve agent shall each day notify the Federal Reserve Board of all issues and withdrawals of Federal reserve notes to and by the Federal reserve bank to which he is accredited. The said Federal Reserve Board may at any time call upon a Federal reserve bank for additional security to protect the Federal reserve notes issued to it.'

"That section 24 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. Any national banking association not situated in a central reserve city may make loans secured by improved and unencumbered farm land situated within its Federal reserve district or within a radius of 100 miles of the place in which such bank is located, irrespective of district lines, and may also make loans secured by improved and unencumbered real estate located within 100 miles of the place in which such bank is located, irrespective of district lines; but no loan made upon the security of such farm land shall be made for a longer time than five years, and no loan made upon the security of such real estate as distinguished from farm land shall be made for a longer time than one year nor shall the amount of any such loan, whether upon such farm land or upon such real estate, exceed 50 per cent of the actual value of the property offered as security. Any such bank may make such loans, whether secured by such farm land or such real estate, in an aggregate sum equal to 25 per cent of its capital and surplus or to one-third of its time deposits and such banks may continue hereafter as heretofore to receive time deposits and to pay interest on the same.

"'The Federal Reserve Board shall have power from time to time to add to the list of cities in which national banks shall not be permitted to make loans secured upon real estate in the manner described in this section.'

"That section 25 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 25. Any national banking association possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more may file application with the Federal Reserve Board for permission to exercise, upon such conditions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said board, either or both of the following powers:

"'First. To establish branches in foreign countries or dependencies or insular possessions of the United States for the furtherance of the foreign commerce of the United States, and to act if required to do so as fiscal agents of the United States.

"'Second. To invest an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus in the stock of one or more banks or corporations chartered or incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, and principally engaged in international or foreign banking, or banking in a dependency or insular possession of the United States either directly or through the agency, ownership, or control of local institutions in foreign countries, or in such dependencies or insular possessions.

"'Such application shall specify the name and capital of the banking association filing it, the powers applied for, and the place or places where the banking operations proposed are to be carried on. The Federal Reserve Board shall have power to approve or to reject such application in whole or in part if for any reason the granting of such application is deemed inexpedient, and shall also have power from time to time to increase or decrease the number of places where such banking operations may be carried on.

"'Every national banking association operating foreign branches shall be required to furnish information concerning the condition of such branches to the Comptroller of the Currency upon demand, and every member bank investing in the capital stock of banks or corporations described under subparagraph 2 of the first paragraph of this section shall be required to furnish information concerning the condition of such banks or corporations to the Federal Reserve Board upon demand, and the Federal Reserve Board may order special examinations of the said branches, banks, or corporations at such time or times as it may deem best.

"'Before any national bank shall be permitted to purchase stock in any such corporation the said corporation shall enter into an agreement or undertaking with the Federal Reserve Board to restrict its operations or conduct its business in such manner or under such limitations and restrictions as the said board may prescribe for the place or places wherein such business is to be conducted. If at any time the Federal Reserve Board shall ascertain that the regulations prescribed by it are not being complied with, said board is hereby authorized and empowered to institute an investigation of the matter and to send for persons and papers, subpœna witnesses, and administer oaths in order to satisfy itself as to the actual nature of the transactions referred to. Should such investigation result in establishing the failure of the corporation in question, or of the national bank or banks which may be stockholders therein, to comply with the regulations laid down by the said Federal Reserve Board, such national banks may be required to dispose of stock holdings in the said corporation upon reasonable notice.

"'Every such national banking association shall conduct the accounts of each foreign branch independently of the accounts of other foreign branches established by it and of its home office, and shall at the end of each fiscal period transfer to its general ledger the profit or loss accrued at each branch as a separate item.

"'Any director or other officer, agent, or employee of any member bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, be a director or other officer, agent, or employee of any such bank or corporation above mentioned in the capital stock of which such member bank shall have invested as hereinbefore provided, without being subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes."'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend certain sections of the act entitled 'Federal reserve act,' approved December 23, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

The amendments of the Senate to the bill have been accepted by the House conferees with some slight verbal modifications, except that the House declined to agree to and the Senate receded from its amendment of section 16 of the Federal reserve act which would have explicitly authorized and encouraged Federal reserve banks to issue Federal reserve notes based upon gold or gold certificates.

The House conferees declined to agree to the Senate amendment proposing to permit national banks in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants and possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more to establish branches, and the Senate conferees have agreed to recommend that the Senate recede from this amendment.

The House conferees insisted upon an amendment to section 11, which was accepted by the Senate conferees, permitting the Federal Reserve Board, upon an affirmative vote of not less than five, to permit member banks to carry in the Federal reserve banks any portion of their reserves now required to be held in their own vaults.

ROBT. L. OWEN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall not invoke the rule and ask to have the bill sent back to conference, although it is contrary to the rules of the Senate to insert new matter in a conference report. On yesterday the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] stated that this conference report was not subject to a point of order, because, as I understood him to say, the committee of conference rejected both bills and wrote a new bill.

Members of the Senate who are now present will remember that I objected to the provision in the bill authorizing banks to take all of their cash reserves and to deposit those reserves in some other bank. I believe that is fundamentally wrong. I know from what little experience I have had in the banking business that it is absolutely unsafe. In the old banking act there was a provision penalizing any banker who did not keep a certain percentage of cash in his own vaults, and it was a good law.

Mr. President, in 1907, when we had a panic, that panic was due directly to the fact that the little banks all over the country had their deposits with the larger banks, and the larger financial institutions became involved. In some of the banks in my State—the little banks there, for they are all small banks in North Dakota—we had as high as 60 per cent reserves, and yet some of the banks had to refuse payment of checks which were presented to them. I do not wish to criticize the Senator from Oklahoma, but I must say that I am surprised that he is willing to permit a provision of this kind to be written into law.

I think we can all remember the campaigns that have been made against Wall Street. It is not very many years ago since political campaigns were fought on that issue and against the danger of money being hoarded and concentrated in large commercial centers; and yet, here we are to-day writing a law making it possible for the Federal Reserve Board to dictate a policy under which every penny in the little banks throughout the country may be compelled to deposit in a Federal reserve bank, in a central reserve city, all of the bank's cash. It is wrong from a financial standpoint; it is wrong fundamentally.

The Senator from Oklahoma, of course, will answer my statement by saying that some of the large banks have asked for the enactment of this provision. They want to be permitted to keep their reserves with the Federal reserve banks; but that is a mighty poor excuse for allowing a few large banks to inaugurate a policy for the entire country, under which, in fact, the banks may be compelled to keep all of their cash, not in their own vaults, but in the vaults of some other institution. Mr. President, the policy is unsound. I hope that I am mistaken; but I believe the Senator from Oklahoma and I will both see the day when we will regret that this provision was inserted in this law.

I do not wish unnecessarily to delay the Senate. I debated this question at length when it was before the Senate on a former occasion, and the Senator from Oklahoma agreed to take the provision to which I object out of the bill; and it was taken out of the bill by the Senate. The provision never has been in the House bill, and it was not in the Senate bill. Whatever excuse the Senator from Oklahoma may offer, it occurs to me that it is taking advantage of me. Of course, I am in the minority, and I know the majority can pass any bill they want to pass; but I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I am not responsible for this legislation and I am one of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not wish to stand here as a Progressive, as a reformer, and be placed in the attitude of assisting to pass legislation which I believe to be detrimental to the common man, and to be in the interest of the great trusts and of Wall Street. They are the only ones who will get any benefit from this law. The Senator knows that. There was a demand from the big banks for a system of branch banks, but the voice of the people all over this country was heard on that proposition, and the committee of conference did not dare to put that provision in the bill, but struck it out.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say on this subject. I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well, then; I will not insist.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very anxious to see this matter disposed of, so that we may go on with the revenue bill, which is before the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I will only detain the Senator one minute, if he will allow me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I yield once more.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the provision objected to by the Senator from North Dakota permits member banks to keep any part of their reserves with a Federal reserve bank, which is a public, not a private, institution, and from which they can get currency whenever they want it, which they could not do from a private bank in a panic. Some of the banks desired this provision; the Federal Reserve Board recommended it, and the committee agreed to it. The Senator from North Dakota objected to it, and because of his objection it went out in the Senate. The bill went to conference. The House Members insisted upon this provision being reinstated; they thought it ought to be in the bill, and, in order to reconcile the differences between the two Houses it was put in. I am sure that no bad consequences will follow from it, and I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility, if any there be, for having it go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understood that the conference report would take about five seconds. If it is going to lead to further debate, I shall proceed with the revenue bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I will not take more than two or three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, one point which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate with relation to this conference report is the omission from the bill of the provision relating to the establishment of branch banks. We in Congress are responsible for the national banking system and for the promotion of the business interests of the national banking system along reasonable lines. It happens that the laws of certain States permit State banks to establish branches in the municipality where they are chartered to do business. The national banking law forbids that, and there was inserted in the bill which is now before the Senate a provision giving national banks the privilege of establishing branches in the municipality where they are organized to do business in those States where State banks have a similar provision. It has been left out of the bill in conference.

I understand very well the reasons why this was done, and I do not make any criticism of the Senate conferees for yielding in that respect; but I want to say that unless we provide a law which will enable national banks to do that the national banking system is going to suffer materially. For example, in the city of Boston, near which I live, I believe there has not been a national bank established for 15 years, and during that time there have been 25 or 30 State banks or trust companies established. One great bank in New York City—the Corn Exchange National Bank, a State institution—has some 25 or 30 branches. It is in direct competition with the national banking system, and the national banking system can not stand that kind of competition.

I hope the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee will bring in a bill at the convening of Congress next winter which will give this privilege to national banks, and it is for that reason that I have made this brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, so much time has been taken up with general debate upon the revenue bill that I shall forego the general observations that I might have offered in relation to the income tax and the estate tax, and shall ask the Secretary to proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

I want to give notice that I shall attempt to answer any question when a committee amendment is reached, provided the question is relevant to the amendment itself; but in order to save time I shall neither answer any question nor discuss any subject which is not relevant to the amendment immediately under consideration at the time the question is asked.

I ask that the reading of the bill proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Secretary will read the bill for amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, after the enacting clause, on page 1, after line 2, to insert:

That unless otherwise herein specially provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its passage, and all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Title I.—Income tax," subhead "Part I.—On individuals," in section 1, page 3, line 5, before the words "10 per cent," to strike out "and"; in line 7, after the numerals "$500,000," to insert "and does not exceed $1,000,000, 11 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000, 12 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000, and 13 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $2,000,000," so as to read:

(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section (herein referred to as the normal tax) there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the total net income of every individual, or, in the case of a nonresident alien, the total net income received from all sources within the United States, an additional income tax (herein referred to as the additional tax) of 1 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $40,000, 2 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $60,000, 3 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $80,000, 4 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $100,000, 5 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000, 6 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $200,000, 7 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $250,000, 8 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $300,000, 9 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000, 10 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000, 11 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000, 12 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000, and 13 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, after the word "income," to insert "the income derived from," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of the additional tax there shall be included as income the income derived from dividends on the capital stock or from the net earnings of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, except that in the case of nonresident aliens such income derived from sources without the United States shall not be included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think, in the case of an important measure like this, the whole bill ought to be read without the Secretary skipping paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, under the former order of the Senate, the formal reading of the bill was dispensed with and the bill was ordered to be read for amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not understand that that was the order of the Senate or I certainly should have objected, had I been here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order was adopted by unanimous consent. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 6, after the word "each," to insert "calendar," so as to make the clause read:

(c) The foregoing normal and additional tax rates shall apply to the entire net income, except as hereinafter provided, received by every taxable person in the calendar year 1916 and in each calendar year thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I am quite impressed with the view suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the importance of this bill and the importance of having the entire bill read, notwithstanding some order that may have been heretofore made—inadvertently, perhaps, so far as I am concerned. I do not know that anyone should object to its being read, and I move that the entire bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it will take unanimous consent to rescind the order that was adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from New York does not understand the situation. The order that has been adopted by the Senate was simply that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment. It is the duty of the Secretary to read the bill, of course.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, does the Senator state that the Senate has given unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; to dispense with the first reading of the bill and to proceed to read the bill for amendment; and it was also agreed that the Senate amendments shall be considered first. That is the order, and that is all. It is the usual order.

Mr. PENROSE. It is the usual order in the case of some unimportant bill, in order to save time; but here is a measure of very great importance, and it seems to me that the bill ought to be read at length.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill will be read at length, and each amendment will be considered when read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will be so instructed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the first, or formal, reading of the bill—which, as the Senator knows, is absolutely useless—has been dispensed with.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not consider it useless; and I understand that the Chair has directed the Secretary to read the bill at length, which is satisfactory to me.

Mr. OWEN. The order has already been established by unanimous consent that the bill shall be read, but that the committee amendments shall be considered first as the bill is read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course the bill must be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will be instructed to read the bill at length. The Secretary will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And each amendment as it is read will be considered.

Mr. PENROSE. That is right. As it is to be read, that is all I ask.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I suggest that the Secretary be instructed to begin on line 9, page 4, and to read every line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 9, page 4.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Income defined," in section 2, page 4, line 22, after the word "corporation," to insert "joint-stock company, association, or insurance company"; in line 24, after the word "profits," to insert "accrued since March 1, 1913"; on page 5, line 1, after the word "corporation," to insert "joint-stock company, association, or insurance company"; and in line 3, after the word "income," to strike out "to the amount of its cash value," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. (a) That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever: Provided, That the term "dividends" as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, before the word "income," to insert "such"; in line 9, before the word "kind," to strike out "and" and insert "any"; in the same line, before the word "income," to insert "such"; in line 11, after the word "interests," to insert "and income held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust"; in line 13, after the word "instance," to insert "except when the income is returned for the purpose of the tax by the beneficiary"; in line 18, before the word "legatees," to strike out "or"; and in the same line, after the word "legatees," to insert "or beneficiaries," so as to make the clause read:

(b) Income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate, shall be subject to the normal and additional tax and taxed to their estates, and also such income of estates or any kind of property held in trust, including such income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained persons, or persons with contingent interests and income held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust shall be likewise taxed, the tax in each instance, except when the income is returned for the purpose of the tax by the beneficiary, to be assessed to the executor, administrator, or trustee, as the case may be: Provided, That where the income is to be distributed annually or regularly between existing heirs, legatees, or beneficiaries the rate of tax and method of computing the same shall be based in each case upon the amount of the individual share to be distributed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 3, to strike out:

(c) Of the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale of real estate, stocks, bonds, securities, or other property, acquired before March 1, 1913, not bought and sold in the course of trade by the taxpayer, only such proportion shall be included as the time between March 1, 1913, and the date of sale bears to the entire time between the date of acquisition and the date of sale.

And insert:

(c) For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Additional tax includes undistributed profits," in section 3, page 7, line 18, after the word "names," to insert "and addresses"; and in line 19, after the word "individuals," to insert "or shareholders," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 3. For the purpose of the additional tax, the taxable income of any individual shall include the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations, or insurance companies, however created or organized, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed; and the fact that any such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company, is a mere holding company, or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax; but the fact that the gains and profits are in any case permitted to accumulate and become surplus shall not be construed as evidence of a purpose to escape the said tax in such case unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that in his opinion such accumulation is unreasonable for the purposes of the business. When requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or any district collector of internal revenue, such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company shall forward to him a correct statement of such gains and profits and the names and addresses of the individuals or shareholders who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Income exempt from law," in section 4, page 8, line 5, before the word "property," to strike out "specific," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 4. The following income shall be exempt from the provisions of this title:

The proceeds of life insurance policies paid to individual beneficiaries upon the death of the insured; the amount received by the insured as a return of premium or premiums paid by him under life insurance, endowment, or annuity contracts, either during the term or at the maturity of the term mentioned in the contract or upon the surrender of the contract; the value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent (but the income from such property shall be included as income); interest upon the obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof or upon the obligations of the United States or its possessions; the compensation of the present President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected, and the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States now in office, and the compensation of all officers and employees of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, except when such compensation is paid by the United States Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator why the language "the present President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected" is inserted here?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because the Constitution of the United States forbids us to decrease his compensation during the term for which he has been elected.

Mr. GALLINGER. This law, then, would apply to future Presidents?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and it will apply to him when he is elected again.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very dim prospect. Now, I will ask why the compensation of officers and employees of States should be exempted? What is the theory?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is because of the principle announced in the case of McCulloch against Maryland, where it was said that one of these two dual sovereignties of ours could not tax the agencies or instrumentalities of the other, because, if it could, it could tax them out of existence and destroy them.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is in the present law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; it is in the present law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I remembered that it was, but I wanted to ask why it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Deductions allowed," in section 5, page 9, line 5, after the word "country," to strike out "and" and insert "or under the authority of," and, in line 6, after the word "or," to strike out "municipal taxes" and insert "municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State," so as to make the clause read:

Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States, or its Territories, or possessions, or any foreign country, or under the authority of any State, county, school, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 10, before the word "business," to insert "his"; in line 11, after the word "when," to insert "such losses are"; and, in line 12, after the word "otherwise," to insert:

Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss sustained.

So as to make the clause read:

Fourth. Losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in his business or trade, or arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other causualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise: Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss sustained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read paragraph 5, on page 9, as follows:

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall move to have the fifth section, just read, amended. As I understand the order under which we are acting, we are at this time considering only committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). That is correct.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And these other amendments may be subsequently presented. However, so that the Senators may know the point I have in mind and may consider it if it had not occurred to them, I shall propose at the proper time to strike out, on lines 22 and 23, the words "to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom."

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand, that will be in order later, although if there is an amendment to a committee amendment that can be disposed of now.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, after the word "trade," to strike out "and in the case of mines, including oil wells or gas wells, a reasonable allowance for depletion of ores and of other natural deposits, not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine of the output for the year for which the computation is made; and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the cost of, or capital actually invested in, the timber sold or removed during the year for which the return is made, but with respect to timber purchased prior to March 1, 1913, a reasonable allowance not in excess of the fair cash value of such timber on March 1, 1913," and to insert:

Eighth. (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof, which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which such return and computation are made.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi to permit this amendment on page 10 to go over for a little while, until I have an opportunity to see one or two members of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am willing to have that done. Let that amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Nonresident aliens," on page 12, line 12, after the word "possessions," to strike out "and" and insert "or under the authority of," and, in line 14, after the word "or," to strike out "municipal taxes" and insert "municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State paid," so as to make the clause read:

Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States, or its Territories, or possessions, or under the authority of any State, county, school, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 21, after the word "when," to insert "such losses are," so as to read:

Fourth. Losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in business or trade conducted by him within the United States, and losses of property within the United States arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, in line 22, after the word "otherwise," to insert:

Provided, That of such loss or losses sustained in trade, or speculative transactions not in trade, from the same or any kind of property acquired before March 1, 1913, only such proportion shall be included as the time between March 1, 1913, and the date of sale bears to the entire time between the date of acquisition and the date of sale.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment beginning on line 22 go over for a little while, until I can see the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done, Mr. President, I will state that by an error the proviso to which the Senator refers is wrong as it appears in the bill. That is to say, an amendment to a previous part of the bill was adopted, and it ought to have been carried forward to this point, but it was not carried here. In order that it may be, I move now to strike out the amendment beginning on line 22, page 12, to and including line 4, on page 13, and insert in lieu of it the matter which I send to the desk. It is a mere failure to carry the amendment forward to this place, and I think if the Senator from Pennsylvania will pay attention to the amendment he will find that it meets what is in his mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the proviso on pages 12 and 13 insert:

Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of such loss or losses sustained in trade or speculative transactions not in trade from the same or any kind of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss or losses sustained.

Mr. PENROSE. It ought to be "accrued," not "acquired."

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; "acquired" is the right word.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the amendment I had in mind. I thought the chairman of the committee had it, and that is where I made my mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 4, to insert:

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, this presents the same proposition I had in mind a few moments ago on page 9, but on page 9 it was not a committee amendment, and therefore was not a subject of inquiry at this time. On page 9 a provision is made with respect to the residents of the country. In the committee amendment, on page 13, lines 5 to 8, substantially similar language is used with respect to nonresidents. In both cases this is the point presented.

In providing for deductions that may be made out of incomes it is stated that the losses sustained in the business of the individual will be deducted. There is no objection to that, but then these two paragraphs present this distinction. The committee recommend and the House recommended that losses sustained outside of the individual's regular business or profession will not be allowed as a credit or deducted except in so far as the individual has made profits from his outside businesses or ventures.

Assuming that a man is a farmer and purchases stock in a corporation, a perfectly legitimate investment but not a part of his business, if he should sustain a loss on that stock he would not be credited under this provision unless he had made a profit from other like outside ventures. To give a concrete example, if a farmer, in the operation of his farm, or a business man, in the conduct of his business, made $10,000 profit, and if, owing to an unfortunate investment in stock, not necessarily a speculative investment on the exchange, but if he made a loss on a legitimate stock investment of two or three thousand dollars, he is not permitted to deduct that from his gross profits, although, as a matter of fact, in the given case his actual net income for the year is $7,000.

It is difficult in my mind to justify such a limitation, and I move that the amendment of the committee be further amended by striking out all after the word "year," on line 7, page 13, so that it will read:

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit, but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the present law admits of no deductions whatsoever in these cases. We thought that was rather too drastic. These are transactions entered into for profit but not connected with the taxpayer's business or trade. It is intended to provide for speculative profits and speculative losses.

In the present law now no deduction for any losses of that character is made at all. We thought it right to give a reduction, but we thought it also right to limit the deduction to the amount of the speculative transaction, an amount not exceeding the profit arising therefrom. Otherwise we were afraid that we would open the door to rather extensive frauds upon the revenue.

When a man comes up and says that while he made an income of $10,000 in his business in some speculative enterprise, he lost $12,000, or if he says he made $10,000 in his business and in some speculative enterprise he lost $10,000, it is right hard to determine whether he has or has not, because in his regular business he keeps no books concerning these outside transactions.

That was the reason of the committee. I see myself, personally speaking, a good deal in what the Senator from New York says, but the House thought this way about it, and we thought this way about it, and I think, upon the whole, it is better to leave the provision as it is, and in that way not run the risk which the Treasury Department fears, which is that it may lead to extensive frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator say this is intended to cover merely speculative business when as a matter of fact it must refer to any character of business? There are a great many persons who may have a dozen different kinds of business in which they are engaged, and there might be one transaction in which such a person would be engaged in any particular year that was not what we generally understand to be speculative. Why should he not be allowed to deduct his losses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may be true that a man may have several sorts of business and if he has then each business is his business or trade. If, for example, as used to be the case, I were both a farmer and a lawyer, farming would have been just as much my business as law and law just as much my business as farming, and I would have made a return according to the other provisions of the bill with the deductions therein provided without this limitation, both in connection with my law business, which was my business, and in connection with my farming business, which was my business. In those cases I would have law-firm books on one side and farm books upon the other. This is not intended to provide for cases like that.

If under those circumstances I had gone out and concluded to take a flier in the market by buying or selling some futures or had concluded to buy certain stocks of some sort which were sold upon the exchange, transactions fugitive in their character, not connected with my regular business in either of its two phases, then the present law allowed no deduction at all absolutely. This will permit a deduction for losses sustained in a poker game even, but to let a man deduct unlimited poker losses or unlimited losses by gambling upon the exchange, when it is impossible almost to find it out from any record testimony, from any books which he keeps in connection either with his one business or his other business, the Treasury thought and we thought was going a little too far. A man may very well be a Member of the Senate and a lawyer, a farmer, and a mine operator. That is the case with one gentleman who sits upon the floor of the Senate. This is not intended to cover that. It is not intended to interfere with that. It has never been so construed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator again, suppose, as the Senator suggests, he is engaged in the business of farming and also as an attorney, and that he should conclude at one particular time that he could make a little money by buying cattle and shipping them to the Chicago market; and, after he had bought the cattle, which is not his ordinary line of business, and shipped them the market would suddenly drop in Chicago, and he would lose instead of making, could he, under the provision of the bill as it now stands, deduct that loss, that not being his regular line of business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not, except up to the limit herein defined. His losses in business would be deducted to the amount but not exceeding the profits which he had made in the cattle transaction to which the Senator referred.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose he made but one shipment, and he learns his lesson in cattle buying by that and does not continue it any further, and he has made a loss. It is a legitimate business; it is not speculative. Why should he not be allowed to deduct that loss from whatever he might have made either out of his farm or out of his law business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated the reason to the best of my ability. I have some sympathy with the amendment, but, upon the whole, we thought that, balancing the chance of fraud upon the revenue against injustices which would very seldom happen, it was better to put in this limitation. That is all I can say.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, apparently the only objection which occurs to the Senator from Mississippi, who has this branch of the bill under control, is that there might be an attempt to evade the law. Attempts will be made not only under this feature of the law but under other provisions; and we all have confidence in the intelligent and efficient administration of the law by the Treasury Department. In the extreme case the Senator from Mississippi suggests, where the return of a citizen showed profit for the year, he might say he speculated on the exchange and he lost it, but he would be required at the instance of the Treasury Department to give the details of the transaction, the broker's house through which he dealt, and to give such other evidence as would satisfy the department that the deduction was a legitimate one and should be made.

Of course there is the other extreme case the Senator suggests, that some person eager to evade the law might say he lost a large part of the profits in some form of gambling; but I think we could leave it to the officials of the Treasury Department to sift out and examine those cases where such pleas were made. Surely the honest and worthy citizen should not have a burden improperly and unwisely placed upon him because of the danger of some disreputable citizen at some time to evade the law.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Under this Senate committee amendment, if a man generally was engaged in a stock-brokerage business, he, of course, would deduct his losses from his profits; but the man who is individually dealing with that firm in an occasional way would not have that privilege.

Mr. O'GORMAN. He would not have that privilege.

Mr. POMERENE. That certainly does not seem to be fair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have said all I desire to say. I do not care much about it. I ask for a vote, unless some one else wishes to be heard.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from New York, who I assume is the author of the proposal to amend——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest if the word "lawful" were inserted between "in" and "transactions," in line 5, some of the dangers suggested by the Senator from Mississippi would disappear.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I gladly accept that suggestion. I think it may remove all the objections the Senator from Mississippi has to provide that in lawful transactions the losses here incurred may be deducted from the profits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 5, after the word "in," and before the word "transactions," insert "lawful," so as to read:

In lawful transactions entered into for profit.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And strike out at the end of the paragraph the words "to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment in line 7 to strike out the words "to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom."

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to suggest further that it would be very unwise to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, although I am in entire sympathy with it, unless it is understood that a similar amendment will be made to the House text, which covers citizens of the United States.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I gave notice that I would make such a motion to amend.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not in order now. It will come up later.

Mr. CUMMINS. That ought to be understood, because we ought not to treat aliens any better than we treat our own people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is adopted here it will be adopted there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. So that we may not have to go over this again, with the approval, I hope, of the Senator from Mississippi, I ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York wait until we see what becomes of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to insert the word "lawful."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall, of course, right now have to withhold my consent to the unanimous consent asked by the Senator from New York, because it would set a bad precedent.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Very good; I will withdraw the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But undoubtedly that will be done, and the committee itself will have no objection. If it is adopted in one place, it should be adopted in the other.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I desire to ask whether the word "lawful" was inserted in line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been adopted yet. That is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I accept it as a part of my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the word "lawful" be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have a further amendment to offer to the amendment. In line 5 I move to strike out the words "entered into for profit but."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 5, strike out the words "entered into for profit but," so as to read:

In lawful transactions not connected with his business or trade.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not see why these deductions should be confined to transactions entered into for profit. A man may incur serious losses in transactions that he enters into not for profit. He may, for instance, be an indorsor for his neighbor to the extent of a thousand dollars and be compelled to pay it; his neighbor may become bankrupt. There is no intention of profit in the original transaction, but the loss happens nevertheless. I think, therefore, he should be allowed to deduct for legitimate losses that arise from lawful transactions, whether for profit or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think that that would be going almost too far. If we struck out here "entered into for profit" and it read "lawful transactions," then it is a perfectly lawful transaction for a man to give a charity hospital $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER. No, Mr. President, that is not a lawful transaction——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a lawful transaction. It is a perfectly lawful transaction.

Mr. OLIVER. No sane man would call that a loss in speaking of losses. You can trust the Government officials to see that no deductions are made except for losses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be a loss when he came to estimate his net income during the year.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator from Mississippi surely knows better than that. If a man makes a gift——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi surely never knows anything better than what he says. He has the honor always of saying what he thinks, and if he makes a mistake it is because he does not know better. If a man had an annual income of $10,000 and gave away $5,000 of it, my opinion is that under that clause, as it would stand after your amendment, he could deduct it. "Transaction" is a very broad word.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have far less respect for the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi than I had before he made that assertion, because I can not conceive how anybody could for a moment contend that such a thing as that was a loss.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reply to the rather——

Mr. OLIVER. I rather think when the Senator from Mississippi comes to carefully consider what he has said he will reconsider his opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may or may not be. I am in the habit to reconsider a thing when I find a good reason to come to a different conclusion. But in reply to the little side remark made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senator's opinion of my ability is a matter of no consequence at all to me—not the slightest.

Mr. OLIVER. I can say, Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my opinion.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator's opinion of me is a matter of great consequence. I would highly regard the Senator's opinion of me. I know, of course, that my opinion of him may not be considered so highly in his mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never would be discourteous enough to say just what the Senator a moment ago said, and if I were discourteous enough, then I would put myself where he ought not to have any regard for my opinion. But let us go on with this matter. I think we had better let it go just as it is, and if I should afterwards change my mind about it, I can change it before we get through it in conference as well as now.

Mr. OLIVER. I am willing to let it go at that. I wish to say before I take my seat that if anything I have said to the Senator or concerning him could be construed into anything like discourtesy, it was not so intended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will not be outdone in courtesy. Now the Senator's opinion of me becomes a matter of very much consequence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. OLIVER. For the present I withdraw it, with the understanding that I can offer it again before the consideration of the bill is concluded.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not withdraw it, and I rather think that the Senator from Mississippi will be in accord as to the meaning of the language after they perhaps read it with a little more care. If the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is favorably considered the provision will then simply read, speaking of deductions:

Fifth. In lawful transactions not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania properly said, a citizen may lose a great part of his year's profit in a transaction into which he did not enter for the purpose of profit. The Senator from Mississippi seems to be under the impression that possibly a benefaction might be deducted at the end of the year as an item which should be deducted. I do not quite see how the Senator reaches that view, because no court, in my judgment, would ever hold that a gift or a benefaction could be embraced among the losses sustained by the individual during the year.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. May I suggest to the Senator that the idea would be carried out if the paragraph should be made to read as follows:

In lawful business transactions not connected with his regular business or trade.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The word "transactions" by itself means anything.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is greatly improved by the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Instead of "regular," would you take the word "ordinary"?

Mr. CHILTON. Either one would make the distinction between a private transaction, so to speak, and the regular business.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Very good; that is quite satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia offer that as an amendment?

Mr. CHILTON. I offer tnat amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It ought to be clearly understood. I ask the attention of the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New York and the Senator from Pennsylvania, and then I will ask unanimous consent that the amendments shall be considered, reading as follows:

Fifth. In lawful business transactions entered into but not connected with his regular business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do you strike out "entered into"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not necessary to strike that out. They have to enter into them. It does not make any difference.

In lawful business transactions entered into but not connected with his regular business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that that may be inserted in lieu of what appears as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment as printed in the text, on page 13, lines 5 to 8, inclusive, insert:

Fifth. In lawful business transactions entered into but not connected with his regular business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 13, line 9, to change the side title from "Fifth" to "Sixth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 13, to change the side title from "Sixth" to "Seventh."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, after the word "trade," to strike out:

And in the case of mines within the United States, including oil wells or gas wells, a reasonable allowance for depletion of ores and of other natural deposits, not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine of the output for the year for which the computation is made; and in the case of timber within the United States, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the cost of, or capital actually invested in, the timber sold or removed during the year for which the return is made, but with respect to timber purchased prior to March 1, 1913, a reasonable allowance not in excess of the fair cash value of such timber on March 1, 1913.

And to insert:

(a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which such return and computation are made.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will state that this amendment is similar to the one which my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] asked to have passed over temporarily, and I suggest that this also go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. This is identically a similar amendment, and therefore we will pass it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "Personal exemption," on page 15, after line 1, to strike out:

SEC. 7 (a). That for the purpose of the normal tax only, there shall be allowed as an exemption in the nature of a deduction from the amount of the net income of each individual taxpayer, the sum of $3,000; except where such person is the head of a family, when the said exemption shall be $4,000: Provided, That the aggregate net income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents and one or more minor children, or of husband and wife living together, shall, for the purpose of the normal tax only, constitute one taxable income to be returned by, and taxed to, the husband or the head of said family, and the tax thereon shall be payable by such husband, or head of the family, but if not paid by him may be enforced against any person whose income is included in the assessment; but the member of the family who pays the tax shall have the legal right of reimbursement against each other member of the family in the proportion that the net income of such other member bears to the combined net income: Provided further, That the wife may elect to make an independent return of income derived from her separate estate, in which case she shall be entitled to an exemption of $2,000, and the husband to an exemption of $2,000; but the total exemption to husband, wife, and minor children living together shall in no case exceed $4,000: Provided further, That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than $3,000 or $4,000, as provided in this paragraph, from the amount of net income received from all sources.

And insert:

SEC. 7 (a). That there shall be deducted from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and a wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together: Provided further That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than $3,000 or, if married, $4,000, as provided in this paragraph, from the amount of net income received from all sources.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate for any length of time, but I move to strike from this paragraph the words "four thousand dollars" wherever they occur, and to insert "three thousand dollars," and to strike out the word "three" and to insert "two" where the word "three" occurs. The purpose of my amendment is to reduce the exemption from the imposition of the income tax from $4,000 for married men and $3,000 for unmarried men to $3,000 for married men and to $2,000 for unmarried men.

Mr. President, I am thoroughly in favor of an income tax; I do not think there is any tax that can be so well justified as an income tax, because it fairly distributes the burdens of taxation; and I am for it because it does equalize the burdens of taxation. A tax of 1 per cent on $1,000 after a man has $3,000 exempt to him, is not a great burden; in other words, if my amendment prevails, if a man has an income of $4,000, under the terms of this bill—I had in mind the original bill when I spoke a moment ago—there is a normal tax of 2 per cent, and a man with an income of $4,000 under the terms of this bill, if he is a married man, is exempt from all income taxation to the Federal Government.

I recognize the fact that all men pay the indirect tax, the tariff tax and the internal-revenue taxes. That burden is very heavy on the poor man, but I contend that a man with an income of $4,000 is not a poor man. He may not be a rich man, but he is not a poor man.

If you adopt my amendment, a man with an income of $4,000 a year will have to pay $20 a year to the Federal Government to support it. His property is protected; his life is protected; and I believe it will equalize this tax to a greater degree if this amendment is adopted than if the language is allowed to stand as it now is in the bill.

I stood for this proposition when the original bill was enacted, but had to yield because I was outvoted. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not believe that the burdens of taxation ought to be oppressive; but I believe that all men, except the very poor, ought to be willing to pay a reasonable share of the burden of taxation to support their Government. I think it makes better citizens of them.

When you consider that more than one-half of all the families in the United States live on an income of a thousand dollars a year, I think it is idle to say that a man who has $4,000 a year income is a poor man, or that a man who has $4,000 a year income ought not to be willing to pay some share of the burdens of this Government.

I think, if this amendment were adopted, Mr. President, it would make this law more satisfactory than it would otherwise be. The great burden of this tax falls on the wealth of the country, and properly so; I do not object to that. I think the great wealth of the country receives the greater protection under an income tax, and that it ought to pay a large percentage in the support of the Government; but if you leave this bill as it stands, with all men who are married exempt from taxation unless they have over $4,000 of income, and all men who are unmarried exempt, unless they have $3,000 of income, you are narrowing down the scope of the men who are required to pay these taxes to between four hundred and five hundred thousand individual citizens of the United States.

We have 100,000,000 people; and if you exclude from any participation in this tax and in the support of the Government 99,500,000 people, you put the burden on a half million people. If that half million people have enough property that is protected, I do not object to their paying the tax, and they ought to pay it, but when you narrow them out in such small numbers, they will naturally feel apprehensive that they will be singled out in the future to have their property confiscated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator's amendment is agreed to, will the Senator state the additional number that will be reached by virtue of that change in the law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not the facts. I wish I could state to the Senator the number. It will not very greatly increase the number, I admit.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will practically double the number, will it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am informed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who has looked into the matter, that it will probably double the number.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it will probably double the number.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it will not greatly increase the revenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, that would leave 99,000,000 exemptions even then?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would leave 99,000,000 outside.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When the Senator from Alabama says 99,000,000 he includes women and children, of course?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If you really treat it from the standpoint of the heads of families, the figures would be vastly different.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true; but I am talking about population. Of course, women are taxed, and they have to pay the income tax; and children are taxed, and they have to pay the income tax if they have incomes sufficiently large. The women may not have as much to pay as the men, or the children may not have as much to pay as the men, but they are all included; they all have to pay if they have the incomes. So it comes down practically, under the present law, to less than half a million, as you have got this bill written, and to less than a million if my amendment is adopted; but you would thereby give stability to the law, you would give more confidence and get more consent on the part of the men who must pay this tax if they felt that there was a small portion of this tax being imposed in communities in the United States where it will reflect public sentiment against the injustices that might be done them in the future. That is all there is in it; and I believe it is a wise thing to do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying, and I venture to interrupt him, because I should like to hear, before he takes his seat, what his view is of a suggestion to extend this proposition still further and to reduce the exemption limit to, say, a thousand dollars, and make the tax upon incomes, say, between $4,000 and $1,000 only 1 per cent, my idea being not to put a burdensome tax upon small incomes, but as far as possible to give all citizens the opportunity to contribute to the support of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I would myself cheerfully vote for an amendment to tax all incomes between $1,000 and $4,000 at the rate of 1 per cent and let the law go on as it is; but I think the proposition which I have made is more likely to be adopted. I prefer to have a vote on that proposition, because I think that is a logical move in the right direction. I am informed that if my amendment were adopted it would add to the revenues of the Government $8,000,000, which is a fair amount of revenue, an amount that should be considered; but it is not the amount that I have offered the proposition to meet; it is to give stability and life and confidence to this great piece of legislation that we are considering. I do not believe that the man who is paying a tax on $100,000 of income will object to the paying of the tax or the system nearly as much if he feels that he is going to be treated on a fair basis, and that he will have an opportunity to be heard by the American people, and all the American people down the line to be able to respond to the sentiment, as he will if he is put out in a small class by himself where he feels that he is in the power of any Congress to confiscate his property. I do not believe that the Congress is going to confiscate his property; but you leave the man who is put in a small class by himself and taxed where he feels he is in danger of confiscation.

I think that this income tax is a great piece of legislation; it is a piece of legislation along the right lines in the interest of the masses of the American people. It ought to be popularized, and not only popularized at the bottom, but it ought to be popularized at the top to make it stable and a part of the existing financial system of our Government.

The best way to give it stability is, within reasonable limitations, to let it extend at fair and reasonable rates to men who can afford to carry their share of the burden of this Government. I do not believe it is going to be unpopular to reduce the exemption. Point me to a man in a local community having an independent income of $4,000 who comes out and attacks this bill because he is called upon to pay the Government of the United States $20 a year to support the Government and I will show you a man in that community whose neighbors will point at him the finger of scorn.

I do not believe the amendment I have offered, if agreed to, will make the bill unpopular; I believe it will popularize the bill, and, more than that, I believe it is right. I have therefore proposed the amendment and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has some of his figures wrong. He has spoken about 500,000 people paying the present income tax, but he forgets that when a man has an exemption of $4,000, that man has a family. From the returns of the Treasury there are 282,806 families paying this tax, and if a family is composed of a man and wife and three children there would be 1,110,000 people, in round numbers, paying the tax in that class alone, if it be supposed that the wife and children must, of course, contribute their share of the burden of taxation levied upon the husband. Then there are 75,000 individuals paying the tax, and then there are something like 3,000,000 stockholders in 100,000 corporations in this country who pay the tax, because when a corporation pays it their dividends are necessarily that much less. But leaving out that, which is a minor consideration, the Senator says that he wants to equalize the burden of taxation. That is well expressed and that is the wish, I take it, of everybody. In other words, it is desired to make men pay taxes in proportion to their ability to pay taxes. Solon, of Athens, about a thousand years before Christ, made a very good short speech in favor of a graduated income tax upon the theory, to turn it into American coinage, that if a man had to pay 10 per cent upon $50 of annual income, he paid out of his necessities; if he paid 10 per cent upon $500, he paid out of his comforts; and if he paid 10 per cent upon $100,000, let us say, he would only pay out of his luxuries; and even of the income tax as now graduated that is true. Those at the bottom pay out of their necessities; a little higher up they pay out of their comforts; and still higher up they pay out of their luxuries only. We have sought by the graduation only to reduce that characteristic, which is almost essential to the taxation itself.

The Senator says that every man ought to bear his burden of taxation and feel proud, too, that he has a part in sustaining the Government which protects him. I agree to that, and every man in this country, except paupers, pays his share of the taxes—I mean, he pays a share; it may or it may not be his share. Every man who wears a hat or a coat, every man who buys a thing that has an import duty on it pays his share. Every man who indulges in a single article which is subject to an internal-revenue tax pays a tax. Every poor farmer in the State of Mississippi, with 1 mule and 30 acres of land, pays more tax in proportion to his ability to pay than the richest man in New York does.

If this were the only tax that a man paid in the United States, the Senator from Alabama would be right; but this is not the only tax that he pays. He pays his import taxes; he pays his internal-revenue taxes; he pays his State and county and municipal taxes; he pays his water rates; he pays his light rate; he pays every rate that he must pay. He does not get his transportation upon the railroads or the street railways any cheaper than the richest man in the world; in other words, the amount which must come out of his pocket every year, and especially taxation expenses, is already greater in proportion for the married man, with children and a wife, who does not possess an income of over $4,000 a year, than for any other man under this income tax. His sacrifice is greater in proportion to what he receives.

I said a moment ago that if this were the only tax, the Senator would be right; and I meant by that he would be right in his main proposition that everybody ought to pay something to the support of the Government; but even there he would not be right, because he would be absolutely illogical. There is not a particle of logic in making the argument which he makes and then stopping at $3,000 for a family or $2,000 for a single person. If he is to follow out the logic of his observations, then he wants no exemption at all. If by this tax alone we can equalize the taxation burden, then there ought to be no exemption, and the man who gets only $100 a year ought to pay 50 cents of it or a dollar of it, and the man who gets only $10 a year ought to pay a nickel of it, or whatever the tax might be.

There is another objection to it, Mr. President. An income tax has only one disadvantage, and that is in its administration. In its administration it is a troublesome tax to the taxpayer. It requires him to go into all of his business, and the fewer number of people you can make do that without doing injustice to those who are taxed, the less trouble and worry and espionage there is to be endured by the citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, if a man has a wife and seven children—and he ought to have that many—or a wife and five children even, and has only $4,000 a year, it is about all that he can do to clothe and educate them properly, without burdening him with further taxes added to the taxes with which he is already burdened. If he uses tobacco, or if he is a poor man and takes his glass of beer—on a dozen articles on which an internal-revenue tax is levied—he must pay his share of it; and he must pay his share of every other tax levied. I doubt if Mr. Rockefeller, with his habits of dress, pays any more import duty per annum than a mechanic who earns $75 a month, so far as dress is concerned.

It seems to me we have got this about right, and we had better leave it right where it is and not let the income-tax collector enter the household of as many more people as would be involved.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word. One might infer from the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on this proposition that he thinks a citizen earning no more than $4,000 a year should at certain times be treated as a ward of the Nation. A man who earns $4,000 a year is generally regarded as very fortunate. As has been stated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], more than one-half of the households in the United States subsist on salaries or incomes of less than $1,000 a year, and the household that has a $4,000 income is well circumstanced. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi would not say that men in his State who earn $4,000 a year are poor men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi never has said that.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I rather suspect that they would regard themselves as very well to do.

The great objection to this system, as we have attempted to administer it in the present law and in the proposed law, is the gross inequality which has received the sanction of the American Government. Equality of citizenship was the fundamental basis upon which this Government was reared and upon which it maintained itself for over a century.

We have taken what I regard as one of the most efficient methods, if not the most efficient method of taxation, namely, an income tax; but we have so restricted and hedged it about as to make it a burden on less than one-half of 1 per cent of the American people. I have no fault with the system which will make wealth bear its just burden of the expenses of a great Government, because the man of wealth derives a greater measure of protection and benefit from our Government than is derived by the man without wealth; and I have during the administration of the present law heard no man of wealth object to the tax he pays; but I have heard many of them regret that the American Congress should pass a law with pauperizing tendencies, telling 99½ per cent of the American people: "We have devised a plan, we have conceived a method by which we can make you immune from the burdens of taxation; we will take it in large quantities from those who have."

How does this system work out? Under the existing income-tax law you have taken more from the single State of New York than has been taken from all of the combined States in the South and west of the Mississippi River. There is something wrong under our form of Government when such inequalities are possible, and I am deeply impressed with the thought that we are weakening the foundations of our Government when we are making millions of our citizens understand that while they may enjoy all the advantages they are to be exempt from the responsibilities of Government.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama. In my judgment, the exemption should be reduced so that in the case of a family it will be not to exceed $2,000, and in the case of an individual without a family not to exceed $1,000. But I am also impressed with the fact that there may be more likelihood of making the moderate change which he recommends than the larger change which the facts would seem to justify. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, just one word, and then, so far as I am concerned, I should like to have a vote; and that word only to answer one point made by the Senator from New York. It is made not now for the first time, but all the time. Another Senator from New York—Mr. Root—when we first adopted the income tax some years ago, made the same point, that New York paid the income tax.

Well, New York does not. It just so happens that New York is a great metropolis, and it just so happens that nearly all the great, rich corporations have their headquarters in New York; and it just so happens, therefore, that the income-tax returns go out from New York; but the activities of those corporations are not confined to New York. Their activities extend from the Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the people everywhere pay their share of what they earn.

It reminds me that once I heard a man say that Kentucky paid a great, big, enormous share of the internal-revenue taxes because she produced so much tobacco and so much whisky. The truth was, of course, that the man who drank the whisky or smoked or chewed the tobacco paid the tax, and these were the mere intermediaries; and New York is a mere intermediary—that is all. Why, if the people in New York City were confined to the incomes which they earn from purely New York City enterprises—they could not be, because they would all go broke, so far as that is concerned—but if those of them who were left after they were confined to that paid an income tax you would see at once that this fallacy would disappear of its own force. The tax is not sectional.

A corporation having its headquarters in New York owns a railroad in Mississippi. A man in New York owns a majority of the stock. He pays the tax, but the railroad is down in Mississippi. It is in Alabama. It runs through to Florida. A copper mine has its headquarters up in New York and the tax is paid at that collector's office, but the mine that earns the money is down in Arizona; and so with the coal mine which is down in West Virginia, perhaps, or the silver mine which is in Colorado.

We ought to have a surcease of that sort of talk. New York is not taxed to death nor abused, and it never has been. It is the great reservoir toward which the earnings of the American people are concentrated for distribution again and in which they are handled.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has just said is absolutely true, but I do not think it militates against the argument of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] with regard to the lowering of the exemption. It may or may not be true, but in theory it is practically the accepted doctrine that men interest themselves in the financial affairs of their government in proportion as they are made to bear its burdens directly.

The great objection that I have always had to indirect taxation is that it deprives the citizen of that consciousness of contribution which is essential to the stimulating of his interest in the method in which the revenues are expended. I think, too, it is democratic to make direct taxes not only the chief source—and, if it were possible, the only source—of Government revenue, but also to distribute them as far as possible, of course keeping in mind the general principle of equality. The more men are burdened with direct taxes in this country—and of course they all receive the protection of the Government—the more likely it will be that some movement in the direction of that economy which we all preach, but which none of us practice, will be observable in the administration of public affairs.

I am heartily in favor of this reduction. My one criticism of it would be that the reduction is not enough; and I think it was a great mistake which the Senate committee made two years ago when, instead of accepting the House rates, we substituted for them the rates which are in the present law and which are in the pending bill.

I shall vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the yeas and nays are going to be called, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kern	Pittman	Smoot
Bankhead	Lane	Pomerene	Sterling
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Stone
Chilton	McCumber	Reed	Taggart
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Thomas
Cummins	Myers	Saulsbury	Thompson
Fletcher	Nelson	Shafroth	Underwood
Gallinger	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gronna	O'Gorman	Sherman	Wadsworth
Harding	Oliver	Simmons	Warren
Hughes	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Husting	Penrose	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to his name when called.

Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to reduce the income-tax exemptions from $4,000 to $3,000 for heads of families and from $3,000 to $2,000 for persons not heads of families. Do I understand correctly?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I want to say something about that, and I promise brevity in saying it. Speaking for myself, I say frankly I am not out of sympathy with the idea embodied in the Senator's motion, although wholly out of sympathy with the motion itself as offered at this time. I am of those who believe that, as far as practicable, every man who enjoys the protection of the Government should contribute to its support, and contribute in the same way as others contribute; the rich and the poor in the same way, as far as practicable—every man according to his ability. I do not like the idea of creating by law, in any form of legislation, a class throughout the United States—that is, a class made up of rich people alone—upon whom the burden is imposed in some special sense of supporting the Government, exempting men of lesser means from the burden of taxation on particular lines. I would have any tax law we passed apply to everybody—that is, I would, if I could have my way, make every tax law universal in its application. I would have even the widow's mite contributed to the maintenance of the Government. I want all men and women to feel that when the Government needs money they are willing to contribute something, according to their means, even though it be but little. I am as much opposed to a tax-paying aristocracy as to any other kind of aristocracy. I stand for a democracy in sharing the privileges of government, and e converso I stand for a democracy in sharing the burdens of government. I would not build up a class inflated with the idea that they were by law separated from the masses and clothed with some special dignity of supporting the national credit.

Mr. President, I made a motion in the Committee on Finance, like that here made by the Senator from Alabama, to reduce this exemption from four thousand to three thousand dollars in the case of married people and from three thousand to two thousand dollars in the case of unmarried people. I venture to make this statement with some hesitancy, for it occurred in the committee room; but I make it because it concerns no other Senator but myself, and I am willing to have it known. But after a prolonged discussion in the committee no action was finally taken. I am, of course, speaking of the Democratic members of the committee. No final action was taken by the committee, and this provision as it came from the House of Representatives, copied from the existing law, was reported by the committee to the Democratic conference, and the chairman of the Committee on Finance, by the authority of his colleagues on the committee, supplemented by the authority of his Democratic colleagues in conference or caucus, reported this provision of the bill to the Senate.

I am not going to say much about this motion of my friend from Alabama. What he does is his business. He can take his own course; but I wish here now, in the beginning of the assaults I understand are to be made from this side under the Senator's leadership upon this bill, to register my protest as a Democrat against such a course. It is whispered about the Chamber on this side that there is a combination of Democratic Senators who mean to pursue this obstructive course. We will see what we shall see. Mr. President, as I turn I look into the smiling faces of my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and of my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], all happy at the prospect of this accession to their forces. I wish here and now, in the beginning, to register a protest against this breakaway.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Missouri registers a protest. I wonder who he registers the protest with and against whom? And, forsooth, for what purpose does the Senator from Missouri register a protest? Has the Senate of the United States degenerated to a point where the individual Senators of this body must take orders from other Senators, forsooth, who may serve on committees because their constituencies have kept them for a number of years in this body?

If that be the case, why should we proceed further with the consideration of the bill? Why not allow the Senator in charge of the measure to announce to the Senate what conclusions have been reached by those who assume to dictate the votes of other Senators, and let us close up our business at once and not delay final adjournment of this session?

I have great respect for the men on the Finance Committee. They have done earnest work, and hard work, and good work. I stated the other day that in the main I approve of the conclusions they have reached; but I have never yet since I have been a member of a legislative body found that anybody had a right to protest against another member of that body exercising his individual views as to what was best for his constituency and best for his country.

I know of no reason whatever why the Committee on Finance, with all the good work it has done, should see fit to arrogate to itself the right to dictate to its colleagues on the floor of this Chamber. If the members of the committee desire to occupy that attitude, I want it distinctly understood now, for this time and for the future, that I do not recognize the right of any member of any committee to dictate to me my attitude on any legislative matter when I am trying to legislate for the best interests of the constituency I represent.

I need not waste any further words about that. If that is treason, make the most of it.

Now, as to a Democratic caucus, we have not had a Democratic caucus. No man can question my loyalty to the Democratic Party. In victory and in defeat I have stood by the Democratic flag. I have stood by the Democratic flag when there was no provender that came to my portion of the camp.

When the Democratic Party wants to go into a binding caucus, though I do not believe that is the best way to legislate, and say that all men shall be bound on every question that comes before that caucus, I will bow my neck and accept the result. I have done so. I have done so this very week.

It was easy for the Senator from Missouri to vote against the consideration of an immigration bill on the floor of the Senate when his attitude has always been against it. But my attitude has always been in favor of an immigration bill. I believe in it from my heart. I have voted for it a number of times. I voted to pass the immigration bill over President Taft's veto and I voted to pass the immigration bill over President Wilson's veto, and I would do it again if I had an opportunity. When I went into a caucus that my colleagues said was binding and they took the responsibility and placed it on the Democratic Party of saying that they would not take up an immigration bill at this session of Congress, I unwillingly accepted the result, but I accepted it.

I was invited into a conference on this bill. No binding resolution was passed. The committee itself was not bound. The committee itself has offered amendments to this bill that were not proposed in caucus. Does the committee propose to arrogate to itself privileges which are not accorded to other Members of this body? If they do, I for one would like to know whence comes their authority.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think the committee has undertaken to present any amendment that it was not authorized to present by the caucus. The caucus after finishing the bill gave the committee rather broad powers with reference to forming it and with reference to changing certain titles of the bill. I do not think the Senator can say anything of that sort.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The caucus also gave to the membership of this House certain broad powers toward the amendment of the bill because they did not seek to limit them in their action. Does the Senator from North Carolina contend that there was any binding resolution passed in reference to this bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not contend that there was any binding resolution passed in reference to the bill; as a matter of fact there was none. But I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama does he think that the action of the caucus has no appealing force to members of the majority?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly, I think it has just that; it has an appealing force; and so far as I am concerned I follow that appealing force when it goes to lines that I think I can agree to.

The committee has reported an amendment to this bill putting a tax on dyestuffs. Some of the rates under its amendment that the committee proposes to the bill run as high as 130 and 140 per cent. They have written their dyestuff tax by giving free raw material, a slightly higher tax on intermediates, and a much higher tax on the finished product. They have not been content with that. They have adopted a compound duty, a specific duty and an ad valorem duty added together. If they had attempted with all the power resting in them to copy the Republican protective tariff bill, they could not have more effectively done it, in my judgment, as to that one particular item.

I am not now talking of the general scope of the bill, because, as I said the other day and I say it now, I approve of it. But does the Senator mean to say, does any Senator mean to say, that when I have stood for a lifetime as a Democrat, repudiating protection, standing for a tariff for revenue, that I should be bound to follow the committee or the caucus? It is persuasive force. If the Democratic caucus wants to bind me on Republican doctrine, let it declare that it is going to be a binding caucus, and then I will exercise the privilege whether I will separate myself permanently from that organization or accept the result and bow to the desecration of Democratic principles.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has been and was for a long time a distinguished Member of the other House. The Senator was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The Senator held during his incumbency of that position a number of caucuses. I do not know what the rule there was, but my impression is that the committee regarded themselves as bound by the action of the caucus and the Democrats of the House regarded themselves as bound by the caucus.

Now, we have had in the Senate a rule that when it was decided at the conclusion of the labors of the conference to make the bill under consideration a party measure, all Democrats, whether they were present in caucus or not, should be bound by that action.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator has just stated himself that this was not a binding caucus.

Mr. SIMMONS. Just let me finish, if the Senator will pardon me a minute. On the other hand, we have held caucuses, and that was the case with this bill, where we discussed the subject in detail and took action upon the different propositions embraced in the general project of legislation, and adjourned without passing a binding resolution. But our custom has been that when Senators entered the caucus, participated in the debates, if they did not desire to be bound by the result of the action, they have, so far as I know, invariably announced in caucus that they would reserve the right upon the floor of the Senate to take such action with reference to that particular caucus action as they saw fit.

Now, the Senator was present, I think, when the matter now under discussion was considered. I do not remember that the Senator announced that he would reserve the right of independent action upon the floor of the Senate, but I do remember that when the dyestuffs proposition was under consideration and was decided adversely to the contention and position of the Senator he did announce that upon that question he would pursue his own course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from North Carolina does not remember anything of the kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. I may be mistaken, but that is my recollection about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator says I am mistaken, I am mistaken; but my recollection is that way. I will ask the Senator if he did not make that statement? Some one made it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is not one single act the Senator has stated that is warranted by the fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell you why.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I am mistaken, I accept it. I admit the Senator's recollection about that is better than mine, because he was an actor, rather than myself. But I will ask the Senator if he did not say that with reference to some other subject matter we had up there upon which he was defeated? My recollection may not be as good as his about it, but my recollection is that it was with reference to the matter of section 2, the munitions title.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to reflect on the Senator from North Carolina. I would not have taken the floor if the Senator from Missouri had not seen proper and right to lecture me for making this motion to amend, and nobody can do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know the Senator did not. The Senator came in during this debate and stepped in inadvertently without knowing the situation; but I tell the Senator he is entirely mistaken. He has imagined the case as far as I am concerned, and he is entirely mistaken in reference to it. I was not at the caucus at all when the dyestuffs schedule came up. I had left the conference and refused to go back because——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that very likely I have in mind when the conference had under consideration the amendment to section 2. I ask the Senator if he did not make that statement on that subject?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not. I had left the caucus.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then nobody else did, if you did not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I left the Democratic caucus or the Democratic conference before that question ever came up, and I did not return. I will tell the Senator why I did not return. No; that is a question that will be personal between the Senator and myself, and I will refrain from doing it. It was in reference to section 2 of the munitions title that I did not return, but I did not make any statement in reference to it, because I have seen other men go to the conference since I have been a Member of the Senate and take such a position on the floor of the Senate as they thought proper. I think this idea about a man going into a conference that is not a binding caucus and having to follow the will of a committee is fiction, a dream that is invented by Senators to try to whip people into line.

Let me tell the Senator what is the fact and what is the law of that caucus. If they want to build theories outside of it, it is all right.

These Senators know that there is a rule in the Democratic caucus or conference, whichever you want to call it—it is immaterial to me. The same rule prevails in the House of Representatives. The rule is that a measure to be binding must receive a two-thirds vote of the entire membership of the caucus, not of those present. Does the Senator agree with me about that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree it is the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the rule. It is the rule as I understood it, and it is the rule as I understand it now.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, in our caucus, without any reference to whether we are going to make it party action or not, it is the custom for a Senator, if he does not propose to be bound by some particular action, to give notice that he will pursue an independent course in pursuance of the right he has under the caucus.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not been a member of the conference as long as the Senator from North Carolina, and I am not prepared to state what is the custom; but if it was the custom, I do not know of it. If it is the custom, I have seen it violated since I have been in the United States Senate without any question being made. I have seen committees go into conference and then change their action when they came out of it. I do not mean to say when there was binding action in the conference the committees having legislation in charge changed their bills when they came out here. It may have been the custom in the conference, but if it was the custom, why do you maintain a two-thirds rule?

In the House of Representatives we had caucuses. We never attempted to make them binding unless we passed deliberately a binding rule and gave notice that we would do so, and everybody knew it; and then under our caucus rules, just as under the caucus rules of the Senate, if a man said that he believed the provision was contrary to the Constitution of the United States or made him violate a pledge to his constituency he had a right to get up and exempt himself from the caucus. I have had them do it when I was leader, and I want to say that under the leadership I had in the House no man can ever point to the fact that I thought it necessary to attempt to lecture anybody.

I recognized that the men of that House represented a constituency, that they were men who had a right to be treated as men, and if they thought upon their consciences that they were violating their promise to their constituency they had a right not to be bound. No man ever heard me question or attempt to lecture a man for his act. But when you come here with a rule of the caucus which says it takes two-thirds to make a binding vote, and when you never attempted to have a two-thirds binding vote, how do you know that you have gotten it? How do you know that you have gotten a two-thirds binding vote for this bill? Probably if you had thought you could, you would have tried to put it over; but without attempting to do it, when you come here and attempt to lecture me because I dare to stand here and repudiate a portion of your bill that is opposed to the great principles of the Democratic Party for a hundred years on the tariff question, I want this committee to understand if that is the basis on which I have to associate in the Democratic conference and not be able to stand by my views and my constituency, that I am asked to swallow Republican doctrine or be lectured for it, you can understand that from this hour I am willing to stand alone. I propose to stand here for the great principles of my party, as I understand them, and for the constituency I represent, and I do not propose to allow any man to question my position. There is no man who desires to treat his colleagues with more kindness and with more courtesy on the floor of the Senate than I do; I have tried to pursue that course; but when I see proper for the interest of this country and my constituency to differ from them and I have made no binding contract to stand with them, I do not propose to have my motive questioned, and I will not take it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, paraphrasing what Daniel Webster said, "After the storm has blown, after the waves have rolled high and the lightning has flashed, the mariner resorts to his compass to find out where he is." The yeas and nays have been called on the pending question, and I hope that now the Senate is ready to vote upon the motion.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire a few moments——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. STONE. I will speak when I desire to, and will not ask that liberty of any gentleman here. To call out aloud for a vote when a Senator is on the floor is a contemptible act, and I have a personal contempt for any man who does it. That is enough to say on that subject.

Mr. President, it is not my province to lecture the junior Senator from Alabama or to lecture any other Senator; I do not presume to do that; but I am a Democratic Senator, old in service here, and older still in party service; I always take part in Democratic conferences or caucuses, and I believe that Senators who take part in these party gatherings ought to respect what is done in such meetings. I am yielding now in this very matter to the judgment of the majority of my colleagues. Unless that is done, party solidarity, cohesion, and cooperation are impossible.

The oratorical heroics displayed by the junior Senator from Alabama are but a repetition of like heroics we have witnessed on this floor on former occasions. Of course the Senator can not be dragooned or coerced, and should not be. The honorable Senator comes to this Chamber with a great name, built upon great service to his party and country, and it astounds me that, coming, as he does, from the House of Representatives, where he had long been the party leader, where he was the head of the Ways and Means Committee—which committee, in a large way, controlled the policies of the House, and in which committee there was a rule that the majority of the committee should control its action—it astounds me that this great Democrat should come here to the Senate and advise, counsel, and strive to lead us into a course of conduct that would make party conferences worse than useless. I had supposed he would stand for party regularity; I am amazed that he would countenance any movement promotive of party disorganization. What is the use of having conferences if they mean nothing?

Mr. President, I do not lecture anybody, but I do speak my own thought. I do not wish to offend, but I shall speak without fear or favor whenever I think there is occasion to speak. For days a rumor has been going about this side of the Chamber that a certain coterie of Senators, under the leadership of the Senator from Alabama, mean to attack certain important provisions of this bill. To this obstructive and destructive movement it is understood that the Senator from Alabama is lending the great influence of his name. Very well; so be it. This bill has been approved by a Democratic conference in the Senate; also in the main by a Democratic House; also by a Democratic President. If an effort is to be made here now to tear apart and disorganize our forces, let us know it. If unhappily he so desires, the Senator from Alabama can take the responsibility of it. He can lead, and he knows how to lead as well as any man amongst us. He is a man of conceded influence and power. He may group about him and under his leadership Senators enough to make the passage of this bill difficult, if not impossible. As to that we shall see.

No, Mr. President; I do not lecture the Senator; I do not lecture any Senator. The term is ill chosen. But I have a right as a Democrat, the same right of any other Democrat, talking to his own people, to protest against what I consider wrong. The Senator asks by what right I use the word "protest," and I used it intentionally. I answer him that I protest against his party right, not his official right; against his right as a Democrat, not his official right as a Senator, to fight his party. No man has a right to take a place in the rank of his party, participate in its organization, its councils, its work, unless he means to stand by what his party does. I can not understand how any honorable man could have any other view than this.

Mr. President, we had this immediate question covered by the motion of the Senator from Alabama before our caucus, and if there was a vote in that caucus or a voice there raised against the acceptance of this provision as it appears here in the bill, I do not recall it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the Senator mean to say that I made any motion about the provision being considered here to-day in the Democratic caucus?

Mr. STONE. No; I am saying that if the Senator did anything of that kind I never heard it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the Senator to say that I made the motion.

Mr. HUGHES (to Mr. UNDERWOOD). The Senator from Missouri stated that you made the motion here to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; he said in the caucus. I had nothing to do with it in the caucus.

Mr. STONE. Let this be perfectly understood. I may have inadvertently used the word "caucus"—although I think not—but what I meant to say was that if the provision of the bill covered by the motion now made here by the Senator from Alabama was before the caucus, if the Senator from Alabama or any other Senator then made any motion about this provision, if it was then in any way brought into controversy, I do not recall it. This provision was agreed to unanimously—not by a two-thirds vote, but unanimously. The Senator from Alabama did not give his party friends in the conference a chance to pass upon the idea he is now advancing. He springs it upon us here.

Protest! Mr. President, if the Senator asks me by what right I protest, I reply I have a right to protest because of more than 40 years of faithful service to the Democratic Party, both in and out of official life. My service may not have been as distinguished or as able as that of the Senator from Alabama, but certainly it has been as consistent and as faithful as that of any living man. Protest! I do protest that if the Senator from Alabama wanted to change this provision he should have taken the judgment of his party colleagues upon it in the caucus instead of throwing it in here to distract us, and that, too, after the caucus of which the Senator was a part and in which he took part, had by a unanimous vote directed the chairman of the Finance Committee to report this provision just as it appears.

The Senator can not get me to talk now about the immigration bill, dyestuffs, or other matters entirely foreign to the question before the Senate. I am talking now about this provision of the bill, and will not be diverted.

Why abuse the Finance Committee? The prestige and power of that committee are not now at issue. Back of that committee, and above it, is the unanimous voice of my friend's party associates, instructing the chairman of the Finance Committee to report this provision. The Senator on his motion and responsibility seeks to overturn the decision of his party colleagues. Is this the first wedge to be driven into the bill by this reported combination, and is it to be followed by another and another and another?

Yes, Mr. President, I do protest, and I have a right to protest as a Democrat.

God knows I do not want to offend any man here. I had rather spill blood out of my veins than to offend my friend from Alabama or any other Democrat among my colleagues here. I love these men—all of them. I have a reason to love them, and I have no other feeling than one of the greatest kindness toward them. Mr. President, I may be, as the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] said the other day, "roaring," and, as he said, my roaring may have become a joke. I did not reply in kind, and will not now, although I might have said something about conduct of his which has long since ceased to be a joke.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the Senator need not refrain from saying anything he wants to say about me.

Mr. STONE. I prefer to refrain.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not do so.

Mr. STONE. On some future occasion I may not.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I do not like to offend these men; but when the integrity of our party organization is at stake, so help me Heaven, if I be the only man on the floor of the Senate to do this thing, I shall speak out with such force and energy as I can in protest. I want my party here to be cohesive and cooperative; I want that we should do things. I will fight anybody, at any time, who undertakes to break up our organization. That is all I care to say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long. I dislike to have this controversy; it is very unsatisfactory to me. I have never scratched a Democratic ticket; I have never failed to support Democratic platforms; I have never failed to support the candidates of my party; and I think my record will compare very well with that of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. In that respect; certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Missouri had anything here but a made-up case, a case that is concocted out of his imagination and that of certain gentlemen who desire to dictate to this side of the House what they shall do, I would listen with great consideration and endeavor to yield to him.

We have rules as to when a man shall be governed in a Democratic conference or caucus. I have always abided by the rules. I do not recall whether I was in the caucus or not when this particular provision was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the Senator was there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may have been there at that time or I may not have been; but if there was any vote taken on it, I do not recall it. I know the courtesy that is accorded to a committee as a general rule, although not always, of one member notifying the other members of the committee what he is going to do; but I never heard of it being necessary to notify other members of a caucus that was not binding as to what steps any member of the caucus was going to take, because it is assumed, when the caucus is not binding, that every member of the caucus has a right to do what he pleases when he walks out of it.

The Senator from Missouri seeks to build up a case. Of course I understand perfectly well what the Senator is driving at. He does not care anything about this amendment; it is a minor matter. The Senator knows I am going to repudiate that portion of the bill that he has reported to the Senate in reference to the dyestuffs schedule, because I say it is un-Democratic and a retreat from the principles of the Democratic Party.

I do not know who has been giving out any rumors that I was going to lead an attack on the bill. That grew out of the imagination of the Senator from Missouri, because I have not tried to organize anybody to fight this bill or that schedule of the bill. I will say to the Senator from Missouri candidly that I know as well as he knows that before I start to move my amendment in reference to the dyestuffs schedule, before the vote is taken, I am going to be overwhelmingly defeated, because it is a Republican proposition; it is a Republican provision in this bill. It is for a protective tariff. I suppose every Senator on the other side of the Chamber is going to vote for it, and I do not know that I can name any man on this side of the Chamber who is going to vote against it but myself. I know in their hearts and consciences there are many men on this side of the Chamber who do not approve of that provision in the bill, but they may follow the committee because they may feel they ought to follow the committee, or they may feel that the Senator from Missouri will question their standing in the party if they do not follow the committee on that item. The Senator from Missouri can not expect me to follow his committee unless there has been a binding caucus according to the rules. When I have been given notice and I take part in a caucus and submit my chances to the result, I have always stood by its action. I stood by its action the other day when I did not want to do so, and whenever I take part in a binding conference or caucus I will stand by it; no man can ever question that I have not done so in a single instance; but I did not go into a binding caucus on this bill. I went into a conference, and when a conference expect me to follow their position, they have got to remain Democratic, or, at least, without reflecting upon their opinions about the matter, they have got to remain within the lines that I believe are covered by the great principles of the Democratic Party.

I did not intend to take up the time of the Senate, but the Senator from Missouri has referred to the fact that I was a leader of my party in the other House; that I was the leader of the party when the present revenue law which it is sought to amend was written on the statute books. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that I led that party there, if I led it, to stand for Democratic principles, to stand for a revision of the tariff downward, to repudiate the idea of a protective tariff. If now I meekly submit my neck to the yoke of a conference that it is conceded was not binding according to the rule, and bow my head to accept an amendment to the present tariff law that in many cases imposes a tariff tax at the customhouse of above 60 per cent, and in some cases as high as 130 or 140 per cent, that is written under a compound duty—an ad valorem with a specific added—that the party has never stood for as far as my knowledge of it is concerned as a principle; if I follow this conference into that position, and in the coming November election we should be so unfortunate as to lose the battle, and a Republican President and a Republican Congress should be elected, and the Senators on the other side of the Chamber next March meet here to prepare a Republican tariff bill, and they take the cotton schedule and the woolen schedule and the iron and steel schedule and make them conform to the rates that the Senator from Missouri has put in this bill on the dyestuffs schedule, in what position would I be, when they were preparing to repeal the bill that I aided to put on the statute books, to say to them, "You must not write Republican laws in place of Democratic laws," when they could reply and say, "Mr. UNDERWOOD, did you vote for the dyestuffs paragraph in the revenue bill? Did you approve of the dyestuffs paragraph in the revenue bill? And if you did, in theory, in practice, in principle, what objection have you?"

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will my friend allow me to say a word?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. The matter before the Senate concerns the motion to reduce the exemptions on incomes from $4,000 to $3,000, and from $3,000 to $2,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I have not said anything about the dyestuffs schedule; and, with all due respect, I submit to my friend that we might discuss that when we get to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not discussing the dyestuffs schedule. I am discussing my right to move to strike the dyestuffs schedule out of this bill. Of course, I know I am not going to succeed in striking it out, but I know I am going to take the Democratic position, the position that I, as a good party man, am compelled to take, and I know that is what lies behind this proposition. I will come right down to the facts.

Of course, I know that what the Senator said about the little motion I made here has nothing to do with the case. I know where the real issue lies. I am not any more bound by this conference than my good friend over here from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who has charge of this item. I did not take any part of it. But a few minutes ago I sat here and listened to the consideration of this bill, and on page 13, line 5, I find a paragraph that reads as follows:

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom.

That was the committee amendment. I ask the Secretary to read from the desk the way that paragraph reads now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fifth. In lawful business transactions entered into but not connected with his regular business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, that is a very important amendment to this paragraph. It is a material amendment to the paragraph. The amendment was agreed to by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Alabama has brought me into this controversy, into which I did not care to come. The Senator from Mississippi did nothing of the sort. The Senator from Mississippi opposed the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]; and then, after it was agreed to over his vote, the Senator from Mississippi asked unanimous consent that it be put in its present shape, with some other amendments added to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose I got in here in time to hear the Senator from Mississippi ask unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, understand me as having nothing to do with this.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do. I am not referring to the Senator from Mississippi. But regardless of whether it was the Senator from Mississippi or some other Senator, the motion was made, and agreed to, to amend that paragraph. None of the Democratic Senators objected. Nobody raised any question. The leadership on this side of the Chamber saw no reason why that provision should not be amended. I have no doubt that before we pass this bill there will be other amendments offered by other Democratic Senators that they are preparing to offer now, some of them on the committee, to the text of the bill. They will be all right. There will be no objection to it, because, forsooth, the committee do not think it is of enough importance for them to interfere. That is all there is to it. There was no binding caucus. They admit it. There is no gentleman's agreement. They know it.

But the Senator from Missouri let the cat out of the bag when he said that he understood that I was going to lead certain attacks on this bill. I do not know where he got his information, because I am not going to lead anybody. I am not attempting to lead anybody. If I were going to lead anybody on this matter I would know that I was going to lead them to defeat in regard to the main proposition that we have under consideration, because I know that the Republican Members of the Senate are not going to vote to strike the dyestuffs tax out of the bill, and I know that enough Democrats will vote for it to pass it; so why should I try to lead anybody? The only thing that I am preserving myself against when my party has not attempted to bind me, has not had a binding caucus, has left it open to everybody else to amend the bill, is that I am not going to stay here and tamely submit because certain Senators want to insist that I should do so; that I can not stand for the great principles of the Democratic Party when they are at stake; that I can not stand for the principles that my constituency in Alabama sent me here to represent.

When Senators on this side of this Chamber want to go to a caucus, call it a caucus, make it binding, and are willing themselves to stand by the results regardless of what happens, they will find that I am ready to go there and never fail to go. But I am not going into a conference that Senators can agree to if it goes their way and repudiate if it does not go their way and then say that I can not exercise my own independent judgment about things that I consider matters of principle.

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, just one word.

A few moments ago I announced my intention of voting for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], however, in his remarks, called attention to the fact that when this bill was finally disposed of by the Committee on Finance everyone acquiesced in the result, and no notice of further dissent was given. Under the circumstances I feel that I can not honorably vote against the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. A short time ago I asked the Senator from Mississippi to have an amendment passed over. I desire now to withdraw that request. I have had an opportunity to look further into it and am satisfied with it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. President, we have discussed the Democratic caucus, we have discussed the dyestuffs provision of this bill, we have discussed one another. I hope now that we may have a vote on the pending motion; and for fear the Senate may have forgotten during this long time what the pending motion is, I will state that it is a motion by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to strike out the $4,000 exemption for families and substitute $3,000, and to strike out the $3,000 exemption for single men or women and substitute $2,000. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be rejected.

I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. HARDING's name was called). I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] is absent. Were he here, he would vote "yea" upon the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He has been called away on business. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my standing pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], who is temporarily absent, and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

I wish to announce that if my colleague [Mr. LODGE] were present he would also vote "yea." My colleague has a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BECKHAM. I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]; and

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bankhead	Gallinger	Nelson	Sterling
Brady	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Underwood
Colt	Kenyon	Oliver	Wadsworth

So Mr. UNDERWOOD's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill as it came here from the House apparently permits an exemption of $4,000 for the head of a family. The Senate committee amendment changes that to this extent, that there is an exemption of $4,000 to a married man or a married woman, the husband living with his wife in the case of the husband or the wife living with her husband in the case of the wife. Mr. President, it occurs to me that a widower with five or six children dependent on him should have that exemption which the Senate committee language forbids and which the House language permits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate committee amendment restores the language of the present law. We thought we could not go into the question of a widow with five children, nor could we go into the question of a man with a dependent family not his own, or what is worse a married woman leaving her husband, if her husband were living; not always, however. It is also true that a man with a dependent family of nieces and nephews is in as bad a fix as a man with a family of children and also a man who has widowed or dependent sisters to take care of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think the result of the change made by the Senate committee is exactly the opposite of that described by the Senator from Mississippi. He says that the Senate committee's language draws the line at the family. It does no such thing. A man may be without any family at all and be exempt provided he is married. The House language provides that the head of a family representing the unit of our social organization shall be exempt. It occurs to me that that is the proper way to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill as passed by the House went so far that if a clerk down here was in receipt of $2,500 and married a female clerk in receipt of $1,800 the next day they should be mulcted and made to pay upon what the House called a "family income." Add the $2,500 to the $1,800 and you have $4,300, so that the two of them would become liable for the tax as a family, although neither was taxable before marriage. The House gave each one of them in that case an exemption of $2,000. It was absolutely penalizing the parties for coming together in lawful wedlock. We thought the present law was more satisfactory than the House provision, and we therefore struck out the House provision and restored the present law. That is what the Senate amendment means. It means the present law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me that the Senate amendment has gone further than to meet a case similar to the one just described by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not mean to say that that was the only case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not raised the question as to the advisability of taxing the joint income of husband and wife, which is the case just now described by the Senator from Mississippi. I have raised the question as to the policy of failing to exempt the head of a family unless that head of a family happens to have a wife or a husband alive and they are living together. I ask the Senator if he would consider favorably an amendment to the Senate committee amendment striking out the words "married man" and the next two lines and all of line 15, including the word "her," and substituting the single expression "head of a family"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would object to that very materially. A clerk in a store who is getting $3,000 a year might have a sister or a mother and get exemption as the head of a family. A great many cases might present themselves. The main trouble about it is, you do not know where it will end. If only purely for the sake of the revenue, I would object to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are very few clerks in stores who get $4,000 a year. It seems to me that the law which is on the statute book now works very grave injustice to people who have sisters dependent upon them or those who, through some grave misfortune, have lost their wives or, in the case of a woman, one who has lost her husband. As soon as that misfortune overtakes a person in that situation the Government of the United States commences to penalize them by refusing them any exemption under this law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator believe that if you put in that provision there would be no such thing as a single person without a family? Would they not all claim that they are the heads of families and say, "I am maintaining this one and that one," and thereby practically wipe out the distinction between married persons at the head of a family and the single man and the single woman?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me that the Treasury Department or the internal-revenue collectors and the attorneys there could very well place the proper interpretation of the term "head of a family." It is a term of common acceptance. The head of a family is a term which is used day in and day out. It seems to me that a ruling or regulation of the Treasury Department could be made in the spirit of the Congress which enacted the bill and used the term. I offer that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS What is the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, on page 16, beginning in line 12, by striking out the words "married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her" and to insert "head of a family."

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that amendment is adopted, every man who has a sister he is providing for will claim that he is the head of a family. As far as I am concerned, I do not care to argue it, but I should like to have a vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To meet the objection of the Senator from Mississippi, would he agree to a further amendment using the expression "head of a family containing dependent children"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I would not consent to the substitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he modifies it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Mississippi declined to accept any modification.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can modify it himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I shall take only a moment. I have already expressed myself at length upon the merits of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] suggested that the married relation is the definite line that should be drawn; that it is not only legal but moral; that it makes a good dividing line which can be safely relied upon for the collection of revenue, because it is readily established. I regret to say that merely the marriage relation in our decadence of civilization in dense centers of population is no longer a safe guide.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will notice the language is "a married man with a wife living with him."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is merely formal. Nobody can establish that. If the Senator had been around Reno, Nev., or had been around any modern city, he would know that is merely a formal matter. They may live under the same roof and still the carpet never wear out by visits of the one to the other. I venture this assertion, that there is as much absence on moral ground among married people in this classification as there would be the absence of moral reason on the head of a family, who might fraudulently impose upon the Government, where a man might claim that he was the head of a family.

The most moral obligation in the world is where some one not a husband or a wife, the widow or the widower, may support dependent relatives. It is the most moral obligation in the world, to take those who are immediately dependent upon them and discharge that obligation—an invalid brother, the children of a deceased brother or sister. I regard those obligations as equally binding, under the impulses on the human heart for the resources of the pocketbook, as I do the married relation.

If any burden is charged upon the community, it becomes equally a burden upon the taxpayers. It seems to me that merely drawing the technical line of husband and wife is no more a moral ground than the other, and especially in view of the question asked by the Senator from New York, where the head of a family has dependent children. Still, the objection is made to the amendment. I shall vote against the whole committee amendment in its present form and for the House provision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that inasmuch as the language of the present bill refers to the single man or the single woman and the married man and the married woman, and there has been no great difficulty in the administration of the act, and inasmuch as there can be imposition, because almost everyone could claim to be the head of a family, you would wipe out any revenue whatever as to the distinction between a married man or a married woman on the one hand and a single man or a single woman upon the other. The law having been admitted to be satisfactory, and that being the language of the old act, the fact that it would be subject to this claim upon the part of any person who wants to claim that he is the head of a family, it seems to me the action of the committee should be sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is true that under the present law there has been no difficulty in administering it, but there has been a rank injustice. I know of a widow woman who has about $4,200 income, and she was fortunately left with seven children by her husband several years ago. Every one of them is of tender years, a minor, and requiring support. She keeps them, be it said to her credit, but she does not get an exemption. Right across the street from her lives a married man and his wife, living together, and they have $4,000 exemption, and the widow has $3,000 exemption. There is no justice in a rule of that kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to refer to the fact that she saves by that under the present law $12 a year, and all she would save under this new law would be $24 a year. Surely if she gets a $4,000 exemption it can work hardship to no great degree.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is very true, but $12 a year is $1 a month. What was the value of the tea thrown in Boston Harbor? A few pence, but still the fight came down the Concord Valley and all of the rest of it.

The amount of money involved does not settle the matter of principle. It is only $12, it is true, but it is $12 that you have taken from the widow woman, when the married man across the street gets $4,000 exemption and is not a father and neither husband nor wife will ever become a parent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I submit the amendment in a little different form? Instead of striking out the language in lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, may I suggest that there be inserted, in line 15, after the word "her," the words "or be the head of a family of one or more dependent children," so that the language will read:

SEC. 7 (a) That there shall be deducted from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her or be the head of a family of one or more dependent children.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did on the former vote, transferring my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He is not present and I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator and withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. He is absent. I do not know how he would vote if present. Therefore I withhold my vote. If the Senator from Ohio were present and I could vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote; but if I were permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did on the prior roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer that I did on the last vote, I vote "yea." I also make the same announcement relative to my colleague [Mr. LODGE] that I made before.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Again transferring my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], I vote "nay." I will let that transfer remain for the balance of the day.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

The vote resulted as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the amendment of the committee the yeas are 17 and the nays are 29. Senators BECKHAM, SAULSBURY, UNDERWOOD, VARDAMAN, CHAMBERLAIN, NEWLANDS, and PITTMAN being present and not voting, the amendment to the amendment is lost.

The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "Returns," on page 17, line 24, before the word "legal," to insert "his"; in the same line, after the words "residence or," to strike "has his"; and on page 18, line 1, after the word "or," to strike out "in the case of a person residing in a foreign country, in the place where his legal residence or principal business is carried on within the United States, or," so as to read:

SEC. 8. (a) The tax shall be computed upon the net income, as thus ascertained, of each person subject thereto, received in each preceding calendar year ending December 31.

(b) On or before the 1st day of March 1917, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter, a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person of lawful age, except as hereinafter provided, having a net income of $3,000 or over for the taxable year, to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person has his legal residence or principal place of business, or, if there be no legal residence or place of business in the United States, then with the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md., in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income from all separate sources, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowances herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 4, after the word "that," to strike out "he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is," and to insert "such return is, to the best of his knowledge and belief," so as to make the clause read:

(c) Guardians, trustees executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and all persons, corporations, or associations acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a return of the income of the person, trust, or estate for whom or which they act, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals. Such fiduciary shall make oath that such return is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals. Provided, That a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries filed in the district where such fiduciary resides, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be sufficient compliance with the requirements of this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 13, after the word "required," to strike out "except in the case of estates or trusts, not entitled to any exemption and," and in line 14, after the words "except as," to strike out "hereinafter" and insert "in this title," so as to make the clause read:

That in either case mentioned in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this section no return of income not exceeding $3,000 shall be required, except as in this title provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 15, to strike out:

(e) Persons carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and the share of the profits of a partnership to which any taxable partner would be entitled if the same were divided, whether divided or otherwise, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid, under the provisions of this title, and any such partnership, when requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or any district collector, shall render a correct return of the earnings, profits, and income of the partnership, setting forth the items of gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and the names of the individuals who would be entitled to the net earnings, profits, and income, if distributed.

And insert:

(c) Persons carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and the share of the profits of the partnership to which any taxable partner would be entitled if the same were divided, whether divided or otherwise, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid under the provisions of this title: Provided, That from the net distributive interests on which the individual members shall be liable for tax, normal and additional, there shall be excluded their proportionate shares received from interest on the obligations of a State or any political or taxing subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States and its possessions, and all taxes paid to the United States or to any possession thereof, or to any State, county, or taxing subdivision of a State, and that for the purpose of computing the normal tax there shall be allowed a credit, as provided by section 5, subdivision (b), for their proportionate share of the profits derived from dividends. And such partnership, when requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or any district collector, shall render a correct return of the earnings, profits, and income of the partnership, setting forth the item of the gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to the net earnings, profits, and income, if distributed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 8, to strike out:

(g) The collector or deputy collector shall require every return to be verified by the oath of the party rendering it. If the collector or deputy collector have reason to believe that the amount of any income returned is understated, he shall give due notice to the person making the return to show cause why the amount of the return should not be increased, and upon proof of the amount understated may increase the same accordingly

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 17, to insert as a paragraph classification "(g)."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, we have discovered since the bill was printed that the language on page 22, embraced in the clause from line 17 to line 21, inclusive, and marked "(g)" is in the wrong place. So we want it stricken out, and shall insert it later on in the right place. I move that those words be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In consequence of that amendment, I move that the small letter "(h)" in the next clause, beginning in line 22, be changed to "(g)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 22, line 23, after the word "unless," to strike out "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue finds that," so as to make the clause read:

(g) An individual keeping accounts upon any basis other than that of actual receipts and disbursements unless such other basis does not clearly reflect his income, may, subject to regulations made by such commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make his return upon the basis upon which his accounts are kept, in which case the tax shall be computed upon his income as so returned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "Assessment and administration," in section 9, page 23, line 15, after the word "due," to strike out "or return made is found to be erroneous, false, or fraudulent," and insert "or has been made," so as to read:

SEC. 9. (a) That all assessments shall be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and all persons shall be notified of the amount for which they are respectively liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said amounts shall be paid on or before the 15th day of June, except in cases of refusal or neglect to make such return and in cases of erroneous, false, or fraudulent returns, in which cases the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the discovery thereof, at any time within three years after said return is due, or has been made, make a return upon information obtained as provided for in this title or by existing law, or require the necessary corrections to be made, and the assessment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thereon shall be paid by such person or persons immediately upon notification of the amount of such assessment; and to any sum or sums due and unpaid after the 15th day of June in any year, and for 10 days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be added the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of tax unpaid and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same became due, except from the estates of insane, deceased, or insolvent persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, before the word "mortgagors," to strike out "lessees or"; on page 25, line 2, after the word "same," to strike out "and they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax"; and in line 6, after the word "title," to insert "or failing so to do they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax, but shall not be liable for any penalty if they make certified returns of information concerning the same to the collector of the district," so as to read:

(b) All persons, firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income of another person, exceeding $3,000 for any taxable year, other than income derived from dividends on capital stock, or from the net earnings of corporations and joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, the income of which is taxable under this title, who are required to make and render a return in behalf of another, as provided herein, to the collector of his, her, or its district, are hereby authorized and required to deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income such sum as will be sufficient to pay the normal tax imposed thereon by this title, and shall pay the amount withheld to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same; and they are each hereby indemnified against every person, corporation, association, or demand whatsoever for all payments which they shall make in pursuance and by virtue of this title or failing so to do they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax, but shall not be liable for any penalty if they make certified returns of information concerning the same to the collector of the district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 18, after the word "him," to insert "or with the collector of internal revenue of the district of his residence or chief place of business," and on page 26, line 3, after the words "penalty of," to insert "not exceeding," so as to read:

In all cases where the income tax of a person is withheld and deducted and paid or to be paid at the source, such person shall not receive the benefit of the personal exemption allowed in section 7 of this title except by an application for refund of the tax unless he shall, not less than 30 days prior to the day on which the return of his income is due, file with the person who is required to withhold and pay tax for him, or with the collector of internal revenue of the district of his residence or chief place of business, a signed notice in writing claiming the benefit of such exemption, and thereupon no tax shall be withheld upon the amount of such exemption: Provided, That if any person, for the purpose of obtaining any allowance or reduction by virtue of a claim for such exemption, either for himself or for any other person, knowingly makes any false statement or false or fraudulent representation, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Part II—On corporations," in section 10, page 31, line 1, after the word "title," to insert "The term 'dividends' as used in this section shall include any distribution of the profits or earnings of a corporation or association, whether made in cash or stock dividends," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 10. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized in the United States, no matter how created or organized, but not including partnerships, a tax of 2 per cent upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources within the United States by every corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of any foreign country, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including the income derived from dividends on capital stock or from net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, whose net income is taxable under this title: The term "dividends" as used in this section shall include any distribution of the profits or earnings of a corporation or association, whether made in cash or stock dividends.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator having the bill in charge to accept an amendment, as follows: After the word "association," insert "accrued since March 1, 1913." I do that in order to make it conform to all the other provisions of the bill which the Senator has already had amended; for instance, lines 12 to 17, on page 6. Not only that, but the title of the bill is, "Income tax to become effective March 1, 1913"; and certainly you can not go back of March 1, 1913, or else you will have to change your title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the language "accrued since March 1, 1913," ought to be inserted there in order to keep this part of the bill in conformity with the previous part. It was mere negligence upon my part that it was not so worded. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 3, after the word "association," it is proposed to insert "accrued since March 1, 1913."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 20, to insert:

Of the gain derived from the sale, by a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, of real estate, stocks, bonds, securities, or any other property acquired prior to January 1, 1909, only such proportion of the gain or loss shall be included as income as the time between January 1, 1909, and the date of sale bears to the entire time between the date of acquisition and the date of sale.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to keep this portion of the bill in conformity with the preceding portion of it, I move to strike out the language, on line 21, down to and including line 25, and substitute for it the provision which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator ought also to strike out the first three lines on page 32.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the language to be stricken out begins with and includes line 21, page 31, and extends to and includes line 3 on page 32.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31 it is proposed to strike out lines 21 to 25, both inclusive, and on page 32, lines 1 to 3, both inclusive, and to insert:

For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition by a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived or loss sustained by sale of such property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Conditional and other exemptions," in section 11, page 33, line 10, before the word "mutual," to insert "or other," and, in line 11, after the word "company," to insert "mutual ditch or irrigation company," so as to make the clause read:

Tenth. Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance company, mutual ditch or irrigation company, mutual or cooperative telephone company, or like organization of a purely local character, the income of which consists solely of assessments, dues, and fees collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting its expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 21, after the word "them" and the semicolon, to strike out "or," so as to make the clause read:

Eleventh. Farmers', fruit growers', or like association, organized and operated as a sales agent for the purpose of marketing the products of its members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 2, after the word "title," to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the word "or," so as to make the clause read:

Twelfth. Corporation or association organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title; or

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 2, to insert:

Thirteenth. Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations as provided in section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought I had here the correspondence touching this amendment, but I find that I have not. I will ask the Senator in charge of this part of the bill to allow it to go over until Monday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I ask that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, Mr. President, interrupting the reading of the bill here for a moment, this afternoon the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] requested that the amendment on page 10 with regard to reductions in the case of oil and gas wells, coal mines, and so forth, go over. He has since looked into it and announces that he is satisfied with it, and I ask that that amendment be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, on pages 13 and 14 precisely the same amendment again presents itself. That also went over at his request, and I ask that it be now adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 10, on page 35.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that when the Senate takes a recess this afternoon it take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have understood that some Senators desire a short executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6497) for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5103) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River, in West Virginia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5496) to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, and agrees to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10251) authorizing the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. to make settlement with Crittenden County, Ark., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 600) to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13835) to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13926. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.;

H. R. 17567. An act to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.

H. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Springfield, Ill., with a special canceling die for the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Federal Union; and

H. J. Res. 292. Joint resolution proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have received more than 100 telegrams from citizens of my State with reference to the controversy that is now going on between the railroads and their employees. I do not feel that I should burden the RECORD with all these telegrams, but I ask unanimous consent to have one of them printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BISMARCK, N. DAK., August 24, 1916.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

I have to-day telegraphed E. Pennington following message, viz: "Remembering that Grover Cleveland earned the approbation of the entire American people when he used the power of Government to enforce law, and compelled railroad strikers to put down the torch during their destruction of hundreds of cars of merchandise and millions of dollars' worth of property at Chicago, for which Illinois and other people paid, I unreservedly commend the present attitude of the railroad officials in demanding arbitrament of law before acceding to the demands of organized railroad labor or any outside influence. The American farmer and consumers generally must pay the freight and are entitled to resort to and the enforcement of law. Railroad employees are no better than other people, and their demands must be made through lawful channels and not through political influence or combine of any character. Were I in your unenviable position, I should insist upon arbitration and final resort to law, with its protection, in every case."

ISAAC P. BAKER.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition from a union meeting of the congregations of all the churches of Manor, Pa., praying for an investigation to determine the right of Senator SMOOT to hold his seat in the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of James E. Hyatt Council, No. 127, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Philadelphia; of Local Division No. 52, Order of Railway Telegraphers, of Beaver; and of State Council of Pennsylvania, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of San Francisco, Redlands, and Eureka, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the retention of the stamp tax on insurance companies, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 6783. A bill for the relief of William F. Carter (Rept. No. 822);

S. 6670. A bill authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation in said State (Rept. No. 826);

S. 6692. A bill to amend section 6 of an act to expedite the settlement of title to lands in the State of California (Rept. No. 821);

S. 5611. A bill providing for noncontiguous homestead entries within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., of land of the character described in the enlarged homestead act of February 19, 1909 (Rept. No. 823);

S. 6829. A bill to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws (Rept. No. 824); and

S. 6671. A bill to validate the homestead entries of Anna W. Thrailkill (Rept. No. 825).

DISTRICT COURT AT ANDERSON, S. C.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, about 8 or 12 months since Congress passed an act for the appointment of an additional district judge in South Carolina and for the establishment of the district. A bill was recently introduced in the House amending that act by providing for the holding of a term of court in another county within the district at Anderson, S. C., on the fourth Tuesday in May and November. That is the only change made in the original act. The bill has been passed by the House and was received by the Senate this morning and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13926) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C., and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. JONES. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Charleston on the first Tuesday in June and December; at Columbia on the third Tuesday in January and first Tuesday in November; at Florence, first Tuesday in March; and at Aiken, on the first Tuesday in April and October.

"Terms of the district court of the western district shall be held at Greenville on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; at Rock Hill, the second Tuesday in March and September; at Greenwood, the first Tuesday in February and November; and at Anderson, the fourth Tuesday in May and November.

"The office of the clerks of the district court for the western district shall be at Greenville, and the office of the clerk of the district court for the eastern district shall be at Charleston."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 705, being the bill (H. R. 15158) to amend the Judicial Code, to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence, and further to define the jurisdiction of that court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 230 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, known as the Judicial Code, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 230. The Supreme Court shall hold at the seat of government one term annually, commencing on the first Monday in October, and such adjourned or special terms as it may find necessary for the dispatch of business."

SEC. 2. That section 237 of the Judicial Code, as amended by "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," approved December 23, 1914, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States. The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, in its discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ.

"It shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari or otherwise, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error, any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is either in favor of or against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed, by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority."

SEC. 3. That section 4 of "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," approved January 28, 1915, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals in all proceedings and causes arising under 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, and in all controversies arising in such proceedthe liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in cerings and causes; also, in all causes arising under 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April 22, 1908; also, in all causes arising under 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon,' approved March 4, 1907; also, in all causes arising under 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1893; and, also, in all causes arising under any amendment or supplement to any one of the aforementioned acts which has been heretofore or may hereafter be enacted, shall be final, save only that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the proceeding, case, or controversy be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error."

SEC. 4. That no court having power to review a judgment or decree rendered or passed by another shall dismiss a writ of error solely because an appeal should have been taken, or dismiss an appeal solely because a writ of error should have been sued out, but when such mistake or error occurs it shall disregard the same and take the action which would be appropriate if the proper appellate procedure had been followed.

SEC. 5. That no judgment or decree rendered or passed by the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands more than 60 days after the approval of this act shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court upon writ of error or appeal; but it shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari or otherwise, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error or appeal, any cause wherein, after such 60 days, the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands may render or pass a judgment or decree which would be subject to review under existing laws.

SEC. 6. That no writ of error, appeal, or writ of certiorari intended to bring up any cause for review by the Supreme Court shall be allowed or entertained unless duly applied for within three months after entry of the judgment or decree complained of: Provided, That writs of certiorari addressed to the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands may be granted if application therefor be made within six months.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect 30 days after its approval, but it shall not apply to nor affect any writ of error, appeal, or writ of certiorari theretofore duly applied for. The right of review under existing laws in respect of judgments and decrees entered before this act takes effect shall remain unaffected for the period of six months thereafter, but at the end of that time such right shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION AGREEMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 535).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 256), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] on August 5, 1916, entitled "International arbitration agreements," by Oscar T. Crosby, be printed as a Senate document.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report back a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 26) providing for the printing of 150,000 additional copies of Senate Document 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "The Federal Farm-Loan Act."

Mr. SMOOT. Let that resolution go to the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that the House desires additional copies of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be, Mr. President; but we will take up the calendar again.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I represent in this Chamber 8,000,000 people, and I have not had a request for a copy of this act.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's people have not waked up yet.

Mr. PENROSE. Pennsylvania is the third or fourth agricultural State in the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER. One of the commissioners is from Pennsylvania, and he is probably giving them all the information they require.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HUGHES submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 102a. That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that any vessel, American or foreign, is, on account of the laws, regulations, or practices of a belligerent Government, making or giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage in any respect whatsoever to any particular person, company, firm, or corporation, or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions or to any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad, or is subjecting any particular person, company, firm, or corporation or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions, or any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, disadvantage, injury, or discrimination in regard to accepting, receiving, transporting, or delivering, or refusing to accept, receive, transfer, or deliver any cargo, freight or passengers, or in any other respect whatsoever, he is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to direct the detention of such vessels by withholding clearance or by formal notice forbidding departure, and to revoke, modify, or renew any such direction as in his opinion the public interest may require.

That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any belligerent country or Government American ships or American citizens are not accorded any of the facilities of commerce which the vessels or citizens of that belligerent country enjoy in the United States or its possessions, or are not accorded by such belligerent equal privileges or facilities of trade with vessels or citizens of any nationality other than that of such belligerent, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to withhold clearance from one or more vessels of such belligerent country until such belligerent shall restore to such American vessels and American citizens reciprocal liberty of commerce and equal facilities of trade; or the President may, in his discretion, direct that similar privileges and facilities, if any, enjoyed by vessels or citizens of such belligerent in the United States or its possessions be refused to vessels or citizens of such belligerent; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction, stating the facilities and privileges which shall be refused, and the belligerent to whose vessels or citizens they are to be refused, and thereafter the furnishing of such prohibited privileges and facilities to any vessel or citizen of the belligerent named in such proclamation shall be unlawful; and he may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation as in his opinion the public good may require; and any person or persons who shall furnish or attempt or conspire to furnish or be concerned in furnishing or in the concealment of furnishing facilities or privileges to ships or persons contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

In case any vessel which is detained by virtue of this act shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance or other lawful authority, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall be severally liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and in addition such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARDWICK submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $14,500 to pay the widow of Joseph R. Lamar, late justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,102.92 to pay to the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co., a corporation of Nevada, in refund of the gross income tax paid by that company to the collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash., May 21, 1915, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY DR. A. CASWELL ELLIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have a copy of an address delivered before the National Fraternal Congress of America, August 22, 1916, on a method of controlling preventable disease in rural districts. The address is by Dr. A. Caswell Ellis, director of the department of extension in the University of Texas. I ask that the address be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document if the committee so desires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The address will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

CONDITIONS IN IRON-ORE MINES.

Mr. CHILTON. On July 29 the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] submitted a resolution, being Senate resolution 242, which was ordered to lie over under the rule. I ask that the resolution be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service transmit to the Senate copies of the reports of Drs. Olson and Bolton, of the United States Public Health Service, made in November, 1914, concerning conditions in the iron-ore mines of Minnesota and Michigan.

RECORD OF DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to announce that on Tuesday morning, August 29, 1916, as soon as the business of the Senate will permit, I intend to address the Senate on the record of Democratic legislation, and pay some slight attention to the attacks now being made upon that legislation.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. THOMAS (for Mr. HUGHES) submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of the wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2 and 8, and agree to the same.

WILLIAM HUGHES,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN A. KEY,
EDWARD KEATING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5496) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, which were that section 5 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That at any time after any sale of unentered lands has been made in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act patent shall issue to the purchaser thereof upon payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of like lands under the homestead laws. But purchasers at a sale of unentered lands shall have the qualification of homestead entrymen, and not more than 160 acres of such lands shall be sold to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. This limitation shall not apply to sales to the State, but shall apply to purchases from the State of unentered lands bid in for the State. Any part of the purchase money arising from the sale of any lands in the manner and for the purposes provided in this act which shall be in excess of the drainage charges then delinquent shall be paid to and used by the county in which such land is located for the purpose of maintenance, improving, and extending such drainage works within the area benefited by the drainage project in which such land shall have been assessed for such drainage charge.

That section 6 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That any entered lands sold in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act may be patented to the purchaser thereof at any time after the expiration of the period of redemption provided for in the drainage laws under which it may be sold (there having been no redemption) upon the payment to the receiver of the fees and commissions and the price mentioned in the preceding section, or so much thereof as has not already been paid by the entryman; and if the sum received at any such sale shall be in excess of the payments herein required and of the drainage assessments and cost of the sale, such excess shall be paid to the proper county officer for the benefit of and payment to the entryman. That unless the purchasers of unentered lands shall within 90 days after the sale provided for in section 3 pay to the proper receiver the fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may be entitled, as provided in section 5, and unless the purchasers of entered lands shall within 90 days after the right of redemption has expired make like payments, as provided for in this section, any person having the qualifications of a homestead entryman may pay to the proper receiver for not more than 160 acres of land for which such payment has not been made: First, the unpaid fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may then be entitled; and, second, the sum due at the sale for drainage charges; and in addition thereto, if bid in by the State, interest on the amount bid by the State at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from the date of such sale, and thereupon the person making such payment shall become subrogated to the rights of such purchaser to receive a patent for said land. When any payment is made to effect such subrogation the receiver shall transmit to the treasurer of the county where the land is situated the amount paid for drainage charges, together with the interest paid thereon.

Mr. NELSON. The amendments relate wholly to the drainage of swamp lands in the State of Minnesota and meet with the approval of the Interior Department. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLESTON-DUNBAR TRACTION CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5103) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia, which was, on page 1, line 5, strike out "$25" and insert "$50."

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 28, 1916.

(Legislative day of Monday, August 21, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Jones	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kenyon	Penrose	Smoot
Bryan	Kern	Pittman	Stone
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Taggart
Culberson	McCumber	Robinson	Thomas
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Myers	Sheppard	Williams
Fletcher	Nelson	Simmons
Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.
Husting	Overman	Smith, Ga.

Mr. JONES. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. LANE, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN, of Virginia, Mr. JAMES, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, Mr. BORAH, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. CURTIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

ELECTION OF 1912 IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, several days ago in the RECORD, in referring to the Lumber Trust having sent money into Oklahoma for the purpose of defeating my nomination in 1912, I wish to say that I had no reference to the manufacturers of lumber known as the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, but particularly to a group of men who were behind Lorimer in the purchase of a senatorship in Illinois.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

PHILOSOPHY OF MR. HUGHES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I wish to make a single observation. Philosophers tell us that the world is growing better and wiser each day. God knows, I trust that is true; but I confess many times I have grave doubts of it. However, it seems to me such contributions as that which recently came to my hand will add very little to the wisdom and progress of our country, particularly the wisdom of it. I quote:

> Contented America will be successful America; discontented America will be unsuccessful America.

What superb philosophy that is! Mr. Hughes should have added, when the weather is hot you will be hot; when the weather is cold you will be cold; and, again, when a man is thirsty he wants to drink, and when he is not thirsty he does not want to drink. What philosophy to be gathered from the candidate of a greaty party!

Perhaps the hot weather will enable Mr. Hughes to get away with this kind of campaign talk, but he ought to remember that there will be changes of temperature before election day. When frost comes, it will be easier to think, and then such epigrams will fail to pass muster. Contentment has never been an "open sesame" to success, and we have not noticed any particular change in human nature to warrant such an obiter dictum. When America becomes contented, the only safe thing to do will be to put out the cat, shut the windows, and turn off the light.

But suppose it were true, how would Mr. Hughes go to work to weave this spell of contentment? Prosperity is the quick answer; yet prosperity invites discontent unless it is satisfactorily distributed, and the great problem no one has yet been wise enough to solve is how this distribution can be made satisfactorily. Prosperity, on the other hand, creates the desire for more and more prosperity. With new riches come new wants, new obligations, new responsibilities, and in the end about as much dissatisfaction as at the beginning.

Satisfaction with the internal and external policies of the Government is another answer Mr. Hughes might make. So far his campaign has been pretty much of an effort to create discontent with the way the present administration has handled national affairs. Obviously, it is his intention to promise that he, if elected, will give the people something with which they will be contented. To succeed he must formulate policies upon which the people can unite, which is a large order.

At present the Nation seems to be pretty evenly divided between those who are very contented with being kept out of war and those who feel deeply humiliated that we have not ventured nearer war. It would take a very skillful compromise to reconcile these divergencies, and, if it could be done, it would be a good deal of question whether it would result in a successful America. Middle-of-the-road programs do not usually lead to great accomplishments. It is not clear that America, contented in this way, would cut much of a figure in the world.

The contentment theory is a pretty unreliable campaign idea. We can not imagine Mr. Roosevelt, for instance, trying to lull the people by such talk. If he were on the stump, he would expect to create discontent and make enemies. He would not strive for any such enchantment. His way would be to announce what he intended to do and persuade the people it was the thing to be done, whether it meant contentment or not.

It is a pity Mr. Hughes has not been coached from Oyster Bay.

It seems to me, Mr. President, it does not add very much in public estimation to the thoughts of the great man we anticipated in the Republican candidate for President by this little effusion and epigram.

Here is another epigram. A week or two ago I read that Justice Hughes said we were living in a fool's paradise. He has been a party to the fool's paradise. He was governor of the great Commonwealth of New York for a while, and since that time was one of the Justices of the Supreme Court receiving a very liberal stipend, I do not say too much, but receiving at least a liberal stipend from the pockets of the Nation that is living in this fool's paradise. I feel that Justice Hughes knew full well when he was making the assertion that we were living in a fool's paradise that it was ungenerous and absolutely and utterly untrue. I ask leave to read this from a trade journal, a journal that is not in sympathy with the administration, showing that instead of living in a fool's paradise we are living in the very lap of luxury, of progress unparalleled in this country:

Business increases exceedingly large.
Reports show doubling of trade in some instances within year—prosperity not dependent upon war.

Then it goes on to cite from various parts of the country—from Philadelphia:

Trade continues to be brisk in the Philadelphia district despite the continued rise in prices in most lines. Manufacturing plants are working to capacity. Reports of various lines of industry embracing May follow.

Then there are reports from Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas, Tex., and a report from San Francisco. There is just one continued reflection of prosperity from the business hives of industry the land over.

But I think it would be well, perhaps, that these two things this contentment thought of candidate Hughes—contented America will be successful America and discontented America will be unsuccessful America—this answer to Mr. Hughes's assertion of a fool's paradise may be published in the RECORD that the world may see the splendid caliber of this man whom we once deemed a great Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ONWARD MARCH OF AMERICAN TRADE—BUSINESS INCREASES EXCEEDINGLY LARGE—REPORTS SHOW DOUBLING OF TRADE IN SOME INSTANCES WITHIN YEAR—PROSPERITY NOT DEPENDENT UPON WAR.

Carefully gathered statistics and reports show that the general conditions of industry throughout the United States are thoroughly sound, wonderfully improved over those of a year ago, and that prosperity is not confined to lines affected by the great war of nations.

Not only the facts gathered by the Federal Reserve Board, but independent reports of a reliable character reaching this office from widely separated districts show in some instances business increases of 100 per cent, and more within the last 12 months. Also it is to be noted that the volume of production has grown so steadily that from month to month the increase has not been so marked as to excite comment; but it has been so persistent that in the aggregate in some lines it is amazing. Prices are generally high, with no sign save of a further possible advance. Consequently there seems to be a general desire among the more conservative business elements to check as far as possible heavy advance purchases, which, if carried to excess, are likely to develop into a speculative character, in the event of which a reaction, it is believed, would follow.

The facts and figures here presented do not indicate in any sense a business spurt or any movement of a sporadic nature. They show, on calm consideration, a wonderful but healthy growth, not confined to any section of the country, but widely dispersed and covering all fundamental industries. Country districts in New York report that merchants are buying more goods than at any time since 1907. There has been a decrease in the military orders in the leather trade, but the heavy domestic demand has more than counterbalanced this, and prices are well up. There is a strong demand for prints and colored goods, with prices advancing. The lumber trade is increasing with prices going upward. Building throughout the country, with the exception of the New York district, shows marked activity. In the New York district prices of raw material have checked building to some extent, the margin of profit not yet having been effectually adjusted. Department stores in the larger cities report more sales and a constant demand for a better class of goods. The sales of diamonds and pearls are remarkably advanced.

PHILADELPHIA REPORT.

Trade continues to be brisk in the Philadelphia district despite the continued rise in prices in most lines. Manufacturing plants are working to capacity. Reports of various lines of industry embracing May follow:

Carpets and rugs: The plush business is thriving. Prices are well advanced. Carpet wool has gone up 100 per cent since last year.

Silks: Fall business is now being taken at high prices. The entire industry is working to its capacity. Many additions to plants are contemplated. The belief is that prices will advance.

Textiles: Hoisery and underwear mills are sold up to the limit, but deliveries have improved and consequently there have been a slight falling off in retail buying. Recent purchases of goods have been abnormal. Hence a reduction is expected.

Paper: The demand is the greatest in the history of the country. Orders are sufficient to keep the mills going for months. All quotations have been withdrawn. Prices are made from day to day, due to the uncertainty in obtaining chemicals and dyes. Demand and not cost of production, however, seems to be fixing prices. There is a serious lack of raw material. Discounts are well above the average, collections being exceptionally good. The condition of the trade indicates a heavy increase in newspaper and magazine advertising, and a heavy increase in package deliveries by retail stores. Paper demand is largely governed by these factors.

Lumber and building material: Conditions are better than in many years. Orders for lumber are heavy. Prices are $5 to $6 per thousand feet higher than a year ago. There is a sharp advance in building material.

Shoes and leather: Wholesalers and jobbers in the shoe business are hard pressed to keep up their stocks. Dyes and tanning material shortage are causing uneasiness and help to advance prices. Demand for glazed kid is active. If it keeps up it will tax the supply. Delivery of imported skins is backward, shipping conditions seriously affecting the trade.

Cotton and cotton goods: There is an active demand for cotton yarn. Prices are firmer and advancing slightly. Mills making cotton goods are taking orders for future delivery. The outlook is bright.

Paints, oils, varnishes: The demand far exceeds the production. Plants are working to capacity. Scarcity of dyes seriously felt.

Tobacco: Prices are well advanced, owing to heavy purchases by France, England, and Russia. Continued buying tends toward further increases. On account of unfavorable weather conditions few seed beds have been made. There will be late planting.

REPORT FROM BOSTON.

Business continues to improve. A comparison of conditions to-day with those prevailing a year ago shows the improvement in many cases has been extreme.

The freight situation on the New England railroads has greatly improved.

Building and engineering operations in New England from January 1 to date make the highest record in many years. The nearest approach to these figures was in 1912.

Manufacturers of boots and shoes report exceptionally good business at advancing prices, with fall orders coming in well. The high and increasing cost of leather is forcing prices upward.

Cotton mills are sold far enough ahead to insure running at capacity for many months to come. Lack of certain classes of skilled labor is felt.

REPORT FROM CLEVELAND.

Earnings of steel companies and concerns in kindred lines are continuing at an unprecedented rate. Official figures and unofficial estimates from leading corporations in this district, if continued during the balance of the year, will assure profits which will stand as the apex of industrial earnings for some years to come.

There is the growing feeling among some of the largest concerns that output and shipments of finished products have probably reached the maximum, due to a shortage of raw materials. Some nut and bolt factories are now operating only about 70 per cent because of inability to obtain bars. An inadequate supply of sheets and plates reduces the output of shops and factories using semifinished products.

Glass: Plate and window glass has now reached a new maximum output. It finds a ready market at the highest price ever quoted.

REPORT FROM RICHMOND.

Manufacturers are doing well. Fertilizers are high and a reduction in volume is looked for, the agricultural sections taking a conservative attitude. The farming districts show improved conditions and more than a satisfactory prosperity. The financial condition of farmers is remarkably good.

Conditions in the cotton-spinning industry, seriously depressed for several years, show marked improvement. Many mills which have failed to earn enough to take care of even the wear and tear on their plants are now finding a ready market for their goods at satisfactory prices. This increased demand has developed both in Europe and South American trade.

CHICAGO REPORT.

Business activity in Chicago continues up to its advanced standard. Bankers, manufacturers, and merchants are optimistic, but some sound a warning against tremendously heavy purchases at high prices. There is an effort to squeeze out the speculative element. Reports from Michigan and Wisconsin are strong. Industrial reports follow:

Automobiles: Heavy demand is kept up. No decrease is looked for. Manufacturers are sold some months ahead. There is difficulty in obtaining material.

Furniture: Grand Rapids reports a strong volume of business.

Liquor: Tax payments for the fiscal year are said to be at the rate of 34,000,000 to 35,000,000 gallons, with a prospective production of 1916 Kentucky whisky at between 20,000,000 and 22,000,000 gallons. Prices are firmer. A number of distilleries are working capacity, due to alcohol contracts.

Live stock: The packing industry reports an exceptionally strong foreign demand, with an increased scarcity of bottoms. By-products, such as wool, hides, glue, and fertilizer, are in excellent demand. Live-stock prices are holding firm.

REPORT FROM MINNEAPOLIS.

The wholesale and retail trades are prosperous. Wholesale prices are well advanced over a year ago. Production in the iron mines in Minnesota will be greatly increased, and similar conditions exist in the copper districts of northern Michigan and the iron and copper districts of Montana. A large amount of building is in progress. Car shortage is relieved a little but is still felt. Railroad earnings are good.

KANSAS CITY REPORT.

The car shortage has been somewhat relieved by the daily receipt of cars formerly tied up on eastern lines. Railroad earnings show material improvement in the report from Kansas City.

The prices of cattle, hogs, and sheep continue satisfactory. Price records continue to be broken.

Oil production and drilling continues on an extensive scale. There are more than 1,700 well-drilling rigs up in the Kansas-Oklahoma district. New fields are being opened in nearly every State in the district. There were 1,200 wells completed last month.

REPORT FROM DALLAS, TEX.

Building operations in the Dallas district show a healthy improvement. There is an unusual demand for material. Lumber is bringing strong prices, and the business is active. Cement also shows steady advance. Mills are running continuously with a ready demand. In the oil fields business has advanced 80 per cent in a year.

REPORT FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

Acute shortage has caused unparalleled activity in shipbuilding. Seattle reports contracts aggregating nearly four times the total at this time last year. The principal builder at San Francisco is said to have contracts in excess of $20,000,000, with no diminution of demand even with important advances in price because of increased prices for material and labor.

Copper holds a precedence in metal mining, but there is also great activity in mining gold, silver, lead, zinc, and such metals as tungsten, antimony, magnesite, and molybdenite, valuable deposits of which are reported discovered.

MERCHANDISE IN BOND.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield, if the purpose the Senator has in view does not lead to any debate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am sure it will not. I merely desire to ask that House joint resolution 292, which came over from the House on Saturday last, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate House joint resolution 292, which will be read by title.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A similar joint resolution has already been reported to the Senate and is now on the calendar. It is a matter of some urgency, and I ask that the House joint resolution be considered at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. From the reading of the title of the joint resolution, no Senator can tell what the joint resolution proposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is familiar with the matter, and I will ask him to explain it to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is a joint resolution similar to one reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate on the 8th of August, and is now on the calendar. It is very brief. I think I can explain it quicker by reading it than by undertaking to make a statement of its purpose. It reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the limitation of section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to the period during which merchandise may remain in bonded warehouse without the payment of duty for exportation to Mexico be, and the same hereby is, extended to all merchandise which was in bonded warehouse on August 1, 1916, and intended for exportation to Mexico, until such time as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury conditions in Mexico are such as to make it commercially practicable to export the merchandise to that country.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. The joint resolution as it passed the House is substantially the same as the joint resolution reported by the Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The United States employees' compensation bill has come back from the House with an amendment. I desire to examine the amendment somewhat this morning, and I ask that no action be taken upon the measure during any time I may happen to be out of the Senate. We may find it necessary to ask for a conference with reference to the amendment, and before we act upon it I wish to consult with some of the departments to ascertain what will be the effect of the proposed amendment.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of San Francisco and Los Angeles, in the State of California, remonstrating against the proposed retention of a stamp tax affecting insurance companies, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fresno County, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 6950) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 23, 1913; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6951) granting a pension to Walter D. Matheny (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 6952) for the relief of Augusta Reiter; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAGGART (for Mr. JOHNSON of Maine):

A bill (S. 6953) granting an increase of pension to David F. Sanborn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 6954) for the relief of W. H. Cleere; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 6955) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Killigan; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO REVENUE BILL.

Mr. OLIVER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I rise simply for the purpose of asking that we now proceed with the consideration of Senate committee amendments to the pending bill, and to add my expression of hope that Senators will permit us to go along with these amendments without injecting speeches that are not pertinent to the amendments. I understand that the general debate has not yet been concluded, but I hope it may be held in abeyance until we get through with the amendments.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he expects to conclude the consideration of the committee amendments during the day? I ask this because I may be called away, and I want to submit some remarks on the pending bill. I shall not take much time, but I want to speak at some time during the present day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not give the Senator from Pennsylvania any assurance that we can finish all the amendments today. I am satisfied that we can finish the amendments to the income tax and the inheritance tax sections of the bill. I can not speak so definitely about the munitions section; but if the Senator will let us go on, and if it develops during the afternoon that we are not going to get through with the amendments, then I shall certainly make no objection to his proceeding with his speech, if he desires to leave the city. I meant merely to express the hope that, unless it was very inconvenient to Senators, they would hold their general speeches in abeyance until we get through with the consideration of the Senate committee amendments.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is not asking any unanimous consent or anything of that sort, is he?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all. I was merely expressing a hope.

Mr. JONES. I did not want it understood by nothing being said on this side of the Chamber that there was an agreement to that effect.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, there is no agreement whatsoever; and I have not referred to any agreement.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not interfere with the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary proceed with the reading of the amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Deductions," in section 12, on page 35, line 21, after the word "property," to strike out "to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity," so as to make the clause read:

First. All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid within the year in the maintenance and operation of its business and properties, including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 22, after the word "sustained," to insert "and charged off," so as to read:

Second. All losses actually sustained and charged off within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property arising out of its use of employment in the business or trade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 2, after the word "trade," to strike out "and in the case of mines, including oil wells or gas wells, a reasonable allowance for depletion of ores and of other natural deposits, not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine of the output for the year for which the computation is made; and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the cost of or capital actually invested in the timber sold or removed during the year for which the return is made; but with respect to timber purchased prior to March 1, 1913, a reasonable allowance not in excess of the fair cash value of such timber on March 1, 1913; and in the case of insurance companies the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts," and insert "(a) in the case of oil and gas wells, a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines, a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which such return and computation are made, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill what is meant by "the settled production or regular flow"? What is meant by "the regular flow" from an oil well or a gas well?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That means the flow after an oil well or a gas well recovers from its first flush and settles down to "regular business."

Mr. LANE. As it settles down to "regular business," as I understand, there is a variation from month to month; there is no regular flow; there is no such thing, as I am told.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was intended to be meant by that language was its normal flow, which, of course, varies now and then.

Mr. LANE. In relation to that I wish to say that a similar matter was brought up before the Indian Committee in connection with the leasing of the Osage Indian oil lands, and it was certified to in that committee by experts that a well which would run a thousand barrels to-day in six months from now may be running 500 barrels, and in a year from now not over 15 or 20 barrels, and then down to 1 barrel; that it may begin to decrease in a short time and go clear down until it becomes a dry well, and that there is no settled production upon which any estimate can be made except by daily measurement. Then it would be necessary to average the flow for the whole period; but that can not be done in this instance. It is merely arbitrary, and it is uncertain. It is a proposition that no man can define; no facts can ever be ascertained in relation to it, so far as I have been able to find out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall do so in a moment. This language, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will note, is not "by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow"; that is, the regular production of the well during the year after it has settled down to regular business. This amendment was suggested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who has a great deal of knowledge of oil wells gained by a large experience, and the committee accepted it. The amendment throws the entire matter into conference.

Mr. LANE. It ought not to have to go to conference; it ought to be settled here and settled right. If you are going to take the average flow for the period of a month and measure it up and average it, that is all right; but there is no settled regular flow. The flow is always irregular; it is as visionary as a dream. The well may be a "gusher" which will make a man immensely wealthy, and in a few months or a year there may be nothing there at all but a dry hole. That is the peculiarity of the flow of oil, as the evidence produced before the committee of which I am a member and to which I have referred shows. So this matter attracted my attention.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the matter of settled production is fixed under the customs of the oil fields, and means the amount of flow after 12 months. Of course, what the Senator from Oregon says is true, that even then the flow is not regular; it fluctuates; but what is meant is the flow after 12 months.

Mr. LANE. That is what I should like to know. If it means the flow after 12 months, then it means that the man operating an oil well is exempt all the time that his well is paying enormously; when it is a gusher, when it is a well that may be paying him $10,000 a day we get no taxes from it, but we wait until it settles down, until it reaches the state of minimum flow or low flow, and then we begin to assess it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is not the provision levying the tax.

Mr. LANE. It ought to be reversed. In the case of oil and gas wells, if it is desired to secure revenue for the Government the tax should be levied at the time when a man is prosperous and will feel it the least. The tax ought to be imposed at the time of the well's flush flow, and then stopped when the production gets to be below a certain number of barrels.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is what this does.

Mr. LANE. It does not say so. It says:

(a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator forgets that this is not the provision for the tax; this is the provision covering the deductions on account of depreciation, and this is the measure of the depreciation. Instead of letting them deduct the full flush flow, which might deprive the Government of all taxes, we allow them to deduct only after the flush flow is over in accordance with the regular or settled flow.

Mr. LANE. Then why does the committee not make it perfectly fair to both parties and base it upon the average production, when it is flush and after the flush flow has ceased, and average it all up and at the end of the year impose a tax on that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the well continued in operation over five years, it would be impossible for any one year of that time in advance to take the average of the whole five. There would be several years to come.

Mr. LANE. But we do not tax five years ahead.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say we do not, and that is the reason we can not do what the Senator suggests.

Mr. LANE. You can have an estimate of the flow overnight; you can have it once a month; you can have it weekly; you can have a tabulation annually. You can have an estimate of the flow any day you want it for any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what this is intended to do. The settled production after the flush flow is over is the only thing they are allowed to deduct. Of course that settled production for the year when the tax is levied would be the average production of the entire year.

Mr. LANE. Perhaps so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only idea was to keep them from deducting the flush flow.

Mr. LANE. I do not read it in that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they were allowed to do that, they might deduct the whole tax.

Mr. LANE. I do not read it in that way.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it also happens frequently that in the case of what are called "gushers" the first violent flow from the well is impossible to be controlled, and the oil runs down the creeks and streams until proper tankage can be supplied and the flow placed under control. Consequently a great deal of the oil is lost. That is a matter that would have to be considered to some extent, I take it.

Mr. LANE. Oh, yes; you can not measure anything which is unmeasurable, and you should not tax it.

Mr. OWEN. That was what I was calling attention to. It sometimes happens that what I have described takes place.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is now in his seat. He is the author of the provision under discussion.

Mr. CHILTON. To what does the Senator refer?

Mr. LANE. To the provision in regard to oil and gas wells on page 36.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No amendment has been offered. The Senator from Oregon is satisfied with the provision, as I understand.

Mr. CHILTON. What is the motion, Mr. President?

Mr. LANE. I was inquiring in relation to the expression "settled production or regular flow of a well," in connection with oil and gas wells. There is no well which flows regularly for any period of time.

Mr. CHILTON. The expressions "flush flow" and "settled production" are perfectly well understood among oil men and producers. They are well known to the operators and to the men who own the land, the men who own what we call the "royalty."

Mr. LANE. Then, the measurement can be arrived at.

Mr. CHILTON. There is no question about that.

Mr. BRADY. They are terms used among producers of oil.

Mr. CHILTON. They are technical terms, and are perfectly well understood and may be taken into consideration when ligislating.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may call the attention of the Senate to the provision, it is to the effect that the deductions shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. So I have no doubt that, with their experience, they can adopt some rule which will be equitable and just both to the Government and to the other parties.

Mr. LANE. I will say, for the information of the Senator from Ohio, they may be able to arrive at an equitable measurement; but they have not been able to do so in the past.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in this connection I have just received a telegram, which I desire to submit to the Senators who are familiar with this subject. It is signed by the Independent Oil Producers' Agency, comprising 176 companies in California, and reads:

The committee amendment, Senate Calendar No. 722—

It refers specifically to the item of the Senate bill found on page 36—

The committee amendment, Senate Calendar No. 722, H. R. 16763, fixes deduction for depletion of oil wells as a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in settled production. This will deny depletion to all oil-producing companies that maintain their production by new developments and new capital. We beg of you to use every effort immediately to secure for oil companies depletion on same basis as proposed for mines, being a reasonable amount annually, not to exceed the market value of oil in the ground, of the product which has been brought to the surface. Present amendment causes oil producers to pay tax on capital and not upon income. All oil producers in California deeply interested.

INDEPENDENT OIL PRODUCERS' AGENCY
(Comprising 176 companies).

If it is true that it forces producers to pay taxes on capital and not upon income, I am sure the committee will meet the objection. As I understand, it seems that an income tax is charged upon the production value of the product, to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow. These gentlemen, in order to meet the constant diminution of their product sink new wells and invest new capital so that when the collector comes around there will be no deduction whatever for depletion, because they have made it good by the investment of new capital. I should like to submit that to the committee, and ask that immediate action be not taken until a little later, in order that it may be studied. As I have said, the telegram has just been received.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I think the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is right about that, and that the owner of an oil well should be allowed to charge off as depreciation what is termed in this bill the "flush flow" as well as the average flow afterwards; in other words, he should be allowed credit for the value of his oil in the ground, no matter whether it comes at the rate of a thousand barrels a day when the well is first opened, or settles down to its normal or average product after the gas which forces the flush product out of the well is exhausted. I think it would be well for the committee to carefully consider this question, because I think that the committee in framing this amendment intended to do abstract justice to the people who bring oil and other minerals out of the ground. I suggest that perhaps this amendment ought to be passed over in order to give the committee an opportunity of carefully considering the proposition set forth by the Senator from California.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in answer to what was said by the Senator from California, the committee does not think that this will result in taxing any part of the capital as income. Of course we had to fix a rule, and the rule can not work with mathematical precision in the case of things which differ so much from one another as oil wells do. Under the present law, Mr. President, they are allowed to deduct only 5 per cent of the gross value of the product in the place of output. We thought that that deduction was too little and that there ought to be a deduction more equitable in its character.

I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania there has been no part of the bill which has been more anxiously studied and which presented more difficulties than this part of it. After consulting those in the Senate who were most familiar with the operation of oil wells we finally adopted this provision, which was presented by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who is thoroughly acquainted with the business. On the one side was the House bill and the present law, which allowed a deduction of only 5 per cent. Upon the other side was the danger that a deduction of the entire flush product of the well might be made, and as a consequence no taxes paid at all.

Now, Mr. President, a few general observations in this connection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just for a moment, before he proceeds?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say that I know that this provision was the subject of very careful and earnest consideration on the part of the committee, and that the committee is aiming to do what is fair; and my remarks were only intended to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that perhaps this provision in regard to oil wells was not exactly what the committee intended to do. I have no criticism to pass upon the intent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; this is what the committee intended, and means, I think, precisely what the committee wants. Under the present law there was an attempt to fix an artificial and fictitious rule, it having been realized that exact mathematical accuracy could not be arrived at in any of these things. The rule that was fixed by the present law applied not only to oil wells and gas wells but to coal mines and to metallic mines and to timber and to that entire class of industries with a self-consuming plant. It goes without saying that in all those cases a part of the product which is sold by the industry is a part of its capital. The desire was to tax the income part of what was sold and not to tax the capital part. We found that in connection with coal mines we could do that by fixing the value of the coal in the ground, but you can not do that with oil or with gas. No living human being would know how to do it. The suggestion made in the telegram which the Senator has just read is thoroughly impracticable, for the reason that 40,000 experts could not determine that with regard to gas and oil wells.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator referred to coal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. This is a general provision referring to mines. Can you ascertain the value of other minerals than coal when in the ground?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will notice the bill, he will see that we have adopted a different rule for metallic mines and for coal mines, for the very reason that I have stated. The Senate committee undertook to try to fix a rule that would be just in each case. Of course you can tell the value of the coal in the ground, because coal is coal; but you can not tell the value of copper in the ground, nor the value of gold, nor the value of silver, because the ore when it comes out is neither gold nor silver nor copper; it is mixed with various other things. So we kept the old 5 per cent provision with regard to them, and then we made a new rule as to gas and oil, and then we made a new rule as to coal, and then we changed the rule with regard to metallic mines by hedging it around so that the department could not, by ruling, do what it has done.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find he is mistaken in that statement. We tried to find a rule that would apply to all mines, and hence it was provided that they should have a deduction for all of the product mined and sold during the year, and I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that there was a different rule for metallic mines.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator said there was originally a different rule.

Mr. CHILTON. Originally; but there is not now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I remember now that in caucus that was changed upon the motion of some Senator. I think the Senator from Colorado made it, did he not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was done upon my motion.

Mr. THOMAS. The value can be ascertained just as easily in one case as in the other. The method of procedure is different; that is all.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand, then, that there is no rule, and that the department is to ascertain the value of copper and gold and silver buried in the ground in order to determine the amount of income tax?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to answer him, the only difference is a difference of process. The assay determines the metalliferous contents of metallic ore, while, of course, coal is a commodity all of which in the vein is a commercial product. It is therefore merely a difference in the method of ascertaining the value. The output of a copper mine or of a lead mine for 12 months yields certain metalliferous contents, and the value in the mine of these contents is thus easily ascertainable. I will say to the Senator from California that the principle is one which occurs very commonly in his State and mine as a result of trespasses by one mine owner upon the property of another, sometimes willful and sometimes unintentional. Where it is unintentional the damages are based upon the value of the ore in the mine; and that is ascertainable, as I say, by assaying the contents and ascertaining them by chemical analysis. It is a perfectly simple and perfectly easy method of procedure.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the Senator, in view of this telegram, whether he believes that any injustice would be done the oil operators in the event the rule proposed in the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. With regard to the oil feature of the measure I am not competent to answer. I was endeavoring to reply to the Senator's query with regard to the market value in the ground of metalliferous ore. The proviso regarding oil was made at the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], whose ample experience regarding the subject justified our referring the matter to him and bespeaking his assistance. With regard to that he is much more competent to answer than I possibly could be. We have no oil wells of any consequence, unfortunately, in our country.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken in saying that I am the only one competent to speak upon this matter. My knowledge is somewhat limited, but I do know something about it, because it is quite an industry in my State. I want to call the attention of the Senator from California to this proposition:

The old law, making a deduction of not exceeding 5 per cent, after it was explained to the committee, of course, struck the committee as being absolutely an arbitrary one, and based upon no reason. Therefore, in establishing a rule for these deductions, they reasoned in this way: Suppose you were to fix the value of the production of a well for the purpose of fixing its income. You would not do that by the flush flow; that is, the first flow of the well, when it is producing largely. You would want to get at the settled flow of the well. Then it seemed to us that if you wanted to make a deduction, the honest and straightforward rule would be to make the deduction upon the same basis; and this is, in my judgment, as nearly a fair rule as it is possible to get.

The oil and gas producers do not want anything unfair. They want only the actual depletion. This they failed to get under the old law, and they will get it under this amendment. The amendment as reported by the committee was the result of many conferences; it is fair; I have given my assent to it in conference and know that it is much nearer a just rule than the one which it supersedes. I hope it will not be changed.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the Senator explain the rule governing mines?

Mr. CHILTON. In the case of mines it is "a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof"—that is, for the depletion of the mine—"not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made." Now, that is absolutely fair. No matter what it is, whether it is a coal mine or a copper mine or a silver mine. What we are trying to do is to ascertain the exact value of the depletion of the mine. What has been put upon the product in the way of labor or refining processes should not be estimated, but the value of what is taken out when in the mine; and that is perfectly fair, no matter what it may be, whether it is silver, gold, copper, or coal.

Mr. PHELAN. Would there be any income tax whatever if the whole deduction were made, the value of the whole product taken out of the mine for that year?

Mr. CHILTON. Why, certainly; the profit on it. This refers to a deduction, and it fixes that deduction at the value in the mine. We are determining how much the mine has been depleted, and to do that we want to know the value of the product in the mine, not after it has been refined.

Mr. PHELAN. Not the admixture of labor with it?

Mr. CHILTON. Why, certainly not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. One minute before the Senator yields. This telegram would indicate that whereas that rule would be applicable to one oil well to determine what deduction should be made on account of depletion, yet what of another oil well immediately constructed by the investment of new capital, where the flow would be increased, which would obliterate and wipe out any possible deduction if the assessment were made to the same company operating both of them?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, there is no such thing as developing an oil well without drilling the well and putting in capital and labor and time upon it, and these terms here mean this: When you first drill in an oil well it has a flush flow. It has gas behind it; it has a head pressure, so to speak; and the flow is larger at the beginning than it will ever be thereafter. It gradually goes down. What we want to do is to find an average, find what is right, find what it has been depleted during the year. This rule is that you must take it, not by the flush flow, but by the settled flow. When the head pressure, as they call it, goes off, there is a settled production, and we take a reasonable amount, based upon the settled flow of the well during the year. I think that is fair.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. Will the Senator permit me a moment while this is being explained by the Senator, who I understand is the author of the section?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. What objection would there be, then, to applying the same rule to oil? Is not the value of the oil after it is taken out easily ascertainable? That would be the measure of the amount of deduction or depletion.

Mr. CHILTON. I think so. I thought so at the time. Yes; you can ascertain the actual value of the oil taken out. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. PHELAN. Then you would know what the labor is and the investment of capital and ascertain the value of that oil when it was in the ground.

Mr. CHILTON. That is one point that would be a little harder than in the other case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may suggest, there is a very radical difference between coal and oil or gas, because your coal is stationary. You know how many acres of coal you have in a given locality. You may have a certain flow of gas or a certain flow of oil to-day and your neighbor may put down an oil well or a gas well right next to it, and in that way cut off your flow. We lawyers speak of oil and gas as being feræ naturæ, partaking of the nature of wild animals.

Mr. PHELAN. Fugacious.

Mr. POMERENE. It flows here and there when there has been a well drilled, so that you have to have an entirely different rule to determine the value.

Mr. PHELAN. But the rule established here in the case of mines is that the deduction shall be made for the depletion, and the limit of depletion shall be the value in the ground of the coal which has been abstracted from the ground by the admixture of labor and machinery during the period of that year. So it does not matter whether, if applied to oil, the oil is fugacious, whether it goes hither and thither or not, because the measure is determined by what has been abstracted during that year, and I understand that that rule can be safely applied.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator from Mississippi let this go over for about an hour, so that I may look at that telegram?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather have it settled now.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator can bring it up in the course of an hour. Just let me look at that telegram.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say just a word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before this is done, I want to say that as far as I am concerned I have no pride in this. This amendment in its present shape was put through over my protest, and I thought at the time that as we had it when we carried it into the caucus it was in better shape. I think so yet. If Senators request that it go over, I can not very well refuse.

Mr. CHILTON. Just subsection "(a)".

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would infinitely rather, however, that the bill be settled as we go along and not leave behind us a lot of things.

Mr. CHILTON. Let it go over for about an hour and let me look at that telegram and see what it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to state to the Senator from California the situation as it existed at the time this provision was adopted.

The committee have made the rule applicable to coal mines, giving them the right to a reasonable allowance for depletion, not to exceed the market value in the mine of the production thereof, but had made a different rule as to metalliferous mines, namely, the rule of reasonable allowance, not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine of the output for the year. Now, that is a very indefinite thing. It is only for one year—5 per cent for one year—whereas, if we are entitled to anything, we are entitled to the value in the mine of the ore taken out that year. When the attention of the caucus was called to it, they readily conceded that that part of it should apply to the entire provision, the reasonable value, the same as in coal mines. Consequently we struck out the word "coal" and made it "mines," so that it would be applicable to all mines, for it can be ascertained just as readily in the case of metalliferous mines as in the case of coal mines.

As to the oil provision, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who knows a great deal about this subject, wrote the amendment himself, explained it, and it was adopted; and I think it is a good provision.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, is a request made that this go over?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I make the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be passed over for the present.

Mr. CURTIS. That is, the oil provision?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, by the inadvertence of the clerk, certain language on page 36 that was not intended to be stricken out was stricken out. The language is on lines 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17. The clerk was instructed to strike out the House provisions as to these deductions on account of depletion and depreciation, but he went further and struck out this language:

And in the case of insurance companies the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts.

The committee therefore desires to reinsert that same language in the bill, but to insert it after the word "Treasury," on line 4 of page 37. I send it to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 4, after the word "Treasury," the last word in the proposed committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

And in the case of insurance companies the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 10, after the word "fire," to insert "and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That mutual fire and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders, but shall return as taxable income all income received by them from all other sources plus such portions of the premium deposits as are retained by the companies for purposes other than the payment of losses and expenses and reinsurance reserves.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 10, before the word "property," to strike out the word "personal," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That in the case of indebtedness wholly secured by property collateral, tangible or intangible, the subject of sale or hypothecation in the ordinary business of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association as a dealer only in the property constituting such collateral, or in loaning the funds thereby procured, the total interest paid by such corporation, company, or association within the year on any such indebtedness may be deducted as a part of its expenses of doing business, but interest on such indebtedness shall only be deductible on an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the actual value of such property collateral.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On page 39, in line 3, occurs the word "only," and it creates an ambiguity. It might refer to a "corporation, joint-stock company, or association as a dealer," and it might refer to the word "property," which follows. I therefore move that the word "only" be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 23, after the word "country," to strike out "and" and insert "or under the authority of," and in line 24, after the word "or," to strike out "municipal taxes" and insert "municipality or other taxing subdivision of any State," so as to make the clause read:

Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States, or its Territories or possessions, or any foreign country, or under the authority of any State, county, school, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 14, after the word "property," to strike out "to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity," so as to make the clause read:

First. All the ordinary and necessary expenses actually paid within the year out of earnings in the maintenance and operation of its business and property within the United States, including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 21, after the word "trade" and the semicolon, to insert "(a)," and in the same line, after the word "case," to strike out "of mines, including oil wells and gas wells, a reasonable allowance for depletion of ores and of other natural deposits, not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine of the output for the year for which the computation is made; and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the cost of or capital actually invested in the timber sold or removed during the year for which the return is made, but with respect to timber purchased prior to March 1, 1913, a reasonable allowance not in excess of the fair cash value of such timber on March 1, 1913; and in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts," and insert "of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained, not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines, a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

Second. All losses actually sustained within the year in business or trade conducted by it within the United States and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade; (a) and in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained, not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines, a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made; (c) and in the case of timber, a reasonable allowance for stumpage not in excess of the market value of the standing timber actually sawed and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi concerning the language in line 18, "not compensated by insurance or otherwise." I ask the Senator if property is insured for a much less amount than its value the whole value is to be taken into consideration or would only the amount for which it is insured be deducted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My construction of the language "not compensated by insurance" would be that if there is a loss of $5,000 and the insurance was $10,000, there would be no deduction, but if the loss was $10,000 and the insurance was $5,000, there would be a deduction of $5,000. The word "compensated" means an equal amount. That is my construction.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I wanted to have clear.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that if the loss was $10,000 and the insurance only $5,000, all they could deduct would be the $5,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The difference between the amount for which they were compensated by insurance and the amount of the loss.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hoped that was so, and I presume that that would be the effect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my construction of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Or if the loss is $20,000 and the insurance is only $5,000, they could deduct $15,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The difference between whatever was the loss by the special cause and the insurance. "Compensated" in the sum there, I think, covers it.

Here occurs precisely the same amendment which a moment ago I was asked to let go over. The request was made by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. So let this take the same course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In line 23, page 41, at the end of the Senate committee amendment, which has gone over, I wish to offer the amendment which was just a moment ago offered and adopted on a previous page. The previous page referred to resident corporations, and this refers to nonresident corporations.

This is to cure the same clerical error, after the word "Treasury," in line 23, striking out too much of the House provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after the word "Treasury," in line 23, insert:

(d) And in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 5, after the word "fire," to insert "and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That mutual fire and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders, but shall return as taxable income all income received by them from all other sources plus such portions of the premium deposits as are retained by the companies for purposes other than the payment of losses and expenses and reinsurance reserves.

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 17, after the word "imposed," to insert "or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty," so as to make the clause read:

Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the proportion of the sum of (a) the entire amount of the paid-up capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, or, if no capital stock, the entire amount of the capital employed in the business at the close of the year, and (b) one-half of its interest-bearing indebtedness then outstanding, which the gross amount of its income for the year from business transacted and capital invested within the United States bears to the gross amount of its income derived from all sources within and without the United States: Provided, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty shall be allowed; and in case of a bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof, interest paid within the year on deposits by or on moneys received for investment from either citizens or residents of the United States and secured by interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued by such bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 2, after the word "possessions," to strike out "and" and insert "or under the authority of," and, in line 4, after the word "or," to strike out "municipal taxes" and insert "municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State," so as to make the clause read:

Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States, or its Territories or possessions, or under the authority of any State, county, school, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Returns," in section 13, on page 46, line 5, after the words "United States," to insert "or if it have no principal place of business, office, or agency in the United States, then to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md.," so as to make the clause read:

(b) Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, subject to the tax herein imposed shall, on or before the 1st day of March, 1917, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter, or, if it has designated a fiscal year for the computation of its tax, then within 60 days after the close of such fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1916, and the close of each such fiscal year thereafter, render a true and accurate return of its annual net income in the manner and form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and containing such facts, data, and information as are appropriate and, in the opinion of the commissioner, necessary to determine the correctness of the net income returned and to carry out the provisions of this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer, and by the treasurer or assistant treasurer. The return shall be made to the collector of the district in which is located the principal office of the corporation, company, or association where are kept its books of account and other data from which the return is prepared, or, in the case of a foreign corporation, company, or association, to the collector of the district in which is located its principal place of business in the United States, or, if it have no principal place of business, office, or agency in the United States, then to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md. All such returns shall, as received, be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 1, after the word "unless," to strike out "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue finds that"; so as to make the clause read:

(d) A corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, keeping accounts upon any basis other than that of actual receipts and disbursements, unless such other basis does not clearly reflect its income, may, subject to regulations made by such commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make its return upon the basis upon which its accounts are kept, in which case the tax shall be computed upon its income as so returned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to page 47, lines 1 and 2. The Senate at that point has agreed to the committee amendment striking out the words "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue finds that." In lines 3 and 4 of the same page the language reads, "subject to regulations made by such commissioner." The word "commissioner" refers to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which has been stricken out in the previous part of the sentence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the word "such," in line 4, should be stricken out, and the words "of Internal Revenue" should be inserted after the word "Commissioner."

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I desired to call to the Senator's attention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, on page 47, line 4, to strike out the word "such" before the word "Commissioner," and after the word "Commissioner" to insert "of Internal Revenue."

Mr. CHILTON. The word "the" should also be inserted before the word "Commissioner."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I desire to include that in my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, line 4, before the word "Commissioner," it is proposed to strike out the word "such" and to insert "the"; and after the word "Commissioner" in the same line to insert "of Internal Revenue."

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 47, after line 7, to insert:

(e) All the provisions of this title relating to the tax authorized and required to be deducted and withheld and paid to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same from the income of nonresident alien individuals from sources within the United States shall be made applicable to incomes derived from interest upon bonds and mortgages or deeds of trust or similar obligations of domestic or other resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies by nonresident alien firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies not engaged in business or trade within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein.

(f) Likewise, all the provisions of this title relating to the tax authorized and required to be deducted and withheld and paid to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same from the income of nonresident alien individuals from sources within the United States shall be made applicable to income derived from dividends upon the capital stock or from the net earnings of domestic or other resident corporations, joint-tock companies or associations, and insurance companies by nonresident alien companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies not engaged in business or trade within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the member of the committee having this matter in charge that as to clause (a), on page 36, which was passed over, the conclusion has been reached that it is all right as it is written. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] does not want to pursue the matter any further, and the amendment may be adopted without further amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 36, and I ask that the committee amendment at that point be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 2, the committee amendment proposes to strike out, after the word "trade," down to and including the word "contracts," in line 17, and to insert the words printed in the bill, beginning after the word "contract," in line 17, down to and including the words "Secretary of the Treasury," on page 37, line 4, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Following that up, on pages 40 and 41, I ask that the same course be pursued, and that the Senate committee amendment be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On pages 40 and 41, the committee amendment proposes to strike out the language beginning with the words "of mines," in line 21, on page 40, down to and including the word "contracts," on page 41, line 11, and to insert the words printed in italics, beginning after the word "contracts," on page 41, line 11, down to and including the words "Secretary of the Treasury," in line 23, on the same page, as amended.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why we should not insert in the amendment the words "average production based upon actual measurement." That would make it certain and would be fair to both parties.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Oregon will read the provision he will notice that the whole matter is to be conducted under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. They can not possibly provide for it without actual measurement.

Mr. LANE. Oh, yes; they can. If you will insert the language I have suggested then there will be a rule or regulation that will be very easy for them to follow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But would the Senator have internal-revenue collectors stay there all the time to make the measurements?

Mr. LANE. No; the product would be measured by meter, which would be read just as other meters are read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then there would have to be a Treasury official at each place to watch the meters.

Mr. LANE. No; the official would go to a given place once a month or once in six weeks or in two months and look at the meters and see what they register. Upon that meter register the charge would be based. The trips the inspectors would take would be valuable. The Government would not lose money because of his expenses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see any necessity for such an amendment. It seems to me that the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department can be trusted to take care of it.

Mr. LANE. But they know nothing about it, unless the product is metered and measured.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Treasury officials find that they must do that, they will do it.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are bent on collecting the tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "assessment and administration," in section 14, on page 49, line 15, after the words "becomes due," to insert:

Provided, That upon the examination of any return of income made pursuant to this title if it shall appear that amounts of tax have been paid in excess of those properly due, the taxpayer shall be permitted to present a claim for refund thereof notwithstanding the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 22, after the word "the," to strike out "assessment" and insert "assessments of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company," so as to make the clause read:

(b) When the assessments of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, shall be made, as provided in this title, the returns, together with any corrections thereof which may have been made by the commissioner, shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and shall constitute public records and be open to inspection as such: Provided, That any and all such returns shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President: Provided further, That the proper officers of any State imposing a general income tax may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to said returns or to an abstract thereof, showing the name and income of each such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment to that provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, on page 49, line 22, by inserting, after the word "any" and before the word "corporation," the word "individual," so as to read:

When the assessments of any individual, corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, etc.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to extend the provisions of this subsection to individuals as well as to corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies. If the amendment prevails, I shall move later on to insert the word "individual" in line 12, page 50, after the word "such."

The question involved here is the question of publicity; whether the public shall have the right to examine the income-tax returns of individuals, the same as this section permits to be done in the case of corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies. I think it is quite difficult to give any sound reason why these records should not be public, and, furthermore, I can not see why, if corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies are subjected to having their income-tax returns examined, the individual should not have his income-tax return made public, or, at least, subject to examination.

There is a considerable opportunity for evasion in the administration of the income-tax law. I think it is a matter of common knowledge that one of the greatest arguments against the income tax is the difficulty of its administration. I think that is true. It is particularly true if the returns are made secret documents, filed away, and the light of day never permitted to shine upon them.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the Senator as to the scope of his amendment. If his amendment is adopted, would returns of individuals under the income tax be open to inspection otherwise than upon the order of the President?

Mr. HUSTING. Not so far as this particular amendment goes.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator propose to follow that amendment with an amendment which will make such returns public?

Mr. HUSTING. At the proper time, I intend to do so. I understand that it would not be in order at this time to move to amend the proviso beginning in line 8, on page 50, because that is the House text.

Mr. KENYON. The present amendment of the Senator does not go to that extent?

Mr. HUSTING. It does not go to that extent now, for the reason that I understand it would not be in order at the present time.

Mr. KENYON. Well, will the Senator bring that question up at some time, so that we may have an opportunity to vote on it?

Mr. HUSTING. If no other Senator does, I shall be very glad to bring that up and move to strike out that part of the bill which makes income-tax returns open to inspection only upon the order of the President.

Mr. KENYON. I shall be very glad to vote for such an amendment.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I presume it is not necessary in support of my amendment to argue that publicity is a good thing. The committee amendment favors publicity of returns but exempts the individual from such publicity, and in exempting the individual I think that it makes it extremely difficult, in fact makes it impossible, to check up the returns of the corporation with those of individuals; in other words, while the corporation may make a return of certain payments to individuals, the public and the public's officers are excluded from comparing the individual's record with the corporate record to see whether or not they agree.

I am aware that in every income-tax law this question of publicity has been one of the features that has been most bitterly debated pro and con, but I think the bugaboo of publicity, the objection to prying into the affairs of business and individuals, has largely been dissipated by experience. All taxes involve a certain amount of investigation, of prying into private affairs of individuals, because the only way we can determine the basis for a tax is to find out the property that a man has. In ordinary taxation it is necessary to find out how many horses a man has, how many cows he has, how much land he has, what kind of house he has, what material it is made of, and many other matters in order to ascertain what the property is worth. In order to form a proper basis for an income tax, it is necessary to find out what a man earns, and it is necessary to find out all the facts which are relevant and material and necessary and essential in determining the amount of taxable income enjoyed by the individual. If the Government has a right to impose an income tax, it certainly has a right to find out in all proper ways the facts necessary to be ascertained in order to establish a basis for the imposition and the amount of such a tax; in other words, the right to impose an income tax carries with it necessarily the right to determine what the income of an individual or a corporation is; and in order to do that, it is necessary to pry into his affairs; and, not only that, but the taxing power has a right to, and must, if it is going to make the income tax effective, be able to check up and compare the records of a State or of the Government or of any subdivision of government and find out whether they agree.

That this is necessary is shown by the number of inspectors who have been hired and are receiving large salaries to go out and discover the men who are evading the income tax in whole or in part, to dig up the incomes that have been covered up. We recognize that; and not only do we recognize that but the record shows that, as a matter of fact, individuals are as prone to evade the income tax as they are to evade other taxes. It seems that a good many men otherwise perfectly honest and perfectly reliable, when it comes to tax paying, think they have a vested inherent right to cover up or understate the value of their property or incomes in order to minimize the tax that they are compelled to pay, and they think that is entirely proper. At any rate, the facts show it, and the records of the Government show it, that men will evade the income taxes, because the inspectors are uncovering more and more incomes that have not been declared, or which have been minimized, or, in other words, not properly returned.

It does not seem that any good argument can be raised why individuals and why governmental agents, whether they are agents of a State or agents of a municipality, should not have a right to go in and look at these records and check them up. It is not only helpful to those agencies seeking to collect taxes, whatever those taxes may be, but it is helpful to the Government to secure this information from them, which serve as a result of comparison and checking up.

Now, we have an income tax in the State that I represent, and I know that the Government has access to those records and has the benefit of the work done by our income-tax assessors or superintendents of income, because the income tax in Wisconsin was in effect before the national income tax.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if, under the Wisconsin law, the returns under the State income-tax law are open to public inspection?

Mr. HUSTING. I think they are. I think there is some restriction on the publicity of them, but I think they are open to inspection. I will look that matter up a little later, and get the exact provision. But here is the point: Other States may want to enact income-tax laws. If they are prohibited from going to the records of the Government, they are denied the experience and the facts that have been gathered by the United States Government; and the same rule holds good the other way. There ought to be cooperation between the Government and the States, and between individuals.

I have heard it argued that if individuals know that their income tax is going to be published, or is open to inspection, they will try to reduce it because they fear they will be approached by mendicants and others who, discovering that they are making so much money, will want to beg, borrow, or steal from them. I think the tendency will be all the other way. I think a good many men, if they knew that their neighbors were going o find out that they were not making a true return of their income, would be ashamed and afraid not to make a correct return. Knowing that the eyes of their neighbors and the eyes of their local officers were upon them, I think they would be more apt to make a correct return, because they would know very well that if they did not they would be detected either by their fellow citizens or by the authorities.

It does seem to me that the word "individual" ought to be inserted here, so that we could check up the individual income-tax return with the return of the corporation of which he is a stockholder, and see whether they are both making the correct returns, and whether the tax is being evaded either by the corporation or by the individual, or by both.

For that reason I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the committee hopes the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will not be adopted.

The Senator says that he sees no difference between corporation returns and individual returns. There is, however, a very plain and palpable and obvious difference. A corporation is a quasi public concern. An individual is not. The real purpose of this amendment, I take it, is to help the several States which have income taxes to secure data from the Federal Government with regard to the business of the individual making the income return. I think that is the real purpose of the amendment.

Whether or not one of these two dual sovereignties of ours ought to make itself an instrumentality for the fiscal operations of the other is a somewhat doubtful question, about which I express no opinion at this time; but I do not see how the operations of the United States Treasury will be either expedited or facilitated by the adoption of an amendment of this sort.

The Senator seems to have in his mind a notion that because these income-tax returns are not public, therefore the United States Government has no knowledge of them. Of course he did not mean to say that exactly, but underlying his argument there seemed to be that sort of notion. Pursuing what I have just said, he said that there was no way of checking up the corporation returns by comparison with the individual returns. Of course publicity or nonpublicity of the individual returns has nothing to do with that. Both returns are in the Treasury Department, and the Treasury Department has every facility for checking up one by the other.

As far as the individual tax returns are concerned, one very important step has already been taken with regard to publicity with respect to them. If the Senator will recur to a previous part of the bill, where the tax upon individuals is under consideration, he will find that we struck out the word "amounts." There was an inhibition against furnishing the amounts as well as the particulars and the details of the individual income-tax returns. That amendment has already been adopted by the Senate, and if it goes through in conference that inhibition will no longer lie, and as far as the amount of the income-tax return of the individual is concerned that will become public. At least there will be no penalty nor any inhibition against making it public.

Mr. President, a committee considering a bill like this has a great many very delicate points to consider, and in considering them there is a larg. diversity of opinion among the individual members of the committee at the beginning of their consideration of the subject matter. There is but one practical way of getting along, and that is to thrash it out with one another, and then after it is thrashed out for the committee to abide by the result. The individual members of the committee did thrash this out; they took quite a long while about it, and they finally consented that as a sort of compromise the amounts might be published, but that the private concerns of the taxpayer when he made returns to the Government, the details of what might be called his private business affairs, should still be protected by the aegis of the law. Whether or not that was right from certain standpoints of general economics, it is certainly right from the standpoint of levying and collecting the tax. There is nothing to be hoped in the way of increased revenue from the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, and very much to be feared in the wa, of decreased revenue.

While perhaps one of our dual sovereignties ought to help the other as a sort of a friendly fiscal agency, after all the main duty of each is to collect its own revenue. With that main duty before us, the Treasury Department has not approved of an amendment of this sort, and the committee did not approve of it, and I hope it will not be accepted.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that it is my judgment that this change would increase the revenues I would not urge this amendment. The fact of the matter is that the whole argument I tried to make is based upon the belief that it will increase the amount of the tax, and increase it without making it a hardship on anybody. It will increase the revenue by making the individual and the corporation pay the amounts which they are in duty bound to pay under the law, if they do not evade the law.

Throwing this cloak of secrecy over these returns, I think, is a very bad practice and a very bad principle to apply in matters of taxation. I believe that nothing good can come of concealing the figures from the public, or concealing from the public those records which they ought to have a right to know about. In fact, it seems to me a questionable practice, and I doubt whether Congress has any real right to put the seal of secrecy upon a matter of this kind, which should be a matter of common knowledge. Those records belong to the people just as much as they do to the Treasury Department. There is no reason in the world, it seems to me, that justifies the putting of tax figures and tax returns in a place where the public can not get at them.

Here we are legislating for the people, and we say that certain people shall pay a certain tax, but we tell the people generally: "We are going to make people pay a tax, and going to make them make a return, but it is none of your business what that return is. It is none of your business what the amount of the income tax is, or upon what it is based." I hold that it is bad practice, and I do not think it is good in principle. I think it is bad in both instances.

Nobody will say that individuals ought not to pay the income tax which the law imposes upon them. Now, we do say that corporations shall pay their just amount of income tax, and we go further and say that the public shall have a right to investigate their records, and that State governments shall have a right to investigate their records but shall not have a right to know whether the return that they make to their individual stockholders will be verified by the individual himself. So far the record is open. Here comes a corporation that says, "We paid so much to our individual stockholders." The public can not go to the individual stockholder and find out whether he received that amount or not. The States can not do it. You say, "So far you can go and no farther." You can not question their returns. You can not verify their returns. You can not check them up.

While, of course, there is a distinction between a corporation and an individual—one is an artificial person, the other a natural person—yet, so far as tax paying is concerned, I can not see any difference in principle between them. There is no question here of our authority to make the individual returns public. If we have a right to tax the individual, we have a right to make public the returns that he makes just as well as we have a right to make public the returns of the corporation of which he is a stockholder. It does not go to a question of principle. It does not go to a question of authority that because a private corporation has been created by law we have any more authority to examine into its income-tax returns than we have to examine into the income-tax returns of an individual. As I say, it is not a question of authority; it is not a question of power; it is a question of policy. It seems to me the only question is, Is it good policy to use all the means that you have at your command to find out whether or not a man is making truthful returns?

If we have a right to levy an income tax, and if we have a right to make individuals as well as corporations make returns and swear to those returns, I should like to know why we have not a right to say to individuals, "You can go in there and see whether or not your neighbor is paying as much as you are paying. You can compare the income tax which you are paying with the income tax that your neighbor is paying to find out whether he is making a just return or not."

I said something about men evading their taxes. I think the desire to evade taxes on the part of individuals does not go to the question of dishonesty per se or a desire to escape taxation. A man does not want to pay any more in proportion to what he has than his neighbor does. If he has a $5,000 house and his neighbor has a $5,000 house, he wants his neighbor's house to be assessed just as much as his; and if he finds that his neighbor is returning his real estate at $2,000, notwithstanding it is worth $5,000, he feels, in justice, that he ought to make the same return and he ought not to pay on any more than $2,000 in the case of his house.

Now, apply that to the income tax. If a man has an income of $5,000 each year and his neighbor has an income of $5,000 a year and he is paying $200 a year income tax while his neighbor is getting away with $25 a year income tax, he feels that he has not been justly used. If you give him the right to go and examine his neighbor's income-tax return to see whether or not he is paying his just dues, you remove his dissatisfaction and you make his neighbor come up to the scratch, because he will see that he does it; and if you do not do it, he will evade the tax just the same as his neighbor does.

So it seems to me that we ought not to tie ourselves up or hedge ourselves about in the administration of an income tax so that we are hamstrung on all sides and can not find out things that we ought to find out. It seems to me we ought not to withhold from ourselves information that we have a right to have. It seems to me that it is not good, wise policy to build obstacles in front of ourselves to prevent the carrying out of a law in its entirety and in its fullness. We say that certain men shall pay an income tax, but we do not take all the means at our command to see that they do pay that income tax. It works injustice, and it works an evasion of the law; and it seems to me the very fact that publicity is permitted here as to corporations shows the advisability of the same policy as to individuals. Is it any better policy to be enabled to look into the books of a corporation and pry into its affairs than to look into the affairs of an individual? Is there any difference in principle? If it is bad on the grounds of vexatiousness and prying into the affairs of business men, what difference does it make whether it is a corporation's affairs that you want to look into or an individual's affairs that you want to look into?

With all deference to the committee and the study it has made of this question, this is not a technical question. This is a question that any man who has given the subject any thought or study knows as much about as any other man. It involves simply the proposition of whether publicity in matters of this kind is going to bring out the truth better than covering this thing up and hedging it about with obstruction so that it can not be readily loked into and examined by anyone who is interested enough to do so.

For that reason I feel as though there ought to be some clause put in providing for full publicity. I believe we ought to have full publicity. I do not believe it ought even be subject to the order of the President. I think it is a record from which any citizen of this country who is a taxpayer, who has got to put up his own money and pay his own taxes, has a right to look into and see what his neighbor is paying and whether he is paying his full share.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin contends that any citizen of the United States ought to have a right to enter the deputy collector's office any moment and examine the returns of his neighbor?

Mr. HUSTING. Under reasonable regulations and restrictions and within reasonable hours.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that case the deputy collector would not have any time to do anything except to receive visitors.

Mr. HUSTING. In answer to that I will say that anyone has a right now to go into the tax collector's office in my county, and in this city, I believe, and in every other city, and see what are the returns.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He has not any right of the sort. I know unless the sheriff, who is the tax collector in my State, chooses to show his books to him no man has a right to enter the sheriff's office in Mississippi and say, "Let me see HUSTING'S tax return." The sheriff may or may not do so. There is no inhibition against it; no penalty against it.

Mr. HUSTING. I am happy to say that in Wisconsin he has a right to do it. On equalization day or before equalization day comes around you have a right to go into the tax collector's office or the assessor's office and examine his books to see how much he has assessed your property and to see how much he has assessed your neighbor's property.

You can go there and make your representation to an assessor, and in a proper case either you can make him put up your neighbor's property where it belongs or put yours down to where it belongs. It works for justice and prevents favoritism on the part of an assessor such as to assess one man' piece of property so much and another man with a similar piece of property a good deal more or a good deal less. I say it is in the interest of the business of every individual who pays taxes to pay taxes in proportion to what his income or his property bears to that of his neighbor. It is just as much a right on his part as a right on the part of the Government to make him pay his full share, and every time the Government makes a man pay his full share and permits another man to escape the payment of his full share it is doing an injustice to the man who is honest and pays his just share. The man who justly pays all the taxes he ought to pay is vitally interested in knowing for himself, if he wants to, whether his neighbor is paying in accordance with his ability to pay and in accordance with his income and the amount of property he owns. So it is a matter of concern to every taxpayer, and the way ought to be easy. There ought to be some order about it. The inspection ought to be in reasonable hours and under reasonable regulations, and his right of access to public records ought not to be absolutely, in any event, denied. He ought not to be absolutely debarred from looking at the records of his own Government, the Government that taxes him to pay the expenses of running that Government, and which punishes him if he does not pay his just share.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. HUSTING. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. HUSTING. I will be through in a few minutes. I have just a few more words to say.

I say this is not a question that requires any great technical knowledge. It seems to me it is a matter of common ordinary sense to decide whether we want publicity or whether we do not want it. The committee goes quite far in favor of publicity, and I presume the reason they say we shall have publicity in some cases is because they believe that in the case of corporations, and so forth, publicity is a good thing, and it is wise to look at their records. Why? Because, I presume, they think it will increase incomes which otherwise would remain hidden, and consequently increased revenues will result because of publicity in these cases. I agree with the committee in that, and therefore I want to go a step further and put the individuals who compose the corporations, who compose the stock company, who compose the insurance company, and who collectively form these companies, in the same category. I do not want the curtain dropped just after you get by the corporation and say you can examine the returns, but you can not turn around and verify them by looking at this man's return to see whether he pays sufficient or not. If publicity in the administration of this law is a good thing as far as it concerns corporations, then I think it proves that publicity is a good thing as far as it concerns individuals, and the same rule should apply. More than that, by including individuals you make the provision of publicity concerning corporations still more efficacious by giving checks and counterchecks in all cases.

I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not care to argue the question further. I want to say just here that so far as each man paying his taxes is concerned, or his share, as the Senator from Wisconsin calls it, we have sworn bonded officials who hold their offices solely for that purpose and who are very much more to be trusted, in my opinion, than making a deputy internal-revenue supervisor out of every man's neighbor in order that his neighbor may see whether the man has paid his taxes.

There is a great deal said about publicity, the shining light of publicity, and all that. Light is a good thing; publicity is a good thing; but after all is said and done, men do have private business, and their private business ought to be respected to a certain extent. The line of demarcation between the degree to which it ought to be respected and the degree beyond which it ought not to be respected is the line which it is necessary for the Government to draw in order to collect its revenue.

This amendment will not help in collecting any revenue of the Government unless it just simply makes out of every man's neighbor a deputy internal-revenue collector to instruct and advise and perhaps overrule the internal-revenue collector, who is an official and nonpartisan. It opens the way for hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness in every possible way.

I hope that the amendment to the amendment will be defeated, and I join with the Senator from Wisconsin in asking for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is not present; I have been unable to get a transfer of my pair; and I am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). He has not voted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. POMERENE. I was requested to announce the necessary absence from the Chamber of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, but I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I learn that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would vote as I would vote. Therefore I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BRYAN] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. McLEAN. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. Under the circumstances I consider that I have a right to vote on this question, and I will vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Ashurst	Husting	Lane	Sheppard
Borah	Jones	Martine, N. J.	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Kenyon	Reed

So Mr. HUSTING's amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask consent to return to page 17, line 2.

Mr. LANE. I wish to reserve the right to offer an amendment demanding full publicity. I do not know whether this is the right time or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor now.

Mr. LANE. I know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will have an opportunity later.

Mr. LANE. All right, then. I did not understand that the vote had been announced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it had been announced.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. LANE. We will have the regular order. I rose to a matter of personal privilege, to be informed whether the vote had been announced. I have a right to know and I am going to know, I will say to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania. Has the vote been announced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote has been announced. The Senator from Oregon will have no difficulty in submitting any amendment he desires at the proper time. The Chair wishes to say to the Senator from Mississippi that, according to the understanding of the Chair, the committee amendment has not yet been adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right; I will wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask to recur to page 17. The bill seems to leave it in doubt as to whether the $3,000 income exemption shall apply to the net estates of deceased persons. The subcommittee had the matter under consideration and decided very clearly that it should do so, but they seem to have neglected to bring it forward in the bill. Of course, it would not be good policy to have every little estate of $1,000 or more which might be left to a widow and children taxed without an exemption as to income during the period of its administration or settlement. The estate-tax provision makes that tax applicable under certain conditions during the period of distribution or settlement. We want to make that perfectly clear. I therefore offer this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend, page 17, line 2, by inserting a new sentence, after the word "sources," as follows:

There shall also be allowed an exemption from the amount of the net income of estates of deceased persons during the period of income administration or settlement, and of trust or other estates the income of which is not distributed annually or regularly under the provisions of paragraph b, section 2, the sum of $3,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 22, after the numerals "$10,000," to insert:

"Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have authority, in the case of either corporations or individuals, to grant a reasonable extension of time in meritorious cases, as he may deem necessary."

So as to make the clause read:

(c) If any of the corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations, or insurance companies aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to make a return at the time or times hereinbefore specified in each year, or shall render a false or fraudulent return, such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $10,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have authority, in the case of either corporations or individuals, to grant a reasonable extension of time in meritorious cases as he may deem necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The word "necessary" there ought to be changed to the word "proper." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Part III—General administrative provisions," in section 16, page 52, line 1, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or the amount," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 16. That sections 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3167. It shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States, he shall be dismissed from office or discharged from employment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 4, on page 56, the last clause read being as follows:

If the failure to file a return or list is due to sickness or absence the collector may allow such further time, not exceeding 30 days, for making and filing the return or list as he deems necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On page 56, at the end of line 4, I move to strike out the word "necessary" and to insert the word "proper."

The motion was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 58, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 19. The collector or deputy collector shall require every return to be verified by the oath of the party rendering it. If the collector or deputy collector have reason to believe that the amount of any income returned it understated, he shall give due notice to the person making the return to show cause why the amount of the return should not be increased, and upon proof of the amount understated may increase the same accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. After the word "accordingly," in line 15, on page 58, in order to perfect the amendment, I offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Such person may furnish sworn testimony to prove any relevant facts, and if dissatisfied with the decision of the collector may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by regulation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 58, after line 16, to insert:

SEC. 20. Nothing in this title shall be construed to release a taxable person from liability for income tax, and any contract hereafter entered into for payment of any interest, rent, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical payment without allowing any deduction authorized to be made by this title or for the reimbursement of any amount so deducted shall be void.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think if the section is permitted to remain as it is in the bill there will be a great injustice done to many of the small purchasers of bonds of different companies in the United States. For instance, take a railroad bond. Under this provision, if a man whose income is less than $3,000, if unmarried, and who is not taxable under the bill, should purchase $500 worth of railroad bonds or of bonds of any other corporation he would not be exempt from the tax upon the interest upon those bonds. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the policy of legislation should be to encourage the small purchaser of bonds issued by public utilities corporations and, I might say, of all corporations. By enabling railroad and other corporations to get their bonds or stock into the hands of small purchasers, I believe we assist the corporations themselves, and it will be better for the country; but under section 20, if it become a part of the bill, if a person not otherwise subject to the provisions of this bill should purchase $500 or $1,000 worth of bonds of any such corporation he would not be exempt from the tax but would have to pay the tax upon the income from that source.

I do not know whether or not the Senator from Mississippi and the committee intended this; but certainly the wording of this amendment as contained in section 20 will have the effect I have indicated. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi, did the committee intend that in cases such as I have called attention to a tax should be imposed, if the income of the purchaser is less than $3,000, if he be an unmarried man?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the committee intended to put the foot of the Federal Government down upon all contracts hereinafter entered into for the purpose of contracting anybody out of the payment of the tax to the Federal Government, whether large or small. The provision is:

And any contract hereafter entered into for payment of any interest, rent, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical payment without allowing any deduction authorized to be made by this title or for the reimbursement of any amount so deducted shall be void.

Mr. President, it has grown to be a habit with certain corporations, in order to render their bonds attractive, to insert in them a clause that the bond buyer shall be relieved from all taxes; in other words, the corporation contracts to pay the tax, for if the tax is laid by the Federal Government, of course, somebody must pay it. We therefore concluded that, as regards contracts of that sort already made, they having made their bed, they should lie in it; but, as to the future, that no such contract should be made, it being, in our opinion, contrary to public policy for men to attempt to contract themselves out of the payment of taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course, under the bill governmental securities—Federal, State, and municipal—are tax free; and in section 13 of the bill, I believe, the securities of farm-loan banks and of farm-loan associations are tax free. Under this provision no part of the issue of a corporation will be tax free, even though the bonds be sold to a private individual who is not subject to the tax imposed by the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, when the bonds of the farm-loan associations are made free of tax they are made free of it by the act of the Federal Government, and are not sought to be made free by private contract entered into between two individuals.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this provision remains in the bill, governmental securities such as I have mentioned will have a great advantage in the market. It seems to me, under this provision, that wherever a corporation issues its bonds the persons buying the bonds, if they have an income of more than $3,000, if they be unmarried, or $4,000 if married, would be taxed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is just what we are trying to do—to keep the corporations hereafter from trying by contract to keep the holders of bonds from making such payments. We are providing that any contract entered into by which they are permitted to make the deduction shall be void.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator can read that meaning into the language of the section, I can not do so. It seems to me it is very ambiguous, if what the Senator has stated is what is intended by the section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The clause is as plain as the nose on a man's face. This is the way it reads:

Any contract hereafter entered into for payment of any interest, rent, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical payment without allowing any deduction authorized to be made by this title or for the reimbursement of any amount so deducted shall be void.

In other words, when they enter into a contract to the effect that the bondholder is not to pay the tax, but that they will pay it, or that if the purchaser is compelled to pay it that they will reimburse him, that contract is made void.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it does not at all affect the exemption which the law gives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me, it simply brings to a stop a system that has existed on the part of certain corporations of issuing bonds and contracting in the issue of the bonds that the corporations themselves will pay all taxes instead of the holders of the bonds paying them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or if the holder is compelled to pay them, that they will reimburse him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. It does not mean any change at all is to be had in the $3,000 exemption or in the $4,000 exemption; it leaves that just as it now stands in the law; but it makes illegal contracts by corporations in connection with the issue of bonds to assume the payment of any taxes of any kind hereafter levied upon those bonds by national or governmental organizations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment, the word "deduction" in this bill has a technical meaning. It never applies to exemptions. Whenever incomes of $3,000 or $4,000 are referred to they are referred to as exemptions.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the meaning of this section, of course, I have no particular objection to it; but it does seem to me that if it be construed literally as it reads its effect will be as I have stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say this: After the matter goes to conference, as it necessarily must, if Senators can show the conferees that there is any ambiguity in it, whereby the language does not accomplish the purpose sought, of course, the conferees will be very glad to make it plain; but I do not see any doubt about it.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the language in the present law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; substantially.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Mississippi to indicate what is meant by the first portion of the sentence:

Nothing in this title shall be construed to release a taxable person from liability to income tax.

You have already released by previous provision taxable persons from the income tax, provided their income does not exceed $3,000 in the one case or $4,000 in the other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This says "a taxable person," and a "taxable person" is defined in the bill itself to be a person, if married, having over $4,000 income and if unmarried having an income over $3,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not intended to interfere with the general rule as to the liability of individuals for taxes on their incomes. That is what it says.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says "a taxable person."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 58, line 23, to change the number of the section from "19" to "21."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 4, to change the number of the section from "20" to "22."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 12, to change the number of the section from "21" to "23."

The amendmdent was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 19, to change the number of the section from "22" to "24."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 11, to change the number of the section from "23" to "25."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 1, to change the number of the section from "24" to "26."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before we proceed further with the consideration of the committee amendments I wish to submit a few remarks upon the bill itself. I will not take up a great deal of time. I will say to the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. President, I know the necessity which exists to-day for increased governmental revenue, and I am somewhat hesitant about opposing any measure having that purpose in view. I realize the truth of the declaration in the Republican platform that "the Underwood Tariff Act is a complete failure in every respect," and that the emergency measures supplementing it have failed to provide sufficient revenue to satisfy the ever-increasing appetite of the Democratic party for increased expenditures. In addition to the necessity for increased revenues, by reason of the unparalleled extravagance of the Democratic party, there has arisen a need for several hundred millions more on account of the preparedness legislation of the present Congress. For that legislation I voted with the greatest good will, and I, therefore, stand prepared to support any reasonable measure intended to provide the money necessary to carry it out. I feel somewhat tolerant, therefore, toward those members of my party who, after voicing their objections to the bill, reluctantly supported it when it passed the House of Representatives; but my toleration for them does not lead me to follow their example. The measure, in my opinion, is radically and basically wrong. It violates every canon of taxation that has been enunciated since men began to think intelligently upon the subject. Adam Smith's first maxim of taxation is this:

The subjects of every State ought to contribute toward the support of the Government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities.

Instead of following this maxim this measure is devised so as to reach as few people as possible and in appearance, but not in reality, to leave the great body of our people untaxed. Of course this will not be its ultimate effect. The corporations who are so heavily taxed under this measure will sooner or later pass it on to the passengers who ride on their trains and the customers who buy their products. The banks will demand higher rates of interest from their borrowers. The owners of land and property will add the amount of their increased taxes to the rents they exact from their tenants, and in the end the ultimate consumer will pay the bill.

The Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall have power to "lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises"; but in another section it further declares that "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws"; and in order to emphasize its claim to this exclusive field, it goes on to provide that even in such cases the net proceeds of all such duties and imposts laid by any State on imports and exports shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

The field of customs taxation, therefore, is expressly reserved for the exclusive control of Congress—and it is the only field which is so reserved. All others are open alike to the States and to the Congress. This being the case, it is no more than reasonable to presume that the framers of the Constitution intended that this field should be exhausted before other means of taxation were resorted to. Notwithstanding this plain presumption, this exclusive field is the only one which has been neglected in the framing of this measure. If this plain path, outlined in the Constitution and sanctioned by unbroken precedent, had been followed, it would have been an easy task for the Sixty-third Congress to have provided ample revenues for the ordinary expenditures, and even to have provided to a considerable extent for the preparedness program, without resorting to either the income or the inheritance tax, the first of which, in my opinion, should be reserved for extraordinary emergencies and the second should be left to the several States.

The Constitution, then, having conferred upon Congress the exclusive power to levy customs duties, it might reasonably be supposed that the path of duty thus pointed out would be followed by the framers of revenue legislation until the field was exhausted; but the Democratic party in its blindness decided to abandon this plain path, the one pointed out by the leaders of their own party from the very foundation of the Government, and in the Underwood Tariff Act they set out to explore other and untried fields. This act and the various emergency acts designed to repair its shattered parts having proved dismal failures, one would think that it would be the part of wisdom for them to seek the easiest way out of their troubles by retracing their steps and making at least an attempt to restore their revenue structure by a return to the time-honored policy of their fathers.

But before pursuing this argument to its conclusion let us see what might have happened if the Democratic party on its advent to power in 1913 had been sufficiently wise to let well enough alone and had allowed the Republican tariff act to stand unrepealed.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the last year in which the Payne-Aldrich Act was in force, there were imported into the country goods to the value of $1,813,008,234. The revenue derived from these imports was $318,142,344, the average rate of duty on all imports, including the free list, being 17½ per cent.

During the fiscal year just ended June 30 last, the total value of our imports had risen to $2,197,929,982, an increase over 1913 of $384,921,748; but notwithstanding this large increase in value the total customs revenue was only $211,866,222, or 9.6 per cent. Here we have an increase in imports of over $384,000,000 and a decrease in revenue of over $106,000,000.

Now, if the imports of the year just past had paid the same average rates of duty as those which prevailed during the last year in which the Republican tariff was in force, the revenue derived therefrom would have been $384,637,746, exceeding that which was actually received by the enormous sum of $172,771,524.

I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks a table showing the value of imports and the revenue derived therefrom during each month of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and also of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair hearing no objection, that course will be pursued.

The table referred to is as follows:

Imports and revenue from same.

Mr. OLIVER. But the Payne-Aldrich Act was a protective measure, and it could hardly be expected that the Democratic party, the avowed enemy of protection, would allow it to lie untouched on the statute books; but that measure, as I have said, was a protective measure pure and simple, and while, coupled with other wise measures enacted by Republican Congresses, it provided ample revenues for the Government's uses and a constantly increasing surplus besides, the revenue was merely an incident. Protection was the dominant idea in its construction. If the Democratic party, determined to abandon the protective idea, had adhered to its traditional policy of a tariff for revenue only, it could have framed a measure based exclusively on revenue lines, the collections under which might have even exceeded those under Republican administrations and provided amply even for that career of unparalleled extravagance upon which that party was about to enter, and which it has since pursued with an energy calculated to excite the envy of every spendthrift in the land. As a looker-on it seemed to me then, and it is still more apparent now, that wisdom pointed in this direction, and I firmly believe that if the leaders of that party, or perhaps I should say the leader, for there is but one, had determined upon this course and relied upon direct methods of taxation for only what additional revenues might be required, that party, aided by the adventitious conditions arising out of the European war, would have made itself invincible and would not to-day be confronted with the defeat which so surely awaits it. But with an obstinacy amounting to obsession they sought new and doubtful fields of taxation, always with unfavorable results, and the revenue legislation of the last three years is a constant record of successive failures, each one worse than that which preceded it. And the worst failure of all will be the measure now under discussion.

In view of these failures I have sometimes wondered why our versatile President has not changed his mind on this subject, as he has on almost every other since the ambition to be President took possession of him. And speaking of presidential changes of mind, I want to digress a little and read an editorial written several months ago by a gifted man, who is now dead, and which could be supplemented by reciting several other changes that have occurred since that time:

[Friday, Jan. 28, 1916.]

MR. WILSON'S CHANGE OF MIND.

In his letter to Chairman KITCHIN of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, explaining why he desires a tariff commission whereas previously he was in opposition to such an instrumentality, President Wilson makes these two statements:

"I have changed my mind because all the circumstances of the world have changed.

"I have had in this change of mind no thought whatever of a change of attitude toward the so-called protection question."

No doubt Mr. Wilson will be applauded by many both for having changed his mind and for having the courage to say so. There is nothing remarkable or essentially discreditable in changing one's mind. That is particularly the privilege of the great. "To change thy mind and to follow him that sets thee right is to be none the less the free agent that thou wast before." Hence there is no occasion for cavil at the President's course in this instance.

Mr. Wilson, however, by his changes of mind inevitably raises doubts in the public mind as to his sources of information, the processes of his reasoning, the maturity of his judgment, and the wisdom of his actions. When people find him on both sides of the same question within a comparatively short period, is there any more ground to apprehend that his second position represents the last word than there was to accept his first position as sound?

Mr. Wilson was elected on a platform which said:

"We favor the exemption from tolls of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the Panama Canal. Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign."

Yet, no sooner was Mr. Wilson President than he said to Congress: "I have changed my mind." And he induced that body to repeal the exemption clause in the canal act.

Mr. Wilson opened the last session of the Sixty-third Congress by declaring that new measures of national defense were unnecessary, and practically ridiculed all preparedness talk. A year later he opened the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress by saying, "I have changed my mind," and presenting a formidable program of defense.

At Philadelphia last May 10, speaking to newly naturalized citizens, the President said:

"There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as a nation being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right."

Yesterday, in New York, addressing 2,000 clergymen, Mr. Wilson, having changed his language if not his mind, said:

"I welcome the acceptance of a challenge to fight. I know that the best purpose will prevail. Peace does not mean inaction. There may be infinite—almost violent—activity."

Mr. Wilson told his audience at Indianapolis, January 8, 1915, that the Federal Trade Commission had authority to do what was then being urged for a tariff commission. He hinted that the "scientific" handling of the tariff, as proposed by some, would be "to put additional profits into the hands of those who are already getting the greater part of the profits." This he denounced as the "science of selfishness" and the "science of privilege." Now he writes, "I have changed my mind," and we must have a tariff commission wholly divorced from the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. Wilson wrote, on April 29, 1907, to A. H. Joline:

"Would that we could do something, at once dignified and effective, to knock Mr. Bryan once for all into a cocked hat."

But on March 4, 1913, President Wilson said, "I have changed my mind," and Mr. Bryan became Secretary of State.

Mr. Wilson, as President, addressing Congress early in his term, said:

"I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms and munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico. We can not be the partisans of any party to the contest that now distracts Mexico or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them."

Not much later on he protested, "I have changed my mind," and disregarded every feature of this implied pledge to Congress. He lifted the embargo on arms, he became a partisan of one faction, and he constituted himself "the virtual umpire" between rival parties in Mexico.

If the public is puzzled to know just when to follow the President, it is his own fault. He is equally positive in his position on identical problems before and after changing his mind. When he says, therefore, that he has "no thought whatever of a change of attitude toward the so-called protection question" let us not despair. For, after all, the reflection may not be on protection. That principle will endure whether Mr. Wilson changes his mind or not, and the chances are that he will be forced to recognize the necessity of protective measures before his term expires.

I recall still another incident of a most remarkable change of mind on the part of this distinguished gentleman which I can not refrain from alluding to. Some months ago the amiable and stalwart senior Senator from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES, went to New York to address a meeting of American citizens of Hungarian birth, and at the outset of his address he read the following telegram from President Wilson:

May I not send my warmest greetings to the meeting, and will you not express for me my very deep and sincere confidence in the entire loyalty and patriotism of the great body of our fellow citizens who have strengthened and enriched America by adding their energy to our own out of the nations which have joined their stocks to make a great America?

This telegram, like all the President's utterances, is happily phrased, and it reads like the language of a man whose heart is filled nigh to bursting with sympathy for these American citizens of Hungarian birth, every one of them having a vote which he hopes to secure; but I appeal from "Philip drunk to Philip sober," from Woodrow the President, candidate for the suffrages of all men of whatever sort, to Woodrow the historian and student, seated in the recesses of his library, his mind unclouded by ambitious visions, and his calm judgment unwarped by political aspirations. I have here a very interesting book. It is entitled "A History of the American People, by Woodrow Wilson, Ph. D., Litt. D., LL. D., President of Princeton University." It was published in 1902. I read from volume 5, page 212, of that work:

The census of 1890 showed the population of the country increased to 62,622,250, an addition of 12,466,467 within the decade. Immigrants poured steadily in as before, but with an alteration of stock which students of affairs marked with uneasiness. Throughout the century men of the sturdy stocks of the north of Europe had made up the main strain of foreign blood which was every year added to the vital working force of the country, or else men of the Latin-Gallic stocks of France and northern Italy; but now there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland, men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence; and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population, the men whose standards of life and of work were such as American workmen had never dreamed of hitherto. The people of the Pacific coast had clamored these many years against the admission of immigrants out of China, and in May, 1892, got at last what they wanted, a Federal statute which practically excluded from the United States all Chinese who had not already acquired the right of residence; and yet the Chinese were more to be desired as workmen if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

It will be seen, therefore, that in 1902 Dr. Wilson expressed in plain words his opinion that these "men of the meaner sort" out of Hungary were possessed neither of skill nor energy, and it would seem to be an enigma how in 1916 these men or their sons could "enrich America by adding their energy to our own" or "join their stocks to our own to make a great America." Is it not allowed to one to have some doubt as to which of these utterances expresses the real inside opinion of our changeable President about the sons of Hungary and Poland?

It is not my intention to discuss this bill at length. I will only allude briefly to one or two of its salient and most objectionable features. Let me premise by saying that I am not opposed to either the income tax or the inheritance tax. One of my earliest votes as a Senator was in favor of the constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to impose an income tax, but I have always held that this method of taxation should be reserved for emergencies, and if the income-tax features of this bill were intended merely to provide funds for the emergency arising from the preparedness program I would not withhold my support from it; but it is not so intended, and I can not support it. The trouble with this bill is that it aims to extort as large an amount of money as possible out of the pockets of as few people as possible. In that respect it is essentially unjust. It is not conceived in honesty of purpose. No party, I had almost said no government, can long endure whose legislation is based upon unjust principles or which aims to punish any one class of its citizens or to unduly favor any other. This bill goes to the limit in that respect. It aims to make a few people bear the entire expense of running the Government and to exempt at least nine-tenths of our citizenship from contributing anything. It is an injustice to those whom it aims to punish and an insult to those whom it aims to favor. I have said that no government can long endure whose legislation is based upon injustice. I will go further and say that no democracy, such as ours, can possibly endure unless its legislation is so framed that each one of its citizens shall contribute something to the funds necessary for its maintenance. Did you ever hear of a prosperous church where one or two of its rich members bore the entire expense of its maintenance? Such churches invariably fall into desuetude and decay. Why is it that clubs and labor organizations and mutual-benefit societies and secret societies are prosperous while many churches wane? It is because everyone connected with these different organizations carries his proper and legitimate share of the common burden, and feeling that he does so contribute his share, he takes a proportionate interest in its doings. So it is with our citizenship. The citizen who pays his way will take an interest in the affairs of his country and will be a better man and a better citizen for doing so. I am opposed to the proposed income-tax provision, because it deprives the greater part of our people who are able to do so from contributing some share toward the maintenance of our Government.

If I had the framing of an income-tax law, admitting it to be necessary, I would provide for the payment of a small income tax—say, 1 per cent—upon all incomes ranging from $1,000 to $4,000, and the only reason why I would exempt those lower than $1,000 is because it would cost more to collect these small sums than the returns would justify. Under this provision the man who has an income of $1,500 per year would contribute $5 and the man whose income is $4,000 a year would contribute $30 toward his country's support, and I do not believe that any one of these men would begrudge the money. The fact is that the average man does not object to paying taxes as long as he thinks the money will be wisely spent. And this leads me to another line of thought.

In pursuing this theory or this practice of compelling the few to bear the entire expense of government you are debasing the electorate and paving the way for unwarranted extravagance. If the average citizen is relieved from bearing any share in the expenses of government, he will be far less likely to scrutinize the acts of his representatives than he would be if he were asked to bear some part of the burden, no matter how small. Few men are proof against the temptation to favor large expenditures if they think that the money comes from some other man's pocket. They are not farsighted enough to perceive that, no matter who the direct taxpayer may be, the burden is eventually distributed upon the rank and file of the people. The effect, therefore, of this effort to collect the great bulk of our revenues from the smallest possible part of the voting population is to serve notice upon all those who are thus released from contribution that the burdens of government will hereafter be borne by others than themselves. It is a direct bid for their votes, and in its effect it is bribery just as clearly as if your campaign committee would openly start out to buy voters at so much per head. It was framed for that purpose, and it is intended to accomplish the same result. I have confidence enough in the inherent honesty of the great mass of our common people to believe that it will not accomplish the result which is so plainly intended.

Mr. President, this Government was founded upon a protest against taxation without representation. I now submit that representation without taxation is an evil to be avoided with equal diligence. If this bill now before us embodies any principle whatever, it is the principle of representation without taxation.

Let us now pass to that section of the bill which provides for a tax on inheritances, otherwise called death duties. I have no objection whatever to an inheritance tax as such, and if Congress were the only tax-levying power in the country, and our governmental system were not involved as it is by the conflicting interests arising from our State and municipal divisions, I would favor this provision.

One of the greatest evils of our day is the accumulation of great fortunes in few hands and the passing on of these fortunes, constantly accumulating, from one generation to another. I am, therefore, in favor of such legislation, progressive and cumulative, if necessary, as will render inconvenient, if not impossible, the constant increase of these great estates. But I believe that this method of taxation, wise enough in itself, is one from which the National Government should stand aloof and leave to be exercised by the several States. The great State which I represent has a collateral inheritance tax law which has been in operation for 90 years. It has not yet entered upon the domain of direct inheritance, but the constantly expanding needs of its people will soon compel it to do so, for our schools, our highways, our charities, and our other activities designed to increase the comfort and care for the welfare of our people are constantly crying out for more money, and the framers of our State constitution, in their wisdom, forbade the legislature to create any bonded indebtedness except in case of war or other emergency. The field of direct inheritances is the only one that is open to us, for we have taxed our corporations to the limit, and you are proposing to add to this by a double and in some cases treble tax upon such organizations under this proposed legislation. Other States, all others I may say, are in the same condition as Pennsylvania. Like the proverbial dog in the manger, while refusing to occupy fully the field of customs taxation, from which the States are debarred by the express provisions of the Constitution, you are invading all other fields through which the State governments can hope to obtain the funds necessary to sustain their legitimate activities. How can you defend such a course?

Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate to point out in detail the manifold crudities and inequities of this measure. Like the devils of Holy Writ, their name is legion. They swarm in every paragraph of the bill. They are inherent in its structure by reason of the fallacious theory upon which it is built, and the only way to drive them out would be through its entire reconstruction. That can not be expected at the hands of the present Congress. We can only hope that its life will be a short one and that the people in November will visit upon it and upon the party responsible for it the condemnation they so richly deserve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to change the numbers of sections.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire whether amendments to the inheritance tax are now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not to the House text.

Mr. THOMAS. Not at present? Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Mississippi, who has the bill in charge——

Mr. THOMAS. I have sent for the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that he would like to finish the income-tax portion of the bill, so far as the committee amendments are concerned, before proceeding with any other subject matter of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I presume that is so. The Senator from Mississippi will be here in just a moment. If the Senator has any amendments to suggest to the committee amendments, I think the Senator from Mississippi will be here by the time they are presented.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	James	Overman	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Phelan	Smoot
Cummins	Lane	Pittman	Sterling
Curtis	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Stone
Dillingham	Lewis	Ransdell	Thomas
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Thompson
Harding	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Underwood
Hardwick	Myers	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Nelson	Sherman	Warren
Hughes	O'Gorman	Simmons	Weeks
Husting	Oliver	Smith, Ga.	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The reading of the bill will be continued.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not this is the proper time to make the reservation, but I will make it notwithstanding. When the bill reaches the Senate I shall ask a separate vote on the new matter inserted from line 12 to line 17 on page 6, and other related amendments on the same general subject.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Title II—estate tax," on page 61, line 8, to change the number of the section from "100" to "27."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 1, to change the number of the section from "101" to "28," and in line 5, after the word "decedent," to insert "dying after the passage of this act," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 28. That a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax), equal to the following percentages of the value of the net estate, to be determined as provided in section 103, is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent, dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 15, after the numerals "$450,000," to strike out "and," so as to make the clause read:

Four per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 17, after the numerals "$450,000" to insert "and does not exceed $1,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Five per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 17, to insert:

Six per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 19, to insert:

Seven per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 21, to insert:

Eight per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 23, to insert:

Nine per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000; and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 63, to insert:

Ten per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $5,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 3, to change the number of the section from "102" to "29."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 9, after the word "expenses," to strike out "value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated. But no," and insert "of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate," so as to make the clause read:

(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 17, after the word "fair," to strike out "and adequate," and in line 21, before the word "years," to strike out "four" and insert "two," so as to make the clause read:

(b) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death, without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title; and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 17, to change the number of the section from "103" to "30"; in line 25, after the word "when," to insert "such losses are"; and on page 65, line 2, after the word "and," to insert the word "such," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 30. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, and such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 18, to change the number of the section from "104" to "31," and on page 66, line 5, after the words "from the," to insert "expiration of one year after the," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 31. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death. If the tax is paid before it is due a discount at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, calculated from the time payment is made to the date when the tax is due, shall be deducted. If the tax is not paid within 90 days after it is due interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the time of the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax, unless because of claims against the estate, necessary litigation, or other unavoidable delay the collector finds that the tax can not be determined, in which case the interest shall be at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the time of the decedent's death until the cause of such delay is removed, and thereafter at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. Litigation to defeat the payment of the tax shall not be deemed necessary litigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 10, to change the number of the section from "105" to "32," and in line 24, after the word "ascertainable," to strike out "If there is no net estate subject to the tax, no notice or return shall be required" and insert "and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 32. That the executor, within 30 days after qualifying as such or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by the regulations made under this title, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 103; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 103; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable, and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing adminstrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 17, to change the number of the section from "106" to "33."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 23, to change the number of the section from "107" to "34," and on page 68, line 14, after the word "fair," to strike out "and adequate," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 34. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector. If for any reason the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid the commissioner shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess. From the time of such notification to the time of the final payment of such excess part of the tax, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and the amount of such excess shall be a lien upon the entire gross estate, except such part thereof as may have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 21, to change the number of the section from "108" to "35," and on page 69, line 7, after the word "thereto," to insert "If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 35. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 60 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto. If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 20, to change the number of the section from "109" to "36."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 4, before the word "fair," to insert "a"; in the same line, after the word "fair," to strike out "and adequate"; in line 11, before the word "fair," to insert "a"; in the same line, after the word "fair," to strike out "and adequate"; and in line 15, after the word "fair," to strike out "and adequate," so as to make the clause read:

If the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) and if the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, the transferee or trustee shall be personally liable for such tax, and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 17, to change the number of the section from "110" to "37."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 8, to change the number of the section from "111" to "38."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 13, to change the number of the section from "112" to "39."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 17 on page 71.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the third title of the bill may go over until to-morrow. I have requested some information in regard to important features of that title, which I have not yet received, but which I expect some time between now and to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. I see no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Chair hear that there is any objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that agreement is entered into, on page 61, line 6, after the word "title," I wish to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following language:

Provided, That this section shall not conflict with that portion of section 10 of this title under which a taxpayer has fixed its own fiscal year.

In explanation I want to say that the Treasury Department brought to our attention that those corporations which have fixed their own fiscal year are in many instances making a return of the income for a portion of the year 1915 and will be doing so during the larger portion of the year 1916, and unless the amendment is inserted they might escape payment of the tax under the 2 per cent rate prescribed by the pending bill as to that portion of their income for 1916 embraced in their return for that fiscal year commencing back in 1915. The purpose of the provision on page 61 was to protect those taxpayers who had made return of incomes for the calendar year 1915 and paid taxes on the same against the payment of any further tax on those portions of their income which had accrued in 1915 and return made and tax paid on it, but which was not received until 1916.

I ask for the adoption of that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hearing no objection, the same is adopted. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] addressed the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado in reference to the third title of the bill going over, but there are some items in that title in which a number of Senators are interested who have been waiting here to vote on them. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he can not fix it so that it shall go over and be taken up at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS. As far as it is within my power to do it I will consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator to modify his request to that extent.

Mr. THOMAS. I will do that. I ask that the third title may go over until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Colorado is that Title III may go over until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before leaving the schedule of which I had charge there is another amendment which was adopted by the committee which I desire to have inserted. It comes in on page 50, after line 25. It was handed me as the chairman of the subcommittee. I ask that it be read and that it be adopted. It was sent here by the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 25, insert:

(d) That section 3225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3225. When a second assessment is made in case of any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, no tax collected under such assessment shall be recovered by any suit unless it is proved that the said list, statement, or return was not false nor fraudulent and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation; but the last clause of this section shall not apply to statements or returns made or to be made in good faith under the laws of the United States regarding annual depreciation of oil or gas wells, mines, and timberlands."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hearing no objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to address himself to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OLIVER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not clearly understand the amendment, and I suggest that it go over until to-morrow. I do not know that I shall have any objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator misunderstands the amendment. Upon the contrary, it will do just what I think he wishes to do in connection with oil and gas wells. Very frequently the return is a matter of estimate, and yet these people upon a mere estimate might be subjected to these serious penalties. So we provide that when the second return is made the penalties for an erroneous statement in the first shall not be visited upon them.

Mr. OLIVER. Except in cases of fraud.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. OLIVER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection having been withdrawn, the amendment is adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask if the request of the Senator from Colorado that the third title of the bill treating of munitions manufacturers, embracing the entire subject matter, shall go over until 11 o'clock to-morrow was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is my understanding. That was my request, that the entire title should go over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The entire subdivision.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair hear any objection? The Chair hearing none, it is agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the next title of the bill is Title IV, Miscellaneous taxes, on page 84. That title deals largely with wine taxes. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], who is a member of the subcommittee having charge of that title of the bill, will take charge of it for the purpose of amending it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, and most gladly welcomes the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, on page 84, line 10.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Title IV, Miscellaneous taxes," on page 84, line 11, to change the number of the section from "300" to "52."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 53. That wine within the meaning of this act as well as within the meaning of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 768), shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and commercially pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar to the must or to the wine; when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 35 per cent, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall also be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act and within the meaning of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, aforesaid, and may be labeled, transported, and sold under the unqualified name of "wine," or may be qualified by the name of its particular type or variety or locality where produced: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act, as well as within the meaning of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, aforesaid: Provided further, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment may be corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and commercially pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar to the must or to the wine in excess of 35 per cent of the volume, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation; such product, however, shall be labeled under the direction of the Department of Agriculture and shall be taxable at the same rate as other wines defined in this section.

All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed, and all executive officials whose duty it may be to execute or enforce the provisions of this section shall conform their regulations and directions to said provisions.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to offer a substitute on the part of the committee in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee insert the following:

SEC. 53. That natural wine within the meaning of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine, to correct natural deficiencies, when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 35 per cent, and the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act, and may be labeled, transported, and sold as "wine," qualified by the name of the locality where produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act: Provided further, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment may be corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine in excess of 35 per cent of the volume, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation; such product, however, shall be designated as "ameliorated wine" and labeled so as to show the extent of amelioration and shall be taxable at the same rate as other wines defined in this section.

All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed, and all executive officials whose duty it may be to execute or enforce the provisions of this section shall conform their regulations and directions to said provisions.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have just heard the reading of the amendment as a substitute by the Senator in charge of the wine schedule of the revenue bill. I should like to have read a letter which I understand was received by the Finance Committee from the Secretary of Agriculture on last Saturday. I have just sent to the Finance Committee for it. I have not had an opportunity to read it, and I should like to see its contents. I am sure that it will be illuminating to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator request that the Secretary read the letter?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, August 26, 1916.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SIMMONS: On August 21, 1916, the department communicated to you its views regarding the amendment to section 53 of H. R. 16763, "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes." Since that letter was transmitted the department's attention has been called to the amendment (copy inclosed) intended to be proposed by Senator PHELAN to H. R. 16763, and the following statement is made regarding it for the information of the committee.

The part of the amendment in which this department is especially interested is that part beginning on page 2, line 3, which is aimed at section 53 of the act as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment, it is believed, is intended to accomplish the same objects as the amendment suggested by the department, but the department regards it as doubtful whether Senator PHELAN'S amendment makes a clear distinction between pure wines and those which are modified by water. Further, the language used in specifying the standard of purity for sugar which may be used in modifying wines seems to be somewhat ambiguous. The department regards it as desirable that the standard of purity for sugar which may be used shall be specified, and incloses a revision of the amendment submitted with its letter of August 21, 1916, in which a standard of purity for sugar used in modifying wines is specified. If this amendment as revised is adopted, section 53 in the opinion of the department will be not open to objection under the Federal food and drugs act.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment differs in some details from the amendment suggested by the department. For example, it provides that when a sugar solution is added the resultant product shall not contain less than six parts per mill of natural free acid, whereas the limit suggested by the department is five parts per thousand. It is not regarded as material for the purposes of the food and drugs act, whether the limit of natural free acid in modified wines is fixed at five or six parts per thousand.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment contains certain provisions which are not included in the amendment suggested by the department. It limits the amount of sweetening which may be used in fortified wines to 10 per cent and prescribes that the fortification of wines authorized in the section shall be permitted only on premises where said wines are made. Your attention is invited to the fact that section 43 in section 54 of H. R. 16753, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance, page 92, limits the amount of sugar which can be added for sweetening purposes to 11 per cent and provides, further, that the addition of water shall be under regulations and limitations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is not regarded as being material for the purposes of the food and drugs act whether the amount of sweetening which may be added to fortified wines is limited to 10 or to 11 per cent, and it is understood that the Secretary of the Treasury has already informed your committee of his views with reference to limiting the fortification of the wines to the premises where they are made.

Very truly, yours, C. F. MARVIN,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the date of that letter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. August 26, 1916.

Mr. PHELAN. I have incorporated in the RECORD a letter from the Department of Agriculture, dated August 21, 1916, in which an amendment was inclosed. It was published in the proceedings of the Senate last Wednesday, August 23. I do not quite understand, having heard for the first time this letter, whether the criticism affects the amendment which was submitted by the department itself or an amendment which I had the honor to submit July 31, 1916. There is evidently some confusion. Can the Chair inform me to what amendment the Secretary addressed himself in the communication just read? He referred to an inclosure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that the reference in the letter is apparently to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from California submitted two amendments; one on July 31 and one, which is recommended by the department, on August 23.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, perhaps I can enlighten the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey for enlightenment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I will state that whatever may have been the attitude of the department toward the Senate committee amendment to the House bill with reference to this particular title, a different situation is presented with reference to the substitute which, by authority of the Finance Committee, I have offered. I understand that the Agricultural Department had decided objection to the amendment as proposed and as printed in the pending bill, for the reason that it seemed to interfere with the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department so far as the definition of wine was concerned and the labeling of wine and the administration of the pure food and drugs act. However, I took the matter up with the Pure Food and Drugs Division or Bureau, or whatever its technical name and title may be, of the Department of Agriculture, and submitted to them the language of this substitute. They informed me that so far as their bureau was concerned, and so far as the administration of the pure food and drugs act was concerned, they had no objection to the language. So any letter which may have been written by the Secretary of Agriculture based upon that department's objections to the language which was proposed some time ago, and which has been abandoned, could hardly be pertinent to this discussion, I will suggest to the Senator from California. Unless some Senator desires an explanation of this rather intricate subject, I move the adoption of the substitute which I have offered for the committee amendment. I am, however, perfectly willing to go on and explain it, if any Senator desires an explanation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey, now in charge of this bill, who in the Agricultural Department informed him that the department would have no objection to the terms of his substitute?

Mr. HUGHES. In the first place, I did not say that nobody in the department had any objection to all the provisions of the proposed substitute. I do not know whether or not the department have any objection, for they did not pretend to pass upon the merits of the proposition at all. I simply said that, so far as the administration of the pure food and drugs act was concerned, which is something with which they are charged, there was nothing in this act to prevent them from administering the law and that there was nothing in the language that was offensive to that act.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whom he is quoting now?

Mr. HUGHES. I have tried to recall the technical designation of the officer in charge of that bureau, but it has slipped my mind. The bureau, however, is the one, as I understand, which promulgates the decisions and is made up of the board of experts who pass upon the purity of foods, drugs, and beverages.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the Bureau of Standards, I will say to the Senator, where all those tests are made.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Utah does not pretend to say that the Bureau of Standards has indorsed this substitute?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. PHELAN. Nor that it has any knowledge of the substitute?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah knows nothing about that. I do not want the Senator to think that I made that statement in a captious way or in opposition to what the Senator is saying. I simply stated that it was the Bureau of Standards that made the tests. I made that statement in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to state to the Senator that I am credibly informed that the Agricultural Department does not approve of the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, if the Senator from California desires, we can have the letter again read. The first time I ever heard of the letter from the Department of Agriculture was when it was read from the desk this afternoon. As I gathered, it was to the effect that the language now proposed by the Finance Committee of the Senate with reference to this title was satisfactory to that department. That was my understanding of the letter of Secretary Houston which was read from the desk.

Mr. PHELAN. I have no such understanding of the letter. I thought that it discusses an amendment that had been proposed by me on the 23d day of August. I can not believe that the department would approve of the substitute, because it takes the jurisdiction out of its hands and opens the door to a violation of the pure-food law. As it is of considerable importance, and is not understood, I think the letter should again be read. Probably it would facilitate business to have the letter again read, because the Senator from New Jersey states, which I seriously doubt, that in some way it gives approval to his substitute.

Mr. President, there is a reference made to an amendment, and the Secretary has just informed me that the amendment referred to is the amendment offered by me on August 23, and is the very amendment, in the identical language, sent to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on August 21 as an inclosure in the letter from Secretary Houston on that date for the information of the committee. Listening to the correspondence just now, it appeared to me that the Secretary was amending his own amendment. That is my present understanding, but I may be wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the Senator from California if it will serve the object of his desires to have the Secretary reread the letter and then read the amendment to which it alludes?

Mr. PHELAN. I shall be much pleased to have that done, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such course will be taken.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, August 26, 1916.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SIMMONS: On August 21, 1916, the department communicated to you its views regarding the amendment to section 53 of H. R. 16763, "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes." Since that letter was transmitted the department's attention has been called to the amendment (copy inclosed) intended to be proposed by Senator PHELAN to H. R. 16763, and the following statement is made regarding it for the information of the committee.

The part of the amendment in which this department is especially interested is that part beginning on page 2, line 3, which is aimed at section 53 of the act as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment, it is believed, is intended to accomplish the same objects as the amendment suggested by the department, but the department regards it as doubtful whether Senator PHELAN'S amendment makes a clear distinction between pure wines and those which are modified by water. Further, the language used in specifying the standard of purity for sugar which may be used in modifying wines seems to be somewhat ambiguous. The department regards it as desirable that the standard of purity for sugar which may be used shall be specified and incloses a revision of the amendment submitted with its letter of August 21, 1916, in which a standard of purity for sugar used in modifying wines is specified. If this amendment, as revised, is adopted, section 53, in the opinion of the department, will be not open to objection under the Federal food and drugs act.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment differs in some details from the amendment suggested by the department; for example, it provides that when a sugar solution is added the resultant product shall not contain less than six parts per mill of natural free acid, whereas the limit suggested by the department is five parts per thousand. It is not regarded as material, for the purposes of the food and drugs act, whether the limit of natural free acid in modified wines is fixed at five or six parts per thousand.

Senator PHELAN'S amendment contains certain provisions which are not included in the amendment suggested by the department. It limits the amount of sweetening which may be used in fortified wines to 10 per cent and prescribes that the fortification of wines authorized in the section shall be permitted only on premises where said wines are made. Your attention is invited to the fact that section 43 in section 54 of H. R. 16763, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance, page 92, limits the amount of sugar which can be added for sweetening purposes to 11 per cent, and provides further that the addition of water shall be under regulations and limitations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is not regarded as being material for the purposes of the food and drugs act whether the amount of sweetening which may be added to fortified wines is limited to 10 or to 11 per cent, and it is understood that the Secretary of the Treasury has already informed your committee of his views with reference to limiting the fortification of the wines to the premises where they are made.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. MARVIN,
Acting Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The amendment inclosed is as follows:

SEC. 53. That wine for the purpose of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition, under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper gauger in the capacity of gauger, and subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a solution of water and 95 per cent pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar to the must or to the wine in amounts necessary to correct natural defects; when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 25 per cent, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acids before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall also be deemed to be wine for the purposes of this act: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with 95 per cent pure cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified shall be considered sweet wine for the purposes of this act: And provided further, That no product included within this section shall be labeled, transported, or sold under any name, statement, design, or device which is false or misleading in any particular.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the matter is perfectly clear now. The confusion grew out of the fact that I submitted a similar amendment to the one just read on July 31, and the Secretary of Agriculture discusses that amendment, objecting to certain features. I withdraw that amendment, and shall not submit it to the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not understand to what amendment the Senator refers.

Mr. PHELAN. It is the amendment which I offered on July 31, 1916, which can be identified by observing that the language "six parts per mill" instead of "five parts per mill" is used. The Secretary refers to that in his discussion of the matter. But the amendment which he recommends is the amendment which was submitted by him to the Finance Committee August 21, and it is practically the amendment which I submitted two days later, on August 23. The amendment that I now submit, therefore, is the amendment which the Secretary in his communication of August 21 submitted to the Finance Committee as one that would be acceptable to the Agricultural Department, with the exception——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. Let me finish this sentence, please. With this one exception, that originally when the amendment referred to sugar, it used the words "commercially pure sugar," and now the expression "95 per cent pure sugar" has been substituted, and which I accept. It is the amendment of the department which I have adopted as my amendment, and which I now submit to the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, would the Senator from California object to having the substitute offered by me acted upon by the Senate, and then let him seek to amend it in any particular he desires? I think it will help everybody to understand the situation if he permits the substitute, which I have offered for the amendment reported by the committee, to be adopted. Then the only question remaining, I think, will be the question of figures. The Senator wants 25, whereas we have 35. I think that is what the Senator wants, is it not?

Mr. PHELAN. Since talking to the Senator from New Jersey in private conversation I have observed matters which are objectionable in his substitute. I am not learned in parliamentary procedure, but I can not, without objection, allow the Senator's substitute to be ingrafted on the revenue bill without first pointing out its defects; and I think it would be more parliamentary first to submit my amendment to the Senate, and then, if that amendment shall be rejected, the Senate can take up and consider the amendment offered as a substitute. I think that is the correct parliamentary procedure, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon. His attention was diverted for a moment.

Mr. PHELAN. The question is one of parliamentary procedure. The Senator in charge of the bill offers a substitute to section 53 and I offer a substitute for the substitute. Is it in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that a substitute for a substitute is not in order. The Chair is of the opinion that under general parliamentary law it would not be in order, but the Chair is not advised whether the rules of the Senate are to the contrary. The Chair understands that under ordinary parliamentary procedure the amendment would not be in order except by voting upon the substitute of the Senator from New Jersey. Then the amendment which the Senator from California desires to offer could be offered as a formal amendment to the substitute previous to a vote upon it.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I offer the amendment as an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, as I had intended to offer it as an amendment to section 53 as originally recommended by the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Will not the Senator's rights be protected by permitting the adoption of the substitute offered by me and then permitting the Senator to offer such amendment as he desires to take the place of the substitute after it is adopted?

Mr. PHELAN. That is a matter, I presume, as to which Senators may judge for themselves. If in order, I offer my amendment as an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely desire to say to the Senator that the proper course to pursue would be to offer his substitute as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. That would bring the question before the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES. I have offered a substitute, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I read the bill, the part in italics is not a substitute for anything in the bill. It is a committee amendment pure and simple, an amendment to a provision of the Revised Statutes, so that it is not a substitute in the ordinary sense, but an amendment to the bill, and that, of course, is amendable. There is no question about that.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I am indifferent as to how the Chair may rule or what the parliamentary status is, so long as the record is kept straight. The committee recommended the amendment which I have prepared and which, by the committee's authority, I offer as a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Substitute for what?

Mr. HUGHES. For the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know that.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that the committee has offered a substitute for section 53 as reported by the committee and in the printed copy of the revenue bill. I offer an amendment in order to have a hearing precedent to action on the substitute so offered, and the Chair has ruled that the amendment is in order. Am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so rules. Under general parliamentary law the amendment of the Senator from California is in order unless there is a rule of the Senate, of which the Chair is not advised, against it. The Chair may say to the Senator from California, who himself has been a presiding officer of some repute, that the Chair understands that an amendment in the third degree would not be entertained; but the Chair is informed that the Senator from California tenders a motion which is really in the second degree, because the matter now tendered by the committee supplants and supersedes the original matter, which, therefore, can not be said to be an amendment of any nature. Therefore the Chair would hold, unless there is a rule of the Senate to the contrary, that the amendment of the Senator from California is now to be considered.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I believe it will simplify matters very much, and be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from California in the discussion of the matter, if we should first adopt the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey in charge of this portion of the bill, and then the Senator from California could offer his amendment and deliver his address on the amendment which he desires to present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels compelled to say to the able Senator from Idaho that if the Senate once agrees to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey the Chair feels that the Chair can not entertain an amendment to it. The Chair must rule that the amendment of the Senator from California can be received at this time, and upon that the issue is now raised.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from California stated. The Senator said he was about to offer an amendment. Will the Senator have it stated?

Mr. PHELAN. I offer the amendment as submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture in his own language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the substitute to section 53 offered by the committee, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 53. That wine for the purposes of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition, under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger and subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a solution of water and 95 per cent pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar, to the must or to the wine in amounts necessary to correct natural defects; when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 25 per cent, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more han 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall also be deemed to be wine for the purposes of this act: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with 95 per cent pure cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified shall be considered sweet wine for the purposes of this act: And provided further. That no product included within this section shall be labeled, transported, or sold under any name, statement, design, or device which is false or misleading in any particular.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am not unaware of the fact that the subject of wine is a strange one to the Members of this body. I refer to wine in its scientific sense. I would not for a moment say that the Senate is not informed of wine and its uses, because a distinguished Senator from California, Senator McDougall, in other years, delivered an address to the Senate on that subject in which he praised the virtues of wine, and it is still regarded as a classic. If I may digress for a moment, he said that he was reproved by a minister of the Gospel for singing the virtues of wine, and he retorted by asking the minister what was the first miracle wrought by the Master. The minister replied that he did not know. Senator McDougall inquired of him if it was not the conversion of water into wine at the marriage feast at Cana of Galilee. The minister replied that he thought it was. Then Senator McDougall asked the minister what was the first act done by Father Noah when he came out of the ark? The minister replied he could not recollect, when the Senator asked, "Did he not plant the vine?" The minister said, "Yes; I believe that is true, but I can not afford to admit it." It was then that McDougall retorted: "One can not reach into the higher regions of thought, into the empyrean of fancy, on Boston pork and baked beans; he must drink wine on high Olympus and mighty mead in Valhalla." Whatever may be the temperance sentiment of this body or throughout the country, it is, nevertheless, true that from ancient times pure wine has not been used for the mere purpose of exhilaration and of gratifying one's appetite, but it has been used for the purpose of nourishment, as a food; and the Agricultural Department has held that wine made of the pure juice of the grape is a food, is a nourishing article. It is on that theory that the pure-food laws have been enacted; that certain articles of diet have been held to be food, and that it is essential to the public health, in the first instance, that there be a standard of purity, and that, in the second instance, without any reference whatever to the deleterious character of such articles, the public should be informed as to the contents of the container.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say there had been a decision rendered somewhere to the effect that wine is a food?

Mr. PHELAN. I think that, under the decisions of the Agricultural Department, wine is regarded as a food.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to see those decisions, and I presume the Senator can point me to them. I think it is quite a stretch of the imagination to call wine a food. There was a long controversy about beer being a food but science decided otherwise.

Mr. PHELAN. I think I am quite correct that the Agricultural Department would have no jurisdiction over this commodity were it not held as a preliminary that it was a food, because the laws of Congress as they stand to-day refer to pure foods and drugs, and certainly wine is not a drug.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, it comes nearer being a drug than a food.

Mr. PHELAN. I am here to see that it is not drugged. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if his State is not the land of hard cider?

Mr. GALLINGER. We have hard cider in New Hampshire and a great many other things, but I do not see the pertinency of the question.

Mr. PHELAN. Knowing that cider is made from apples and that apples are food, I judge that hard cider is probably also a food.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, prussic acid is made from the kernel of peaches. Peaches are a food, but prussic acid is not a food.

Mr. PHELAN. I suppose, then, I must distinguish between the kernel and the peach.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. It goes without saying that in Latin Europe and among a very considerable population in all the States who are of Latin extraction wine is used as a daily food, as a substitute for tea and coffee, and probably wine is more wholesome than tea or coffee, and certainly more nourishing. That is one of the evils of which we complain—that this legislation, not only in the matters affecting the operation of the pure-food laws but the revenue laws, tends in one case to give an inferior quality of food to the people and in the other to put it beyond their reach by reason of excessive taxation.

In my State, in all the country districts and in the great cities, wine is used as a food; and I may say in passing, as a harmless illustration of the way in which excessive taxation is evaded, that people of Latin extraction in San Francisco have brought grapes from the country and made wine out of them in the city, for their family use—something to which they were accustomed for a hundred years. I am not justifying, of course, that evasion of the law, but that has actually come to pass in California, where people buying their few grapes make their own wine—an item not large enough to concern the Treasury Department, but indeed large enough for them to consider, in view of the fact that their means are very scanty.

What I desire to impress upon the Senate, without going into any detail, is simply this: Ninety per cent of all the wine made in the United States is made in California; and yet I declare that it is not because of local considerations that I speak so much as my general desire, in common with yourselves, to uphold the pure-food law. Opposed to California are the representatives of two States, Ohio and Missouri, where there are not more than 17,000 acres of grape lands under cultivation, as against 350,000 in California; so the interest of California is overwhelming. It is one of the great industries of the State, in which no less than $150,000,000 are invested.

If this substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey permits not only the adulteration of the juice of the grape but permits practically its unlimited stretching, so that by the addition of sugar and water indefinitely you can get a great volume of wine, you see that it will destroy those who are engaged in making pure wine out of the juice of the grape, and who by favor of nature are not required to resort to adulterants, or to stretching, or to the addition of sugar or water. So any discrimination in favor of adulteration would be legislation against the sunshine; it would be an attempt, destructive of the comity of States, to take away a natural advantage which is enjoyed upon the western coast.

I might state, in order that it may be perfectly clear to the Senators, that the difference between Ohio and Missouri grapes and California grapes is simply this, due in no measure to the fault of the Ohioans, that the grapes which are principally used in Ohio and Missouri, by reason of climatic conditions, do not mature; they do not attain the necessary percentage of sugar, which is determined by the saccharimeter, which must record 22 degrees of sweetness in order to justify the presence of 11 or 12 per cent of alcohol; and so, those wines being very high in acid and very low in sugar, it is necessary for them, to have a palatable article at all, to add sugar and water. For a long time they were not allowed to use sugar and water. Under the emergency-tax bill of a year and a half ago they were allowed to bring about 10 per cent increase in volume by the addition of sugar. This measure proposes a change in the law so that they shall increase the volume of this acid wine, first, by 35 per cent, and again, as an addition, 35 per cent more, which will enable them to convert a ton of grapes, which in California yields 180 gallons, to a volume of 1,000 or 1,200 gallons; and then the necessity will be upon them, in order to give it the appearance and taste of wine—at any rate, the temptation will be very great—to add some coloring matter to it. I do not say that is their intention or their practice, but I say this: That if by law, against the recommendation of the Agricultural Department, this practically unlimited stretching of wine is permitted in Ohio and in Missouri, then the Californians, out of self-defense, will have to take their pure wine, made by natural processes, in order to meet competition of that kind, and stretch it indefinitely; so that it will become a competition of stretching wine instead of catering to the people who demand wholesome wines and pure wines.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. How much do the Californians stretch their sweet wine now?

Mr. PHELAN. I am not aware that they stretch it at all, except by the addition of brandy.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator certainly understands that under the law of 1890 they are permitted to add 10 per cent of water.

Mr. PHELAN. Ten per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. And there are some other things added afterwards also.

Mr. PHELAN. I am very glad to be informed by the Senator that they were permitted, under the law of 1890, to add 10 per cent. It is a privilege, however, of which, as I understand, there is no necessity for them to avail themselves, because California wines confessedly are rich in sugar, whereas these other wines to which I refer are deficient in sugar; and while they may have, in order to give uniformity to the law, the privilege of stretching 10 per cent, there is no necessity for them to do it.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the bill offered as a substitute by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] in order briefly to substantiate what I say:

Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine, to correct natural deficiencies, when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 35 per cent—

Remember our present law is 11 per cent—and the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act, and may be labeled, transported, and sold as "wine," qualified by the name of the locality where produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety.

Complaint is made in the Agricultural Department's report of such wines being called Burgundy, which certainly would mislead the purchaser. This seeks to give the force and authority of law to the evil of wine which is increased 35 per cent by the addition of sugar and water so that it shall be legally called wine and shall be sold as wine, qualified by the name of the locality in which it produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety.

And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that "wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar," and so forth, "and * * * shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act." There is no limitation in that section to the volume to which such sweet wine may be stretched.

Provided further, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment may be corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis)—

That is, sugar 95 per cent pure—

to the must or to the wine in excess of 35 per cent of the volume—

Here is an addition unknown to any previous practice, absolutely repugnant to the Agricultural Department, of taking this product after it has been stretched 35 per cent and increasing it again 35 per cent in volume.

so that the resultant product does not contain less than 5 parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation.

And there is another vice in establishing a new standard of wines based upon acid content.

Such product, however, shall be designated as "ameliorated wine"—

I particularly call the attention of the Senators to this clause:

Such product, however, shall be designated as "ameliorated wine" and labeled so as to show the extent of amelioration and shall be taxable at the same rate as other wines defined in this section.

I saw this amendment but a few moments ago, but not too recently to enable me to consult the dictionary, because "amelioration" seemed to me a word seductive in sound, and designed to create an impression of betterment and improvement. Nor was I deceived in my first impression; for, by consulting the Standard Dictionary, I find the following:

Ameliorate:

1. To make better or more endurable; relieve, as from pain or hardship; mitigate permanently; meliorate; as, to ameliorate the condition of the poor.

That possibly may be a justification for the use of the term "ameliorated wine"—to ameliorate the condition of the poor—poor wine.

2. To make more suitable, desirable, or valuable; improve in quality; as, a sterile soil ameliorated by fertilizers; to ameliorate live stock by careful breeding.

To grow better; become less severe; improve.

Of course, after they have made their first quality, expanding its volume 35 per cent, I am not complaining about that so much, because in my amendment we have allowed, under proper safeguards and under the authority of the Department of Agriculture, 25 per cent expansion by the addition of sugar and water, and that because their grapes are naturally deficient, and there is no disposition on the part of the 90 per cent of the wine growers of the entire country to interfere in any way with the modification of the wine to the extent of 25 per cent, and that because otherwise it would not be marketable. There is no antagonistic feeling whatever; but, adding to the recommendation of the Agricultural Department, they have put 10 per cent more and made it 35, and on top of that they have added 35 per cent more, making the only condition that it shall be designated "ameliorated wine." But I have shown you, by the Standard Dictionary, that "amelioration" means bettering, whereas under this process it would be making it inferior. Is not that a fraud on the public?

I will not say that it should be called "sophisticated wine." The word "sophisticate" is always used in this connection, but it is opprobious, I confess, because we are told by the same authority, the Standard Dictionary, that "sophisticate" means—

To alter or amend, as a text or passage, to an unauthorized or deceptive meaning, especially in support of one's own opinions.

To make impure by admixture; adulterate; as, to sophisticate wine; render artificial.

I would not, even if I were disposed to have my own way in a matter of this kind, say that the Ohio and Missouri wine should be called "sophisticated wine," and yet in commerce and colloquially it is called "sophisticated." It might be called, as it is called now, "imitation wine." That tells very clearly the character of the contents of the bottle—that it is not wine having the essential elements in their fixed proportions, but it is something else. It is an imitation wine, and possibly may be very palatable, but it is not wine—it is not food. But you call it, as in this substitute, "ameliorated wine," adding insult to injury, and instead of giving the public information it is manifestly misleading the public, because everybody knows that to ameliorate is to better and to improve.

Then the final five lines of the substitute read as follows:

All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed, and all executive officials—

The Agricultural Department, of course—whose duty it may be to execute or enforce the provisions of this section shall conform their regulations and directions to said provisions.

The Agricultural Department will thus be paralyzed.

In other words, those lines repeal the pure-food law as it now exists with reference to wine, and for these reasons I have offered an amendment. It is not my amendment. I will not presume to tell the Senate what is required by the pure-food laws, what should be the standard of wine. I will not say that it is as difficult for me to understand as it is for you, because I have grown up in a wine-making State, but I know that it is, to a certain extent, mystifying. What I do urge upon the Senate is that in the case where you have no knowledge at first-hand, you turn for your definition of wine, not to the wine makers of a small section, where grapes do not mature, but to the highest authority in the Government, having no interest to serve but the common weal. Therefore, the amendment I submit as an amendment to the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey is in its very language identical with the amendment recommended to the Finance Committee by the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter received last Saturday, and I trust it shall be adopted.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senate is particularly interested in this perennial contest between the extreme West and the balance of the country with reference to what shall constitute wine or how the Department of Agriculture or the internal-revenue forces shall conduct themselves with reference to these two opposing camps. All I do know is that, on October 14, 1914, when this proposition was up before, after a great many conferences, after an endless number of hearings, and after a great amount of testimony had been taken, every single interest in the United States engaged in the wine business entered into a signed agreement calling upon the Congress to enact the law which we are now attempting to enact.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to go any further than to say that for years the State of California has had an advantage over the balance of the country in the matter of making wine not altogether due to the climatic conditions, I will say, because wine was being made in this country before California was admitted to the Union, and men were making wine which was asserted by those who, perhaps, are in position to speak with authority to be better wine than California has ever made or is now making—certainly wine that sells at a higher price.

California boasts that she makes 90 per cent of all the wine that is made in the United States. That is probably true; and if California is permitted to have her way she will not only make 90 per cent but she will make 100 per cent of the wine that is made in the United States. If she continues to obtain legislative advantages, or is permitted to retain the legislative advantages that she has had in the past and that she is now claiming, there can be no question in the mind of anybody but that she will make 100 per cent of the wine that is made in the United States. Yet the fact remains that there are only 17,000 people in the State of California engaged in this industry, while there are more than 800,000 people engaged in it in other parts of the United States.

I do not suppose there exists on our statutes such an instance of legislative discrimination in favor of one section of the country and against another as can be shown by the manner in which this Government has dealt with California and the other States of the Union. For years they have been permitted to fortify their wines with grape brandy in name—alcohol in substance. The wine maker from any other section of the United States who habitually, because of the very nature of things and because of the nature of the surroundings, fortified his wine with tax-paid alcohol, paid $1.10 per gallon into the Treasury of the United States, whereas these gentlemen were permitted to escape with a tax of 3 cents per gallon. That was the extent of the discrimination that this Government made in favor of that particular industry.

Is it any wonder that these gentlemen are in a position to boast that they grow 90 per cent of the grapes and make 90 per cent of the wine used in the United States? Every other part of the country has paid and to-day pays $1.10 by way of tax for every gallon of the spirits that enters into its fortified wine. Every bottle of sweet wine pays that tax into the coffers of the United States Government before it can go upon the market; and under the proposed legislation these eastern wine makers will continue to pay $1.10 on every gallon of spirits that goes to fortify their sweet wine. But they are not satisfied with this advantage that they have had in the past nor with the advantage which we propose to permit them to have in the future—because there is no attempt on the part of anybody to restore the parity between the wine growers east of the Rocky Mountains and the California wine growers by compelling them both to pay $1.10 a gallon. It is only suggested in this bill that they pay 55 cents a gallon in California and $1.10 everywhere else. It is only suggested in this bill that we put into effect a signed agreement which these gentlemen made. It is only suggested in this bill that we do what they told us would satisfy every wine maker in the United States, and particularly the wine makers of California. These gentlemen are not satisfied with that, however. They want now to come across the Rocky Mountains and prescribe for wine making east of the Rocky Mountains conditions which the men who are making wine in that section can not meet. In other words, they are attempting by legislation and by Agricultural Department definitions and decisions to destroy the remnants of this industry which they have been enabled to beat to the ground because of legislative discriminations in their favor.

I was a member of the subcommittee that had this matter up before. I was a member of the subcommittee that had it up this time. We do not claim that we are doing absolute and abstract justice between these two sections of the country. If we did that, we would say to the Californians that for every gallon of spirits they used to fortify their sweet wines they should pay $1.10 into the Treasury of the United States. We would say to these other gentlemen that they should continue to pay $1.10 for every gallon of spirits that they used to fortify their wine. So far as this proposed legislation is concerned, we leave California still with that advantage.

As I said, we do not pretend that we are asking you to do absolute and abstract justice to California. They make the claim that to do that would be to destroy the industry; and there may be something in that claim. An industry that is hothoused and legislated into existence can be legislated out of existence. It may be that there are more people growing grapes in California, it may be that there are more people making wine in California than would be consistent with just legislation on that subject. But we who have investigated it take the word of the Californians themselves in 1914, their signed statement, their obligation, their contract with us, that if we would write this proposition into the law it would be just and satisfactory to them, and they would stand by it.

Mr. PHELAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. I have in my hand that agreement, which composes the principal part of the report of the Committee on Finance of this body, dated October 14, 1914, and signed on behalf of California by Theodore A. Bell, the attorney of the California Grape Protective Association—whatever that is——

Mr. HUGHES. The vice chairman, is he not?

Mr. PHELAN. He signs as vice president of the California Grape Protective Association. As a matter of fact he was acting in behalf of his client, the California Wine Association, which is a large corporation which purchases the grapes and the wine from the small growers and has a contract with them by which if the Government imposes a tax of 10 per cent on the grape brandy used in fortification, the contract running over a period of 8 or 10 years, would be void, and by bringing back this 55 cents tax a year and a half ago to his clients they immediately served notice upon the men holding the contracts which they believed to be valid, and had no knowledge of that clause; and the industry was utterly destroyed, because the corporation was the only purchaser.

Furthermore the corporation had on storage vast quantities of wine on which they had paid the 3 cents tax. So by making a temporary tax of 55 cents, as they expected for one year, there would be an enormous enhancement in value of the wine they held in storage.

But I did not wish to speak of that. I merely want to submit that at the time that agreement was made the contemplated emergency-tax law of a year and a half ago provided for stretching 11 per cent, and if there was any validity in the agreement to which Mr. Bell signed his name it could not be urged now in defense of the proposition to extend the stretching from 11 per cent to 35 per cent plus 35 per cent.

The conditions are absolutely and totally dissimilar. Even a contract if it were binding, even an expression of opinion based upon other facts, would have no weight whatever.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, I do not want to comment upon the Senator's estimate of Mr. Bell. He appeared before us bearing the very strongest and most unimpeachable credentials. I never heard his integrity attacked until Californians kicked over this agreement and came back here in an endeavor to enact legislation which would absolutely give them not only 90 per cent, but, as I said a while ago, 100 per cent of the wine industry, because it is admitted that the wine makers of the other part of the country can not operate under the legislation.

There is another interesting bit of history with reference to what the Senator said about the belief on the part of the Californians that the 55 per cent was going to be temporary. I believe they did think it was going to be temporary; and before the measure was enacted they took advantage of the old 3-cent tax to fortify their wine. The result was that instead of a revenue promised the Government the Government was duped by the Californians out of some million dollars. They come back here now and use that argument as a reason why they should be given an additional advantage. I will only say that for cheek, for absolute impudence, I have never in all my legislative career come across anything like that which was displayed by the Californians with reference to these taxes.

It is admitted that the tax was laid in such a way, the administrative features were of such a character, that they were able to evade and escape that tax, and with the fact that they paid no tax they come in here now and urge as a reason the tax is so high the industry has been destroyed; that the Government gets no money from it; and in the next breath they ask us to change the administrative provision because they say that under the law as contained in the last act the tax was not collected. The tax we laid was to be paid by the last consumers. There is testimony in these hearings of the Californians themselves to the effect that those stamps were used over and over again until they became threadbare and worn and tattered, and they come back to us and say, "You did not collect any tax at 55 cents; you get more out of 10 than 55, because you laid it at 55, and this was all you got." Everybody knows they themselves admit they evaded the payment of the tax.

Mr. PHELAN. Of course, there is no admission of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES. There is a statement; I do not know whether——

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to have the Senator inform us whether the amendment, as he started out to say, has the approval of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I will say to the Senator that I submitted this amendment to the experts of the Pure Food and Drug Division—I think that is the technical title of the division. I submitted it to them myself, and I went over it with them, and they said it met all the requirements of the department.

Mr. PHELAN. I must ask the Senator to name some one to whom he spoke. I want the official authority. We have here, addressed to the chairman of your own committee, a letter contradicting what you say and submitting an amendment. Is the Secretary of Agriculture to be ruled over by a subordinate? Who is this man?

Mr. HUGHES. There is no difference between the letters. I have heard the letters read.

Mr. PHELAN. There is absolutely an irreconcilable difference.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Was the letter the Senator had read a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. PHELAN. It was read from the desk just now.

Mr. STONE. I asked if it was from the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. PHELAN. The Chair can inform the Senator by whom the letter was signed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it was signed by the Acting Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, it was, as I recollect, signed by the Acting Secretary. There is another letter in existence, which the Senator, I think, was inquiring for; but it was written with reference to proposed legislation which is not now proposed. When I made these changes I submitted that I had no desire to trench upon the privileges or the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department, and I took the pains and went to the trouble of submitting this proposed language to that department, and they suggested some changes. They provided, for instance, that instead of permitting wine to be sweetened with commercially pure dextrose sugar, the figures "95 per cent" should be inserted, which was entirely satisfactory to me, and it was done.

So far as I know, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, the Agricultural Department is perfectly satisfied with this amendment, because under its terms and provisions, while wine may be ameliorated, or while the excessive acidity may be corrected to the extent of adding 35 per cent of sugar and water, the wine in being labeled is qualified by the locality of its production, which is satisfactory to the department, because time out of mind everybody who knows anything about wine knows that Ohio wine and eastern wine and wine of that description must, under certain circumstances, be treated with water and sugar in order to correct the acidity of the grape.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if these are not the facts. The committee had tentatively agreed upon an amendment to the wine feature of the bill which it was contended by the Agricultural Department, I think, conflicted in some way with the provisions of the pure-food law.

Mr. HUGHES. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. The committee received a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture to that effect. We had no desire or purpose in any way to conflict with the provisions of that act. The Senator from New Jersey, who was on the subcommittee in charge of that title of the bill, was requested on behalf of the committee to confer with the Secretary of the Agricultural Department with a view to conforming our amendment to the provisions of the pure-food law. In pursuance of that, we did advise with them and did prepare and present to the committee an amendment which seemed to have or which we thought had the approval of the Agricultural Department, so far as this question was concerned.

Mr. HUGHES. That is correct.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if he is in a position to state that the substitute which is now offered by the Senator from New Jersey has the approval of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am only in a position to state that, in so far as I am advised by the Senator from New Jersey, who, as the representative of the committee, conferred with the department on that subject, the substitute did meet the approval of the department.

Mr. PHELAN. I have challenged that position taken by the Senator from New Jersey. I do not think I need go any further than refer to the letter received by the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Finance Committee, and read to this body to-day, that the Agricultural Department has recommended an amendment which I have introduced as my amendment, although it is not my amendment; it is their amendment, and only in the interest of pure food. I will not digress to discuss the rates.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PHELAN. I am talking about pure food.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator. The Senator is now talking about an amendment which the Agricultural Department sent up to the Senate. We were not conferring with the Agricultural Department with a view to finding out what sort of a law the Agricultural Department desired us to enact. That was a matter which we thought was within our jurisdiction and not within the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department. The only question which we submitted to the Agricultural Department, the only question which we recognized the Agricultural Department had any right to dictate about, was the question whether the amendment suggested by us conflicted with the pure-food law and to ask them to advise us how it could be re-formed so as to comply with the pure-food law. We did not ask them for their opinion as to what sort of a bill we should pass dealing with the wine question. We only asked them to help us make it conform to the pure-food law. I understand the letter the Senator is referring to from the Agricultural Department is one in which they suggested to us the legislation which, in their opinion, would be proper.

Mr. PHELAN. The chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from New Jersey, by his own confession, brings his substitute to the Agricultural Department for its indorsement.

Mr. SIMMONS. For a specific purpose.

Mr. PHELAN. Whereupon the Agricultural Department addressed a letter to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Carolina, which was read to the Senate to-day, and in which the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey is wholly and absolutely ignored. I can not understand any better way of condemning a thing than by ignoring it, and nowadays it is more polite to ignore than to attack.

In the same communication he submits an amendment which he says is in conformity with the pure-food law and has the indorsement of the department. Where a question of ignorance concerning the subject of wine in its scientific sense is involved I think we should follow the views of the department. They can not be far wrong. It allows 25 per cent stretching, not indefinite stretching; but I think it would be a fraud on the public to allow anything to be stretched and added to such an enormous extent in the volume as contemplated by the substitute.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from California seems to be altogether confused about this matter, and inasmuch if I do not do something I am afraid I will be in as bad a condition as he has arrived at, I will try to demonstrate to him exactly what did happen in reference to my amendment, his amendment, the other letter, and the present letter. The department writes as follows:

> August 21, 1916, the department communicated its views regarding a certain amendment—

That was the amendment proposed by the committee and printed in the bill. The letter goes on—> to which the Department of Agriculture took exception.

Strong exceptions. It goes on and says:

> Since that letter was transmitted, the department's attention has been called to an amendment, a copy of which is inclosed, intended to be proposed by Senator PHELAN.

Then it goes on and points out how Senator PHELAN's amendment is wrong.

Mr. PHELAN. I must protest. I have explained, I think, to the satisfaction of others that the amendment referred to there was presented by me July 21 and has been withdrawn by me. That amendment was criticized by the department. Now, in order to meet every objection I have accepted the amendment the department submitted, and the amendment before the body now is the amendment of the department. So the Senator is simply adding to the confusion by failing to recall what I simply explained some time ago, that the amendment which the department criticized in that communication has been withdrawn.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, of course, that explains why the department wrote this letter. The department did not know the Senator had withdrawn his amendment and the department was fearful that the Senate in its ignorance might pass the amendment. I am very glad the Senator now understands the situation, and I sincerely hope that the balance of the Senate understands the situation. If they do they will know that the committee having given all the thought and consideration it was capable of to this question, after having heard every interest that was represented from one coast to the other, after hearing their statements given with all the solemnity of a statement given under oath in a court room, after having taken their sworn statements as to what legislation they could exist under, suggested this legislation with the single exception that we have ventured to give to the eastern wine makers the right to call their product wine even though it shall have been ameliorated to the extent of 35 per cent of pure water and pure sugar added to the grape juice or must, before or during fermentation. Everybody who appeared before that committee, even the Californians, said these gentlemen should be permitted to add 25 per cent. These gentlemen said they should be permitted to add 50 per cent. We came to the conclusion that they were entitled to add 35 per cent. We came to that conclusion after having read what the authorities all over the world said. It was admitted everywhere, as far as I have been able to discover, that under certain climatic conditions and in certain cases a greater amount should be added to the grapes to correct the acidity. The Californians are not handicapped in that way because their grapes have sugar and water. It is an insipid, sickly grape which has to have alcohol put in before it can reach the product that grows east of the Rocky Mountains. Anyway, without having consumed either of the products and having confined my investigation simply to what other gentlemen said about it, we came to the conclusion that we were doing as near absolute justice as possible by proposing this legislation, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have discussed this question several times, but in view of certain statements which have been made, I feel that I owe it to those who may be engaged in the wine business east of the Rocky Mountains to present their views.

The so-called California sweet-wine law was passed in 1890. It was so drawn that no one outside of California could get the privilege of using grape brandy or wine spirits free of tax. Later a nominal charge of 3 cents per gallon was added by the Congress to cover the expense of inspection. Meanwhile in the East those who manufactured sweet wines paid $1.10 a gallon for the grape brandy or neutral spirits which they might use, while the Californians paid 3 cents per gallon. Of course they grew rich; of course these great interests combined and formed the California Wine Association and other great combinations. If I am properly advised, several of the largest associations now in California occupy the same offices in the same building, and, I am told, fill their orders out of the same casks in part.

After this discrimination in favor of California wine was discovered, and after they have practically driven a great many of the eastern wine producers out of business, we are confronted with the marvelous statement, "You are so small in the East and we are so great in the West that the little Lilliputian should not be permitted to interfere with this great Brobdingnagian."

Mr. President, as was said this afternoon by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], there was an adjustment here about two years ago by the terms of which a tax of 55 cents per gallon was placed upon grape brandy. That was an emergency measure, and it was to expire by its own limitations on December 31 of the following year. What I should like to have, what the eastern and Ohio wine producer would like to have, for the sake of the Government, that needs revenue, is that this tax, instead of being 55 cents a gallon, should be $1.10 a gallon.

I have never heard anyone who could explain the justice of charging a California wine producer 3 cents a gallon tax upon his grape brandy and charging a housekeeper, who uses a little of it in her cooking, $1.10 a gallon tax. I have never heard anyone who could defend that save and except the California wine producer.

Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is very much interested in the pure-food provisions of this bill, and he refers to the fact that it is an awful thing to add water and sugar to grape juice, and yet the very law under which they have operated since 1890, and under which they have the benefit of free grape brandy, authorized them to add water to their grape juice, amounting to 10 per cent of the volume. It is the essence of good morals to permit them to do that. They can even add tartaric acid, because their grapes are often deficient in acid. They see nothing wrong in that, but when the eastern wine growers seek permission to neutralize the excessive acidity of their wine by adding sugar and water solution it straightaway becomes an offense.

Now, let us examine the situation a little further. This matter is not new. During the administration of President Taft, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture had long and full hearings upon this subject. Then they issued pure-food decision No. 120—I regret I do not have it with me—by which it was recognized as proper to add water and sugar; in other words, sugar solution, to grape juice in the East for the purpose of counteracting the effect of the acid. When that was done it was to be labeled, for instance, "Missouri wine" or "Ohio wine," as the case might be. I think that decision from the standpoint of pure food was a little lame, in that it did not place a limitation upon the amount of water and sugar which could be added.

Then comes along the present Secretary of Agriculture, and he has a number of hearings; he issues this decision No. 156. I want to pay my respects for a moment to that decision. Bear in mind that while the Agricultural Department recognizes the right of Californians to add 10 per cent of water to their grape juice; that while the three members of President Taft's Cabinet issued order No. 120 permitting it; that while, according to a statement issued by the department very recently, the use of water and sugar in the Eastern grape juice had been practiced since 1836 and was everywhere recognized as proper, the Secretary of Agriculture issues order 156, setting aside order 120, which had been promulgated by three of the Secretaries, and it has never yet been explained how he had authority to so do—and he issues order 156. Now note the order:

As a result of investigations carried on by this department and of the evidence submitted at a public hearing given on November 5, 1913, the Department of Agriculture has concluded that gross deceptions have been practiced under food-inspection decision 120. The department has also concluded that the definition of wine in food-inspection decision 109 should be modified—

I shall not read all of that.

Food-inspection decisions 109 and 120 are, therefore, hereby abrogated, and, as a guide for the officials of this department in enforcing the food and drugs act, wine is defined to be the product of the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of fresh, sound, ripe grapes, with the usual cellar treatment.

To correct the natural defects above mentioned the following addition to musts or wines are permitted:

Now, I want Senators who do me the honor to listen to me to notice that, while this department protests against the use of water, it allows some sugar; but this order goes on:

In the case of excessive acidity, neutralizing agents which do not render wine injurious to health, such as neutral potassium tartrate or calcium carbonate:

In the case of deficient acidity, tartaric acid;

In the case of deficiency in saccharin matter, condensed grape must or a pure dry sugar may be used.

So that we have the Agricultural Department saying that it is an adulteration, that it is offensive to the rules of health to add water to wine, but that you can add potassium tartrate and calcium carbonate. The wine producers say these chemicals give to the wine a soapy taste, to such extent that those who like it in its ordinary state will not drink it, and, I assume, would rather have California wine than the eastern wine with a soapy taste.

Now, let me go a little further with this proposition. While this letter from which I read bears the signature of the Secretary of Agriculture, I submit that, in my judgment, without knowing what the facts are, it was written by some one else. Please remember when this decision was issued it became wrong thereafter to use water; but note what he said in this letter, which was written to Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, under date of June 26, 1916:

The department sees no reason to doubt the statement that the amelioration of wine with sugar or water has been practiced to a greater or less extent since 1836 in Ohio and Missouri.

But after the year of our Lord 1914 it becomes adulteration to add water to grape juice!

Then he adds:

There is no doubt, however, that such use of sugar and water has been subject to great abuse and has not been limited to the bounds established by varying climatic conditions. This abuse of the addition of water represents, in fact, the crux of the entire situation, inasmuch as it results in lowering the standard of wines other than fortified sweet wines, thus working a hardship to the producer of pure wines, as well as being confusing and misleading to the purchaser in case such diluted wines are sold under the simple designation "wine," without any explanatory statement showing the presence of water. The addition of water and sugar to fortified sweet wines is, as you doubtless are aware, subject to limitation under the terms of existing statutes, and food inspection decision does not, therefore, apply to such wines.

He recognizes the fact that water may be added when it comes to sweet wine. He does not say that it is wrong to add water, but he says the privilege of adding water and sugar has been abused; in other words, because it has been abused by some wine producers he says, "You shall not have the privilege of adding water at all"—on a parity with the philosophy of the man who, if he knew there was a rat in his barn, would burn down the barn in order to get the rat.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator, if he will permit me, has done an injustice to the Secretary of Agriculture, who states, in the matter just quoted, that the statute allows the watering of wine to a certain extent, and therefore his regulation did not apply to it.

Mr. POMERENE. I read that portion of the letter. The Secretary goes on further in this letter, or perhaps in some other letter, to say that the statute does not authorize us to permit the use of water, but no one from that department has ever suggested to Congress that that statute should be changed so as to permit the use of water.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again, the Secretary says "the addition of water and sugar"——

Mr. POMERENE. I have read what the Secretary says.

Mr. PHELAN. "To fortified sweet wine is, as you are doubtless aware, subject to limitation under the terms of existing statutes."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I object to this interruption. I expressly made a statement that it was permitted when it comes to the making of the sweet wine alone.

Now, Mr. President, we have this further situation: They use the same process known as gallizing wine in Germany, and with the grapes they have, with their peculiar degree of acidity, they allow the addition of 25 per cent in volume by way of amelioration, and under our law now we can import German wines thus ameliorated by 25 per cent of sugar and water, and this foreign product can be sold in this country, while under decision 156, if water is added to domestic wine, it can not be sold here.

I do not want to question the good faith of anyone, but if this man Husmann—and I hope he is in the gallery here to hear what I say—had been hired and paid by the California interests for the purpose of doing everything he could for them, and for the purpose of ruining the wine trade everywhere else, he could not have served their purpose better. Yet we have a great industry in the States of New Jersey, New York, Virginia, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Kentucky subject to the sweet whims of this bureaucrat!

Mr. President, this awful thing of using water has had the attention of another man by the name of Husmann, who happens to be the father of this wine man down here in the department. I have here a book written by him, under the title "American Grape Growing and Wine Making, by George Husmann," and on page 168 he discusses our grapes in this country, and he says:

> If we closely examine the musts of most of our American grapes, we find that they not only contain an excess of acids in inferior seasons, but even a greater superabundance of flavor or aroma and of tannin and coloring matter. There is such an abundance of flavor in many of them that were the quantity doubled—

Please note this language—

> There is such an abundance of flavor in many of them that were the quantity doubled by addition of sugar and water there would still be an abundance. With some varieties, such as Concord and Ives, if fermented on the husks, it is so strongly foxy as to be disagreeable; and as the pulp of them is very tough and slippery they can not be pressed clean without fermentation.
> We must, therefore, not only ameliorate the acid, but also the flavor and astringency, of which the tannin contained in the stems is the principal cause. Therefore it is even more important to us than to European wine makers to gain the knowledge to gallize our wines properly—

That is, to add sugar solution—

> By proper management we can change must, which would otherwise make a disagreeable wine, into one in which everything is in its right proportion, and which will thus suit a customer, to whose fastidious taste it would otherwise be repugnant. True, our grapes will ripen better here, so that we can, in most seasons, produce a wine without a great excess of acids, but the American taste requires a less acid wine, anyway, and we must dilute the aroma to make our wines salable. Here another difficulty presents itself. The riper a grape is the more of its peculiar aroma will it develop, and if we would let our Concords hang until they are so ripe that the acid has been reduced to the proper proportion, the aroma becomes so strong that it is very repugnant to a refined taste.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to read further upon that subject; but, now, observe: When it comes to the amount of amelioration, the department, in the course of two years have said, first, that you shall add no water; secondly, they say you may add 25 per cent, and it is perfectly proper. Now, it becomes and awful crime, in the minds of our California friends, if we ask to add the 35 per cent which would seem necessary at some sensons in some localities. While under the authority of Mr. Husmann, the father of the Government wine expert, in many cases the quantity ought to be doubled by the addition of water and sugar.

I agree with the Senators, I agree with the department, that if there is an unusual amount—as in the suggestion made by the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Jersey—or more than 35 per cent, it should be marked as "ameliorated wine," and it should bear upon the container the percentage of water and sugar which has been added to it. That is not going to deceive anybody.

The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has suggested several times that when this emergency law was passed it ruined the grape growers in California, it ruined the wine business—a business that had received rebates from this Government from the year 1890 down to 1914 of over $70,000,000. During the year 1913 the revenue which we received at 3 cents per gallon from the sweet-wine industry amounted to $145,586.21. If it had paid $1.10 per gallon the Government would have received from it $5,338,150.42. This rebate of $5,338,000 went to just 113 producers, all of whom, save 20, were in the State of California, and one of them received an amount between six and seven hundred thousand dollars. I have the exact figures here, but I will not take the time to refer to them.

Mr. President, an agreement was made, as the Senator from New Jersey has stated, after weeks of discussion and negotiations, and signed by the different wine producers, among them Mr. Bell as the attorney for the California Wine Association, who was here; and with him were others who came to see me and said they were farmers from California. Every one seemingly went away happy, save those in the East, who insisted all the while that a tax of $1.10 should be charged, instead of the 55 cents. For the last five months Senators and Congressmen have been told by the representatives of the California wine interests that this emergency law was a failure as a revenue producer, that it has ruined their business, and therefore it should be repealed, and we should give California again a lower rate of taxation. These facts are very interesting, indeed, if they be facts:

> Oh, what a tangled web we weave
> When first we practice to deceive.

Let us see what this situation is. Bear in mind, now, that the emergency measure was approved by the President October 22, 1914. Please bear that date in mind. The bill had been in process of formation here for several months.

During the month of September, when they got their grape brandy at 3 cents a gallon, they used various amounts, smaller in the earlier part of the vintage season, larger in the latter part of the season. On September 1 they used 8,156.6 gallons. On September 30 they used 111,545.6 gallons. On October 1, at 3 cents a gallon, they used 124,180.5 gallons. On October 21, the day before this law was approved, they used 31,310.6 gallons. On the day it was approved, on October 22, they drew from the bonded warehouses 255,672.7 gallons. They got it at 3 cents a gallon. On October 23 the new rate of 55 cents per gallon went into effect. They were interested in giving revenues to the Government! Then, on October 23, the amount which they withdrew from the bonded warehouses when they had to pay 55 cents a gallon was only 4,085.1 gallons; on October 24, 1,041.9 gallons. And after trying to beat the Government in this way, they come here now and say to us that the law is a failure as a revenue producer!

More than that, remember this: At the time this law went into effect the wine producers of California had between thirty and forty million gallons of sweet wine in their cellars fortified with 3-cent brandy. Then what did they do? After coming here and making this agreement to pay a tax of 55 cents a gallon upon the grape brandy they go back to these farmers with whom they had contracts agreeing to pay a given amount for their grapes, and they call these dear farmers' attention to the fact that in their contract was a forfeiture clause which left to them the privilege of canceling the contract if the tax should ever be raised above 10 cents a gallon; and now we are confronted with the statement that it is this legislation which is oppressing the farmer! It is the cupidity of your California wine interests that is crucifying the farmer, if anyone is.

Mr. President, the figures I gave are from a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD as an addendum to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 26, 1916.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, and in response inclose herewith a statement prepared from the records of this department showing the quantity of brandy or wine spirits used, daily, in the fortification of sweet wines in the California districts during the months of August, September, October, and November, 1914.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator if it is not true, notwithstanding these criticisms of eastern wines as compared with California wines, that in the markets of this country the eastern wines command a very considerably higher price than the California wines?

Mr. POMERENE. I have been so informed by a number of people who are very familiar with this subject, and I have never heard it denied.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what inference he draws from that?

Mr. POMERENE. The inference is that this wine that you say is made in violation of the pure-food laws, which you love so much, is better than any of the concoctions you have in California.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator's zeal carries him away from the important fact, which I am sure he himself will recognize, that California is singularly well adapted for the production of wine, and it is hardly fair to call it a concoction. But I desire to say that the only reason, if indeed it be true, that this eastern wine sells for a better price is because it is made in the center of great populations. We have 100,000,000 people in this country. There are only 3,000,000 in California, and we produce 90 per cent of all the wine made in the United States. We must market that great volume of wine, and naturally the 10 per cent, if sold at all, would sell at a good price in a dense population, and——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thought I was yielding for a question, not for a speech. I have heard this same encomium upon California wines before, and it is nothing new to me. I decline to yield for that statement now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I can not set the Senator right.

Mr. POMERENE. Ah, Mr. President, if I were wrong, much as I love the Senator from California, I am sure I would not go to him for accurate knowledge upon the wine proposition. He has been misled by the California Wine Association.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I object seriously to being misled by the California Wine Association——

Mr. POMERENE. I do, too.

Mr. PHELAN. Which is a nefarious monopoly. I am condemning it here myself. The representative was Mr. Bell. The Senator does not mean the California Wine Association.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, if we could look behind the farmers who are being held up between the devil and the fire, we would find they are being held there by the California Wine Association.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator, then, reiterates that I am here in the interest of the California Wine Association?

Mr. POMERENE. Not consciously. I would not question the good faith of the Senator personally. In whatever I say, I want to make disclaimer of anything of that sort.

Mr. PHELAN. Then the Senator states it merely out of his imagination?

Mr. POMERENE. I state it as a matter of belief, knowing this matter, and the manipulation that has been going on in the city of Washington on behalf of these California wine people for years.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as a matter of privilege I must object to the Senator making reckless statements. He not only involves his colleague, but he involves Mr. Husmann here, to whom the Secretary refers in his letter of August 14.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if this is to be a defense of Mr. Husmann, I will look after that later on.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I will refer exclusively to myself. The California Wine Association is a monopoly. Its president is a personal friend of mine, a Mr. Pillsbury, who is also the chief attorney of the Standard Oil Co. Anybody with any knowledge of California must realize that monopoly representing either wine or oil has no particular place in my heart, and I have been in a position of antagonism to all monopolies. I verily believe that the California Wine Association——

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. I ask leave to make this statement as a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. POMERENE. I insist that I have the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. I rise to a question of personal privilege, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. POMERENE. I insist that I have the floor, and I will yield for a question, but nothing more now.

Mr. PHELAN. I am not asking the leave of the Senator, because I am speaking to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will have that opportunity after I have yielded the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. The Chair has recognized me for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield even for that purpose. The Chair supposes the Senator has that right.

Mr. PHELAN. I will reserve in my own time, then, the privilege of replying.

Mr. POMERENE. I have very clearly said that in no sense of the word do I mean to reflect, directly or indirectly, upon the honor or the integrity or the good faith of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules provide that if a Senator rises to a question of high privilege he is entitled to the floor; and if the Senator from California puts it on that ground——

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator has made the amende, and I will not insist, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in this subject except the interest that I feel in an industry——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will my friend yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I have taken no part in this debate, and do not intend to, except that I should like to make at this time a statement which is pertinent in connection with what the Senator from Ohio has said.

First, the assertion that only 10 per cent of the wine produced in the United States is made outside of California I deny. A considerably larger amount is made outside of California.

Secondly—I press this thought upon the Senators—that this very question of controversy between California grape growers and wine makers and the grape growers and wine makers east of the Rocky Mountains is an old question that has been before the Congress for 20 years or more. Two subcommittees of the Finance Committee have had this matter in charge since 1914 and during the present session. In 1914 there were exhaustive examinations running through several weeks. Full hearings were had and all interested appeared, and a report was made which was crystallized into the statute. It ought to have been made absolutely permanent at the time, but it was not. It was approved by all the interests represented, as the Senator from Ohio said. Twice now this matter has been the subject in the last two years of investigation, and the same conclusion has been reached.

Thirdly, and I am through. I put the State of Ohio beside the State of California. There are more people interested in wine growing in California than in Ohio, it is true. It has been said there are 17,000 interested in this industry in California. There are only several thousand in Ohio. But it has been agreed twice by the Finance Committee and by the last Congress that if the policy proposed by the Senator from California should be agreed to it would destroy the industry in Ohio. That was the opinion of those who investigated it. You can put these two States side by side and say whether you want to destroy a great industry in Ohio by giving an undue advantage to the same industry in California.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his suggestion. There are just one or two more thoughts that I want to submit to the Senate. The first is this: It is urged against this increased tax on grape brandy or wine spirits that it will destroy the industry. Does not every Senator know that when any tax, particularly an internal-revenue tax, is put upon any product of consumption that tax is passed on to the consumer?

We have $1.10 per gallon tax on whisky; a dollar and a half, I believe, on beer per barrel. Does anyone now contend that the tax on whisky ruins the production of rye or corn, or that the tax upon beer will ruin the industry of barley or hop growing? It does not when it is passed on to the consumer, and he always pays.

I am only interested, so far as the wine producers are concerned, in having some legislation here that will do equal and exact justice to all of them. I am not here pleading for any favoritism. As long as the law permits the making of wine and beer and whisky they ought to be taxed, and they are recognized everywhere as a proper subject for taxation, except that here in the United States for some years we have permitted the making of sweet wines under the sweet-wine law with 24 per cent of pure alcohol, or one-half, almost, the strength of whisky, and require the wine producers to pay only 3 cents per gallon for the brandy or wine spirits used in its fortification.

My thought is that if we were to try to treat these subjects of taxation properly we ought to tax them all according to their alcohol content.

I wish I could persuade my good friend from California, in the interest of the Treasury, to increase this 55 cents per gallon to $1.10 per gallon. It will not hurt the farmers. If they will just get ready to take care of the wine producers, their industry will not be injured; all will be able to live and to thrive.

Let me tell the Senator another fact, and I will then conclude. In the investigations which I made on this subject a couple of years ago, at that time in California they were making the cheaper grades of pure sweet wines fortified until they had nearly 24 per cent of pure alcohol, or 48 per cent of proof alcohol, making them one-half the strength of whisky, which is 100 proof when it is taxed at the rate of $1.10 a gallon. Several years ago they sold the cheaper grades of this wine free on board cars in California as low as 15 cents a gallon. This wine was bought by patent medicine men. They bought it for less than the tax on the wine if it had been charged at the rate of $1.10 per gallon on the grape brandy or wine spirits contained in it. I am speaking of the low grades of wine.

Mr. President, I admit the fact, as I am told, that when the California wine producers were increasing the alcoholic content of their wine some of the people in the East began to make wines to which they added more water than they should; in other words, they were stretching; they were increasing the quantity of the wine, while the Californians were increasing the alcoholic content of their wine.

Mr. President, this so-called stretching of wine in the East was stopped, not through pure-food decisions alone but in my own State by our State legislature. I join hands with anyone who wants to make and to enforce pure-food laws of the proper kind. I have little confidence in the judgment of the man who says it is adulteration to add water and sugar to wine, but permits the use of calcium carbonate or potassium tartrate as neutralizing agents. Such regulations can only serve to bring pure-food laws in disrepute.

Mr. President, I trust that the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey will be adopted. I think it should be. I think it will serve to place these different industries in the different sections of the country in a position where they can both live and thrive. There is not any reason why one should attempt to ruin the other. If in California they have the superior climate, the superior soil, the superior grape, when they are protected from without by a tariff of 45 to 60 cents a gallon against the importations of wine, and a duty, I believe, of 25 cents per cubic foot or thereabouts against the importation of grapes, I do not know any reason why they should now by legislation attempt to differentiate between the East and the West and place the eastern wine producer at a disadvantage.

After the Californians have received, through the sweet-wine law of 1890, rebates aggregating over $70,000,000, this legislative favoritism ought to stop. It did not go to the farmer. It was not intended for him. It was intended for the wine producer, and he got it.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate affects the definition of wine and puts a limitation of 25 per cent of its volume upon the stretching of wine. The Senator from Ohio has discussed other questions far afield and to which I desire to reply. When the question before the Senate relates to the fixing of rates I am going to move to substitute the House rates for the Senate committee's recommendation, and it will be time enough then to reply to his remarks.

If a vote is to be taken upon this amendment to-night, I should think it would be wise to limit the discussion to the subject before us, and for that purpose I will simply state now that the amendment which I propose to the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey is the amendment recommended by the Agricultural Department permitting the stretching of wine 25 per cent. It is now 11 per cent by law. In every way it meets the expectations and the wishes of the wine men of the entire country, not only of California but of New York, New Jersey, and Virginia. The only dissentients are those in Ohio and in Missouri, who were represented before the committee by Attorney Lannen, representing interests which have been in trouble for adulterating goods, like the mixed flour, and who, with Attorneys Stark and Cooke, representing whisky and wine sophisticators, are bent by the spirit of resentment or revenge to damage the California wine industry for its resistance to such practices.

I can see no other purpose, because this amendment allows them all that they might reasonably expect, the privilege of stretching their product 25 per cent by the addition of sugar and water, something which California concedes to them by way of compromise, which has been proved in this very amendment before the Senate indorsed by the Agricultural Department; but they ask the privilege of unlimited stretching and to call that product "ameliorated" wine. In their proposal their first product is known as wine, 35 per cent. Their next product, according to this substitute, 35 per cent more, is known as "ameliorated" wine. I am simply pleading now, without reference to what the Senator has said about finances and revenue, for the upholding of the pure-food regulations recommended by the Department of Agriculture. Can not Senators who are not familiar with the subject safely vote with the Department of Agriculture in guarding the public interests? That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. PHELAN. I must suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Lane	Pittman	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Lewis	Ransdell	Smoot
Cummins	McCumber	Saulsbury	Stone
Fletcher	McLean	Shafroth	Swanson
Harding	Oliver	Sheppard	Underwood
Hitchcock	Overman	Sherman	Weeks
Hughes	Penrose	Simmons
Jones	Phelan	Smith, Ariz.

During the calling of the roll,

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent that the roll call be dispensed with, in order that I may move that the Senate take a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from New Jersey that the roll call can not be suspended, it having been once begun.

After the roll call had been concluded,

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does the Chair hold that the roll call can not by unanimous consent be dispensed with?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the roll call, having once been begun, it can not be suspended.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent now——

Mr. SMOOT. Let the announcement be made. The announcement has first to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the only motion in order is a motion to adjourn, as the Chair understands, the call of the Senate having disclosed that no quorum is present.

Mr. HUGHES. The announcement as to the number present has not been made.

Mr. WARREN. There are a number of Senators present who have not answered to their names as yet.

Mr. HUGHES. The announcement as to the Senators present has not as yet been made, and it does not appear by the record that no quorum is present. I ask unanimous consent now that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. OLIVER. I insist on the roll call being completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BORAH, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before that motion is put——

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Before that motion is put I should like to inquire——

Mr. CHILTON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WARREN. Let us have the result of the roll call announced.

Mr. BRADY. I desire to be recorded as present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho will be so recorded.

Mr. CHILTON. I withdraw my motion for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there a standing order of the Senate to the effect that the Senate shall meet at 10 o'clock a. m.?

Mr. SMOOT. There is a standing order that, unless otherwise ordered, the Senate shall meet at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, with that understanding, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., Monday, August 28, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 29, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 29, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with whom are all the issues of human life, we lift our hearts to Thee for Thy guidance and blessing as we face the solemn responsibilities of another day in this place of great influence and power. We pray that we may justify the influence and power of this Senate by conformity in all our acts, even in the thoughts of our hearts, to the will of God, remembering that it is righteousness that exalteth a nation. As we conform our policies to the divine will we can insure the stability and permanency of our institutions and the blessings of God upon our Government. Guide us as we walk over the uncharted paths of this day, and bring us to its close with a satisfaction of having done the will of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Jones	Penrose	Smoot
Bryan	Kenyon	Phelan	Sterling
Culberson	Lane	Pomerene	Stone
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Taggart
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Thomas
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. COLT, Mr. JAMES, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. SHERMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire whether the second roll call has been completed and no quorum has been developed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. One more Senator will complete the quorum.

Mr. HARDING entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, August 21, 1916, when, on request by Mr. MYERS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 537).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury calling attention to estimates transmitted by the Treasury Department on the 9th instant to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board, created under the act of July 17, 1916, for the fiscal year 1917, $100,000, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

J. L. DE ROSA ESTATE (INC.) (S. DOC. NO. 539).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to a copy of private act No. 83, Sixty-fourth Congress, for the relief of the J. L. de Rosa Estate (Inc.), of Elk Grove, Cal., approved August 7, 1916, and stating that the act does not provide an appropriation for the payment of the same, and that an appropriation of $1,158 will be necessary therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 538).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims amounting to $44,663.46, which have been presented to the Treasury Department to require an appropriation for their payment, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SCHEDULES OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 536).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of claims amounting to $166,473.75 allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 55 of the act of June 20, 1874, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a large number of telegrams, letters, and memorials from various citizens and corporations in Arkansas protesting against certain provisions in the pending revenue bill affecting insurance, and especially protesting against that feature which imposes a stamp tax on insurance premiums, and so forth. Most of these communications are identical in language. Among those signing these protests are:

I ask that one of these communications be printed in the RECORD and that all be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The telegrams, etc., were referred to the Committee on Finance, and one was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

HELENA, ARK., August 24, 1916.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.:

I believe amendment to Federal revenue act relieving all corporations of stamp tax, except insurance companies, to be unfair discrimination against such corporations, and I respectfully urge you to use your influence in seeing that insurance companies are fairly treated.

F. F. KITCHEN.

Mr. ROBINSON. I present a letter in the nature of a memorial from the People's Building and Loan Association, of Little Rock, Ark., relative to the exemption of building and loan associations from tax by the pending revenue bill. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEOPLE'S BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION,
Little Rock, Ark., August 24, 1916.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is pending in the Senate a revenue bill which, I am informed, originally imposed a tax of 50 cents per thousand on the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of all corporations, but which was later amended so as to exempt all mutual building and loan associations, which are now exempt under section 11 of the income-tax law. Unfortunately, however, while it was evidently the intention of Congress to exempt mutual building and loan associations from the income-tax law, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue construed the language of this act differently, and held that building and loan associations are subject to some of its provisions.

I think the law should specifically exempt all mutual building and loan associations, for the reason that perhaps 90 per cent of the stockholders in mutual building and loan associations are wage earners who are practicing thrift and economy in saving small sums each month with which to acquire homes. If this is true in all sections of the country as is the case in Little Rock, where we have a large number of building and loan associations, I am sure that it is not the intention of Congress to impose the tax upon this class of people, and for this reason I trust you can see the injustice of taxing the building and loan associations, as you know any tax imposed has to be paid by the stockholders, and that you will endeavor to see that the mutual associations are exempt in such language as can not be misconstrued by the Revenue Department.

We have in our association alone something like 2,000 stockholders saving monthly sums from $1 to $20, and in the interests of these people I earnestly hope that you will be able to see that the building and loan associations are not taxed.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Yours, very truly,

J. H. HOLLIS, Secretary.

Mr. STERLING. I send to the desk several telegrams from citizens of my State relative to the tax on insurance companies, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ABERDEEN, S. DAK., August 19, 1916.

Hon. THOS. STERLING,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Federal revenue bill amended by Senate provides increased income taxation on insurance companies; also continues indefinitely stamp tax on policies, while relieving all other business of stamp-tax feature. We strongly protest this decided discrimination which continues additional labor and responsibility upon local insurance agents and an unwarranted additional burden on insurance companies. We depend upon you to use your best personal efforts to prevent passage of this unfair amendment provision.

Reed Insurance (Inc.), George Bolls, T. C. Gage, J. B. Romans, A. F. Milligan, W. E. Milligan, Squire Land & Loan Co., Ira Barnes, M. B. Lamont, Isaac Lincoln, W. I. Hulett, S. W. Narregan, J. H. Pond, C. J. Burns, C. Boyd Barrett, C. G. Anderson, C. C. Fletcher, Brown Bros., John Wade, Cavanaugh & Wilmarth, C. A. Drager, C. F. Easton, C. H. Allen.

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., August 19, 1916.

Hon. THOS. STERLING,
Senator from South Dakota, Washington, D. C.:

We, as local fire insurance agents in this city, do most emphatically protest against the passage of the Federal revenue bill now before Congress pertaining to increased taxation on insurance companies; also continuing indefinitely stamp tax on policies, which is absolutely unjust and unfair to both fire insurance companies and agents. We trust that you, as representative of this great State of South Dakota, will take it upon yourself to see that the fire insurance companies and local agents of this State get your unqualified support to defeat this measure.

We, as local fire insurance agents in this city, do most emphatically protest against the passage of the Federal revenue bill now before Congress pertaining to increased taxation on insurance companies; also continuing indefinitely stamp tax on policies, which is absolutely unjust and unfair to both fire insurance companies and agents. SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., August 21, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please exert your influence in protecting insurance companies against proposal in revenue bill to continue stamp tax on them, when alone, of all corporations, this tax cost the National Fire Insurance Co. $50,000 last year and was not borne by the policy holders, as it should have been. The National paid in taxes of all sorts last year over $400,000, which was more than our trade profit.

JOHN A. GROSE,
State Agent.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., August 22, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
South Dakota Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Senate committee amendment Federal revenue bill is discriminatory and excessive in view of the heavy taxes already paid by insurance companies. A vote against it will be appreciated.

J. D. DUX.

Mr. SHIELDS. I present a number of telegrams from citizens of Tennessee protesting against the stamp tax on fire insurance policies, which I desire to be noted in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to having communications of this kind printed in the RECORD, but I do want to record my protest against what is, in my opinion, an abuse. I have thousands of similar telegrams from all over Pennsylvania and the United States, and if I were to resort to the same practice——

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not asked that these telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. If I were to resort to the same practice, the RECORD would not be large enough to contain all the telegrams, letters, and protests against this feature of the bill. It seems to me a needless practice, and one that is greatly abused.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania seems oblivious of the correction I made. Of course, I have the right to have these telegrams noted in the RECORD, but I did not request that they be printed in full, as I said at the outset, and as I informed the Senator during his remarks.

The telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance as follows:

Telegrams from the Chattanooga Underwriters, of Chattanooga; from Frank B. Hunter & Co., G. M. Beattie, and Montedonnico, Proudfit & Co., of Memphis; from Davis, Bradford & Co., C. A. Folk & Co., and W. R. Ruegnitz, of the Continental Fire Insurance Co., from Loventhal Bros., W. H. Rutland, D. H. Morgan, C. C. Dabney, Butin & Co., and the Nashville Fire Insurance Co., of Nashville, and from Jennings & Searle, and Hickman, Johnson & Simmonds, of Knoxville, all in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. PHELAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Eureka, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the retention of the stamp tax on insurance companies, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6730) revoking authority to lease Sibley Island in the Missouri River to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 828) thereon.

Mr. LEE of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3735) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 829) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3731) for the relief of John G. Young (Rept. No. 831);

A bill (S. 6949) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. (Rept. No. 832); and

A bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings (Rept. No. 830).

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 17567) to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa., and I submit a report (No. 827) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 6956) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a wagon bridge across the St. Francis River at a point one-half mile northwest of Parkin, Cross County, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 6957) granting a pension to James F. Clark, alias James F. Rozzel (with accompaning papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUSTING:

A bill (S. 6958) granting a pension to Leonard P. Kehrmeyer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUSTING (for Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota):

A bill (S. 6959) granting a pension to Mary J. Crandell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6960) granting a pension to Mary A. Walter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 6961) granting an increase of pension to William Sheads; and

A bill (S. 6962) granting a pension to Eliza T. Schmucker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 6963) granting an increase of pension to Abram Frakes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 6964) granting a pension to Fred Hauk;

A bill (S. 6965) granting a pension to John Cook;

A bill (S. 6966) granting an increase of pension to Samuel K. Barker; and

A bill (S. 6967) granting an increase of pension to Charles Washington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 170) authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government of portraits of Hon. James Latimer and Hon. Dr. Henry Latimer; to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,200 to reimburse the Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for expenses incurred to July 1, 1916, for clerk hire and other clerical services, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 17645), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 to pay Frank W. Hackett for balance of salary as clerk to counsel of the United States before the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 17645), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TESTING OF GRAPES.

Mr. PHELAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 257), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed as a Senate document 10,000 copies of the illustrated bulletin prepared by the Department of Agriculture entitled "Testing Grape Varieties in the Vinifera Regions of the United States," for the use of the Senate document room.

THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. PHELAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 258), which was read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be and he is hereby requested to furnish the following information to the Senate:

1. The number of midshipmen now authorized by law;
2. The number of midshipmen now enrolled at the Annapolis Naval Academy;
3. The number of midshipmen who shall attend the academy during the next academic year;
4. The capacity of the academy and how and by what methods of crowding or otherwise can it be made to meet the present and future demands;
5. What plan of expansion will best promote the health, comfort, and efficiency of the students; and
6. In case the number of students exceeds the capacity of the academy and any reasonable expansion thereof, is there any reason affecting the efficiency of the service why officers for the Navy should not be educated in another naval academy in some other part of the country?

STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I presume that possibly I am out of order and should make the inquiry which I am about to make under the order of business "Reports of committees," but I desire to ask a question of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, though the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], I notice is not present. I introduced and had referred to that committee some weeks ago a bill regarding the transportation and storage of explosives in populous cities and centers, it being a measure calculated to relieve the present situation and to prevent a possible repetition of the great disaster which took place some months ago, whereby $50,000,000 worth of property was lost and also some lives. It seems reasonably probable that we shall adjourn quite soon, and I feel that some action should be taken on the bill. I desire to inquire if the Interstate Commerce Committee is ready to report the bill? It is Senate bill No. 6849.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Senator from New Jersey has observed, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is not now in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well. Then I shall have to bide the time of the committee.

WAR DEPARTMENT ORDERS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on July 25, 1916, I offered in the Senate the following resolution (S. Res. 238):

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all orders issued by his department during the last three years directing the nonemployment of or discriminating between citizens of the United States in connection with the work, activities, and projects carried on by his department.

The resolution passed the Senate July 29 and was at once transmitted to the Secretary of War. Surely, there have not been many orders issued covered by the resolution, and such orders as have been issued must have been very short, yet almost a month has elapsed, and no report has been sent to the Senate. The Secretary of War is probably too busy campaigning on behalf of this administration to discharge public business and comply with the request of the Senate of the United States.

It may be, however, it is not desired that this report should come to the Senate——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. I should prefer not to yield, Mr. President, at this time.

Mr. REED. I am not asking the Senator to yield. I intend to raise a point of order. Under what parliamentary head are we now operating?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the presentation of resolutions.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that the Senator from Washington is not presenting a resolution, but is making a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [A pause.] Morning business is closed.

CLARENCE C. KRESS.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 735, being the bill (S. 3180) to authorize the appointment of Clarence C. Kress to the grade of captain, United States Army Medical Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Clarence C. Kress, now passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy, as an additional officer hereby created in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, corresponding to the rank and grade in which he is now serving in the United States Navy: Provided, That for the purpose of determining his relative rank in the Medical Corps of the Army he shall be considered as having been appointed to the grade of captain in the Medical Corps, United States Army, as of the date of October 5, 1904: Provided further, That if promoted he shall be carried as an additional officer in each grade while on the active list of the Medical Corps of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (No. 56) providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1916, at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution which has been received from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (H. Con. Res. 56), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1916, at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. REED and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Is the unfinished business now before the Senate, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing before the Senate. Under the rules the calendar under Rule VIII is now in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. STERLING. Regular order!

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 16763, being known as the revenue bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Has the morning business been closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 16763.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

RECORD OF DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, for 41 months the Democratic Party has controlled the government of our country.

2. The world is involved in the horrors of war. We enjoy the blessings of peace.

3. The nations and financial institutions of Europe are staggering toward the precipice of bankruptcy. We experience an era of unexampled prosperity.

4. American labor is better employed and at higher wages than the labor of any country at any time in the history of the world.

5. The American farmer is receiving a higher price for all he produces than has been paid since our Nation was founded.

6. The Democratic Party exposed the organized lobby which had for years infested the Nation's Capital, destroyed its power, and rendered it so obnoxious that respectable men refuse to be seen in the company of its few remaining emissaries. The only business that has been injured by the Democratic Party is that of the professional lobbyist.

The Republican Party demands a change.

TARIFF—INCOME TAX.

7. The Democratic Party revised the tariff downward, lightening the taxes of the people least able to pay.

It enacted the income tax, placing the greater part of the burden of government on those most able to pay.

In 1916 it collected in income and corporation taxes $125,916,315. It should be noted that 60 per cent of the individual income tax was paid by less than 8,000 gentlemen enjoying incomes in excess of $20,000 a year. Over 44 per cent of the entire individual income tax was paid by residents of New York.

The Republican Party demands a change.

NEW BANKING SYSTEM.

8. The Democratic Party substituted a sound for an unsound and archaic banking system, inspired confidence, and revitalized commerce and industry.

It transferred the seat of financial authority from Wall Street to Washington.

It repealed the Republican banking laws that forced the congestion of the moneys of the country in New York, there to be subjected to the hazard of the gambler of the financial pit.

It placed bank reserves in the custody of Government-safeguarded institutions and made them available to meet the necessities of business.

The Republican Party demands a change.

NEW CURRENCY SYSTEM.

9. The Democratic Party inherited a currency system incapable of either expansion or contraction. In the presence of slight pressure the entire financial structure repeatedly broke down. Accordingly the holders of large amounts of ready cash were able to precipitate panics, destroy values, wreck thoroughly solvent financial and industrial concerns, and to purchase securities at enormously decreased prices.

The Democratic Party abolished panics by providing a sound and elastic currency always adequate to meet the demands of business.

The Republican Party demands a change.

FOREIGN BRANCH BANKS.

10. The Democratic Party passed a law under which powerful American banks have already been established in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Uruguay, Cuba, China, Russia, Italy, and other foreign countries, thus affording that financial support essential to the creation of foreign markets for American products.

In the last year our commercial business with Argentina increased	$60,864,024, or 75%
With Brazil increased	35,456,272, or 33%
With Chile increased	35,008,761, or 118%

Our exports to Argentina increased 150 per cent; to Brazil, 55 per cent; and to Chile, 112 per cent.

The American dollar and American goods are rapidly supplanting the pound sterling of England and European goods in the Western Hemisphere.

Within a decade the American tourist and business man will be able to transact business with a branch American bank in every country of the globe.

The Republican Party demands a change.

FARM-MORTGAGE MARKET.

11. The Democratic Party created a market through the national banks capable of absorbing $450,000,000 of farm mortgages, thus producing a competition with farm-loan companies which heretofore have extorted unreasonable interest charges from farmers.

The Republican Party demands a change.

CATTLE PAPER MARKET.

12. The Democratic Party made $391,592,000 of cattle paper eligible as the basis for Federal reserve notes. The amount can at any time be enlarged by the Reserve Board to meet business necessities.

The Republican Party demands a change.

LAND BANKS.

13. The Democratic Party is now creating a great system of land banks which will extend credit and reduce interest charges to the farmers of the United States.

The Republican Party demands a change.

GOVERNMENT BY INJUNCTION ABOLISHED.

14. The Democratic Party abolished government by injunction.

It exempted labor and farm organizations from the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act and gave them statutory recognition.

It guaranteed trial by jury and the right to bail and appeal in contempt cases.

It enacted many other laws beneficial to farmer and labor organizations, to which attention will be later called.

The Republican Party demands a change.

DOLLAR DIPLOMACY.

15. The Democratic Party abolished "dollar diplomacy," a scheme by which great financiers, aided by Republican Presidents, practically made our Nation the underwriter of the bonds of the foreign countries in which these enterprising gentlemen were speculating. This impudent employment of the Government in private ventures, which promised at any time to involve us in foreign entanglements and war, received its quietus when President Wilson peremptorily ordered withdrawal from the Chinese six-power loan to which President Taft had committed us.

The Republican Party demands a change.

THE PHILIPPINE BILL.

16. The Democratic Party, in redemption of its pledges, passed the Philippine bill, extending a larger measure of autonomy to the islands and preparing their people for the task of self-government.

The Republican Party demands a change.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

17. THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY, RECOGNIZING THAT THE ART OF WAR HAS BEEN REVOLUTIONIZED, APPRECIATING THE DANGER OF UNPREPAREDNESS, AND IN RESPONSE TO THE DEMAND OF THE PEOPLE HAS PROVIDED FOR A LARGE INCREASE IN OUR MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

ARMY INCREASE.

The new standing army will have a minimum strength of	208,328
And a maximum strength of	289,846
The new Organized Militia will have a total strength of	457,000 officers and men thoroughly equipped and educated.

New organizations have been created as follows:

Officers' Reserve Corps,

Officers' Training Corps,

Enlisted Reserve Corps,

Citizens' training camps,

Detached officers' list for training the National Guard and imparting military instruction.

For aerial service we have set aside	$13,281,666
The above program involves an expenditure this year of	267,579,000

NAVY INCREASE.

OUR NAVY HAS BEEN ENORMOUSLY STRENGTHENED—AN EPITOMIZATION OF WHAT HAS BEEN DONE IS AS FOLLOWS:

Vessels ordered to be constructed	157

Of these there will be:

Battleships	10
Battle cruisers	6
Scout cruisers	10
Torpedo-boat destroyers	50
Submarines	64
Other vessels	17

Of the 157 vessels authorized, there will be immediately constructed 66

Included in the above are:

Battleships	1
Battle cruisers	4
Submarines	30

To complete this stupendous naval program requires an appropriation this year of	$315,826,443
The ships, the keels of which will be laid under this bill, will cost when completed	588,180,576

The number of cadets at West Point and Annapolis have been increased 50 per cent.

The execution of these plans will make us superior on the sea to any nation save Great Britain.

Our Army and Navy will render the country invincible against attack by any power on earth.

The total appropriation for defense of the country exceeds for this year $583,000,000

The Republican Party demands a change, but only the all-seeing God can tell us in which direction.

JUST NOW THE COUNTRY IS BEING AFFLICTED BY THE SNEERING CRITICISMS OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT AND TAFT'S EX-SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, GEORGE L. VON MEYER. THESE GENTLEMEN CHARGE THAT THE DEMOCRATS HAVE BROUGHT THE COUNTRY TO A DEFENSELESS CONDITION. AN EXAMINATION OF THE REPUBLICAN RECORD DURING THE TIME THESE NEWLY CONVERTED APOSTLES OF A BIG ARMY AND NAVY WERE IN POWER IS ILLUMINATING:

ARMY AND NAVY UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

Navy.

Average Navy appropriation, seven years of Roosevelt	$101,370,413
Average Navy appropriation, four years of Taft	122,403,174
Average Navy appropriation, first three years of Wilson	146,349,930
Navy appropriation present year, Wilson	315,826,843
New ships authorized will cost a total of	580,180,576

Notice that even before the European war began appropriations for the Navy under Wilson exceeded those of either Taft or Roosevelt.

Army.

Average strength of Regular Army under Roosevelt:
Officers and men	69,251
Militia, inefficient and badly organized	110,193
Annual appropriation	$79,057,656
Average strength of Regular Army under Taft:
Officers and men	82,868
Militia, inefficient and badly organized	120,075
Annual appropriation	$95,242,479
Strength of Regular Army (authorized) under Wilson:
Officers and men—
Minimum	208,328
Maximum	289,846
Militia—provision for well equipped and highly trained force of	457,000
Annual appropriation	$267,579,000

I call attention to two things. Roosevelt was a disciple of the doctrine of peace and a member of The Hague Peace Conference. Taft was in like manner an advocate of that doctrine, and in 1909 sent a message to Congress in which he stated, "I have directed that the Army shall not be recruited up to its present authorized strength." This resulted in cutting the Army down from 77,040 to 72,194 enlisted men.

I do not criticize either Roosevelt or Taft for the policies they pursued. They were doubtless conforming to the general thought of the country, but it does not lie in their mouths to carp at the acts of an administration which even before the war had taken steps to strengthen our Navy beyond anything either Roosevelt, von Meyer, or Taft had advocated.

The performances these gentlemen are now indulging in can be characterized as nothing short of arrant demagoguery.

TRUSTS.

18. THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY GREATLY STRENGHTENED THE ANTI-TRUST LAWS BY THE ENACTMENT OF THE CLAYTON BILL, THE PROVISIONS OF WHICH, VERY MEAGERLY SKETCHED, ARE AS FOLLOWS:

(a) Corporation officers who permit the corporation to violate the trust acts are made personally liable as felons.

(b) Officers of common carriers permitting the misapplication of corporate funds are made liable as felons.

(c) A common carrier corporation is forbidden to purchase—save in certain special cases—from other corporations of which its officers are also officers. A violation is made a felony, alike by the corporation and its responsible officers.

(d) Corporations engaged in commerce are forbidden to own the stock of other corporations where the effect is to lessen competition.

(e) Interlocking directorates among banks are prohibited, or so restricted as to abolish the evil of the system.

(f) The unfair devices commonly employed by monopolies and great corporations to crush their weaker rivals are prohibited. I instance two: (1) Discrimination in prices between different purchasers or different communities where the effect is to lessen competition; (2) the scheme known as "tying contracts," by which the seller of an article binds his customer not to deal in the goods of the seller's competitors.

(g) The statute of limitations is suspended in favor of persons having claims based upon a violation of trust statutes during such time as the Government is prosecuting an action against the trust.

(h) All persons claiming to be injured by trust practices may apply for injunctive relief and sue for damages regardless of the amount involved in any Federal court at any place where the corporation does business.

(i) Final judgments in criminal cases against trusts are made prima facie evidence of the existence of a trust in all civil proceedings thereafter brought.

This wise and effective law has been a bulwark of protection to the people of the United States.

The Republican Party demands a change.

TRUST AND LAND PROSECUTIONS BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

19. The Roosevelt and Taft administrations, with a great blare of trumpets, began and carried on the Northern Securities, the Standard Oil, and the Tobacco cases. However, when judgment had been obtained, a Republican Attorney General consented to court decrees which permitted the monopolies to operate in the form of separate corporations substantially under one control. The decrees were little else than judicial grants of perpetual monopoly. Instantly the stock of these dissolved corporations rose on the market.

A DEMOCRATIC ATTORNEY GENERAL REVERSED THE REPUBLICAN POLICY. IN ALL THE MANY NOTABLE CASES WON BY THE GOVERNMENT HE INSISTED UPON REAL DISSOLUTIONS.

I mention but a few: The Union Pacific and Southern Pacific Merger case, Telephone case, New Haven case, Harvester case, Kodak case, Anthracite Coal case, Corn Products case, Butter and Egg cases, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes case, Clothes Wringer case, Plumbers' Supplies case, National Wholesale Jewelers' Association case, Bituminous Coal case. In all the foregoing and in all other cases the Democratic Attorney General has insisted that the dissolutions must be of the substance not merely of the form.

Numerous consent decrees have been entered which have ended trust practices. I instance the great New Haven case and the Telephone case.

The commodities clause of the interstate commerce law has been enforced.

THE WORK OF RECOVERING VALUABLE GOVERNMENT MINERAL LANDS HAS BEEN VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED.

Among the important cases brought, I mention the Midwest Oil Co. case, in which the Government recovered lands valued at $100,000,000. Worthy of notice are the California and Wyoming cases involving lands worth $18,000,000, six of which have already been decided, the Government recovering lands worth over $4,000,000. In the Southern Pacific case the Government secured judgment for lands worth $18,000,000. Other suits are now pending involving land worth over $500,000,000.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY, RECOGNIZING THAT THE POWERS OF GOVERNMENT MAY BE JUSTLY EMPLOYED TO PROTECT BOTH THE GOVERNMENT AND THE PEOPLE FROM THE RAPACITY OF PRIVATE CONTRACTORS, HAS EMBARKED UPON A GREAT CONSTRUCTIVE POLICY TO WHICH I INVITE YOUR CONSIDERATION.

SHIP-PURCHASE BILL.

20. The Democratic Party has provided for the construction of a merchant marine which will break the strangle hold the shipping monopoly has long held upon ocean transportation.

The bill would have been passed by the last Congress but for the Republican filibuster. That filibuster has already cost the shippers of the country more than $100,000,000.

The Republican Party demands a change.

GOVERNMENT NITRATE PLANT.

21. The Democratic Party forestalled the attempt of private capitalists to, in time of war, speculate upon the necessities of the Government, and in time of peace to exact tribute from the farmers, by providing for the erection of a $20,000,000 plant to extract nitrates from the air to supply our military and agricultural necessities.

The Republican Party demands a change.

GOVERNMENT ARMOR-PLATE PLANT AND ARSENALS.

22. The Democratic Party is establishing an armor-plate plant and enlarging the Government arsenals. This, together with the construction of the nitrate plant, will greatly strengthen our war resources and rescue us from the rapacity of private contractors. At the same time it will destroy the incentive of those who insist upon extravagant and unreasonable military establishments, or who may even be willing to plunge the country into war in order that they may profit thereby.

The Republican Party demands a change.

ALASKAN RAILWAY AND PHILIPPINES.

23. The Democratic Party reversed the traditional Republican policy, which has always subjected territorial domain to looting by private adventurers.

It built the Alaskan Railroad, thus substituting governmental development for the ancient policy of private spoliation.

The Republican Party demands a change.

GOOD ROADS.

24. The Democratic Party appropriated $75,000,000 for the building of good roads upon condition that the States cooperate and contribute an equal sum.

The law insures the construction and maintenance of $160,000,000 worth of Government pikes.

The States participate in the Government appropriations as shown in Table 1, which I print as an addendum to my remarks Missouri's share will be $1,275,000.

The Republican Party demands a change.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IMPROVED UPON THE REPUBLICAN POLICY OF INVESTIGATING AND PREVENTING DISEASES OF PLANTS AND ANIMALS BY EXTENDING THAT BENEFICENT POLICY TO HUMAN BEINGS. I DIRECT ATTENTION TO SOME IMPORTANT ACHIEVEMENTS.

LABOR—NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

25. The Democratic Party vitalized the national employment bureau by placing at the head of the Labor Department a real representative of labor. The result is that the bureau in the single year of 1916 secured employment for nearly four times as many people as it did during the last six years of Republican rule.

The Republican Party demands a change.

LABOR DISPUTES—ARBITRATION.

26. The Democratic Party created a new Board of Mediation and Conciliation having special jurisdiction over disputes between railroad companies and their employees.

In the first year of its existence the board settled more controversies than did former boards which operated under imperfect Republican laws during the previous 15 years. Up to June 30, 1916, it had secured an amicable adjustment in each of the 56 great controversies submitted to it.

The Department of Labor since March 4, 1913, has settled 189 labor disputes. It was unable to secure adjustment in only 37 cases.

The Republican Party demands a change.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

27. The Democratic Party organized the Children's Bureau to investigate the condition of children and childlife, to the end that laws might be passed for the aid and protection of the helpless children of the land.

The Republican Party demands a change.

CHILD-LABOR LAW.

28. The Democratic Party at this session of Congress has thrown the mantle of governmental protection over children of tender years by the enactment of a child-labor law.

The Republican Party demands a change.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

29. The Democratic Party, in response to the request of labor and humanity, has just enacted a workmen's compensation law applicable to all Government employees.

The Republican Party demands a change.

30. WHAT THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY HAS DONE FOR THE FARMER.

SPECIAL ATTENTION HAS BEEN GIVEN TO THE WELFARE OF THE FARMER. I CITE A FEW IMPORTANT ITEMS.

(a) The Federal farm-loan act will enable farmers to obtain loans for as long a period as 30 years.

Experts estimate that interest will be reduced to from 4 to 4½ per cent. The farmer will obtain his money without commission charges and participate in profits of the land bank. The difference between the interest now charged and the interest which will be charged by the land banks will, in the course of a few years, equal the principal of a loan.

(b) The creation of the regional banking system and the administration of the Comptroller of the Currency have already resulted in a general reduction of interest rates by from 1 to 3 per cent. In some parts of the country where usurious rates were exacted the practice has been almost entirely broken up. This has subjected Comptroller Williams to bitter criticism by the usury-exacting banks, but he will not be denounced by those who have hitherto been the victims of extortion.

(c) The reserve bank bill created a competitive market for $450,000,000 of farm mortgages, and for $391,592,000 of cattle paper, as heretofore stated.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury furnished money in abundance at exceedingly low rates to move crops. The benefits of this inured to the farmer who always suffers when there is a shortage of money for the transportation of his crops to market.

(e) The enactment of the shipping bill means lower rates on agricultural products to European markets, the benefits of which will largely go to the farmer.

(f) In the revision of the tariff careful attention was paid to the special necessities of the farmer. Accordingly there was placed upon the free list the following articles, all of which are peculiarly used by the farmer: Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, threshing machines, cotton gins, wagons and carts, machinery for use in the manufacture of sugar, and all other agricultural implements of every kind and description and many other articles not above mentioned; also all animals imported for breeding purposes.

(g) The appropriation for eradication of the cattle tick has been doubled; that for the control of hog cholera has been increased from $100,000 to $360,000. The foot-and-mouth disease was eradicated at a cost to the Government of $4,500,000.

(h) The total agricultural appropriations have been increased 50 per cent.

(i) A Division of Markets and Rural Organization has been created to study and disseminate information regarding the best methods of transportation, storage, marketing, distribution, standards, and so forth.

(j) The agricultural extension act, backed by an $8,600,000 appropriation by the Federal Government, provides for cooperation with the States in the dissemination of farm information. This will place two expert farm demonstrators and specialists in each county of the United States.

(k) A market and live stock news service has been established.

(l) The cotton futures act will to a large extent relieve cotton planters from the dishonest practices of cotton exchanges.

(m) The grain standards act insures uniformity in the grading of grain.

(n) The warehouse act provides for licensing and regulating warehouses and makes possible the issuance of reliable and easily negotiable warehouse receipts, thus permitting the farmer to warehouse his grain, hold it for a favorable market, and if he needs money to borrow upon his warehouse receipts.

(o) The Federal aid road act, which has already been referred to, insures the expenditure of $160,000,000 in building good roads. It is the first step in a great movement that will ultimately bring improved highways to all parts of our country.

WHAT THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY HAS DONE FOR LABOR.

31. For more than a score of years labor persistently knocked at the doors of Republican Congresses asking for relief against government by injunction and other unjust laws and rules of practice. Their petitions were uniformly and often with contumely rejected.

Immediately after President Wilson was inaugurated the Democratic Party set about the task of remedying the evils referred to. I have already touched upon various acts.

I now set forth a list of remedial acts which are scheduled in the official magazine of the American Federation of Labor for 1916.

"1. Organizations of labor and farmers taken from the purview of the antitrust act.

"2. Limitation of the use and prevention of the abuse of the writ of injunction in labor disputes.

"3. Legislation defining and restricting punishment for alleged contempts of injunction writs and providing jury trial in contempt cases.

"4. Department of Justice prohibited from using antitrust appropriation funds to prosecute labor and farmers' organizations under the antitrust act.

"5. Passage of seamen's law, abolishing involuntary servitude, providing better treatment of seamen, and improving life-saving provisions on vessels at sea.

"6. Old conciliation, mediation, and arbitration act repealed. New law enacted with permanent officials appointed to administer it in behalf of railroad employees engaged in operating service.

"7. Eight-hour law enacted for women and child workers in the District of Columbia.

"8. Eight-hour law passed for employees under the Alaska coal-land act.

"9. Public construction of Alaska railroad.

"10. Industrial education provided with appropriations for farmers and rural residents.

"11. Taylor system, stop-watch, and speeding-up methods in the United States navy yards, gun factories, arsenals, and torpedo stations abolished.

"12. Piecework prohibited in Post Office Department, Washington, D. C.

"13. Public construction of battleships, transports, and other vessels in United States navy yards extended. Repairs to vessels of the Navy to be made in governmental instead of private yards. Steadier work assured to employees of Government navy yards.

"14. Licensed officers, such as masters, mates, and pilots, guaranteed right to quit, and protected when reporting defects of their vessels to Government inspectors.

"15. Bureau of Mines act extended and strengthened. Ten new experiment stations and seven new safety stations provided.

"16. Senatorial investigation of industrial dispute in coal fields of West Virginia, whereby peace was restored, the eight-hour day secured, check weighmen provided, and 10 per cent increase in wages gained; right of organization guaranteed and other improved working conditions included.

"17. Compensation for injuries act extended to post-office employees.

"18. Locomotive-boiler inspection act extended to cover locomotive engines and tenders.

"19. Leave of absence with pay to employees of Government Printing Office extended from 26 to 30 days per year.

"20. Investigation of the industrial disputes in the Colorado gold fields and the Michigan copper region, in which were exposed intolerable conditions under which labor suffered.

"21. Increase in the wages of the metal-trade mechanics employed by the Government.

"22. Increased appropriations for the Children's Bureau and for the Department of Labor."

To these must be added:

23. The child-labor law, which prohibits the shipment in interstate commerce of the products of factories employing children under 14 years of age; also,

24. The Children's Bureau. This bureau was appointed by President Wilson, who placed at its head a woman devoted to the improvement of child-life conditions. Its efforts have been directed toward ascertaining the relations between poverty, disease, and mortality. It has developed evidence strongly tending to show that infant mortality increases in direct proportion to the decrease of wages, and decreases in direct proportion to the increase of wages. The importance of these disclosures suggest the wisdom of that policy so much dwelt upon by President Wilson, which he expresses in the term "service."

25. The income tax, which was long demanded by labor.

26. The workmen's compensation law, applicable to all Government employees.

GAG RULE ABOLISHED.

The contrast between the record made by the Democratic Party and the policies pursued by the Republican Party is well illustrated by the gag rule adopted by Roosevelt and Taft.

January 25, 1906, Roosevelt issued this infamous order:

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

On November 26, 1909, Taft promulgated an even more tyrannical decree:

It is hereby ordered that no bureau, office, or division chief, or subordinate in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of either House of Congress, or to any Member of Congress, for legislation or for appropriations or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through or as authorized by the head of his department.

I had the great pleasure myself of moving the abolition of these gag rules and the enactment of the following in lieu thereof:

The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to any House of Congress or to any committee or Member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

Not only were Government employees denied the right to petition Congress but a Second Assistant Postmaster General absolutely forbade its clerks to organize themselves into lodges, clubs, or other forms of association, civil or otherwise. They were accorded less rights than were enjoyed by the subjects of Turkey in the days of Abdul Hamid II.

With the assistance of the solid Democratic side I forced the adoption of the following amendment to the Post Office bill in 1912:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike, against the United States, having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said Postal Service, or the presenting by any such person or group of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service. The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress or to any committee or Member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

The foregoing statement of the constructive legislation and executive achievements of the Democratic administration is abbreviated to the last degree and does not mention many important laws and acts which have inured to the benefit of the people.

I propose now under appropriate headings to submit facts showing the present condition of the country, although time will compel me to resort to the most condensed form of expression.

UNEXAMPLED PROSPERITY.

32. MR. HUGHES DECLARES WE ARE LIVING IN A "FOOL'S PARADISE." I NOW INVITE YOU TO EXPLORE THAT DELIGHTFUL COUNTRY.

In Wilson's first three years bank deposits have increased	$5,985,464,675 or 29.5%
Deposits now reach the stupendous sum of	26,237,922,000
Bank resources have increased	7,699,400,000 or 37.6%
Resources now reach the unprecedented aggregate of	28,320,395,000
In Roosevelt's four years national bank deposits increased	761,000,000 or 14%
In Taft's four years national bank deposits increased	1,081,000,000 or 15%
In Wilson's three and one-quarter years national bank deposits increased	2,908,000,000 or 35%

The actual increase under Wilson was nearly four times as great as under Roosevelt and almost three times as great as under Taft.

BANK CLEARINGS.

The report from 55 clearing houses shows that their clearings for 1916 will exceed those of the last year of Taft's administration by over $66,000,000,000.

RESERVE BANK RESOURCES.

January 8, 1915	$287,301,000
August 1, 1916	615,317,000
Increase		$328,016,000
Gold on hand August 1, 1916		527,347,000

The present gold reserve of the reserve banks after maintaining the legal required reserve on deposits is sufficient to warrant a present additional issue of Federal notes of $526,000,000. The amount can be indefinitely extended, as long as the 40 per cent gold reserve is maintained.

The capital of these banks will soon be further increased by $55,000,000. Great State banks and trust companies are now joining, which means a further great increase in capital and resources.

The reserve system is now stronger than the Bank of England.

INCREASED GOLD HOLDINGS.

During Taft's administration exports of gold exceeded imports to the extent of	$41,087,196
During Wilson's administration imports of gold exceeded exports to the extent of	385,605,906
June 1, 1912 (under Taft), gold stock in United States	1,813,036,395
August 1, 1916 (under Wilson), gold stock in United States	2,500,229,564
Excess of gold over last year of Taft, 38 per cent, or	687,193,169

We now hold of the gold of the world over 30 per cent.

This result has been achieved in spite of the facts that within 10 days after the European war began we were compelled to ship abroad of gold	$45,000,000
That we have absorbed of European-held American securities	3,000,000,000
And that we have loaned foreign countries	1,303,000,000

Gradually we are becoming the financial monarchs of the earth. While we are creating wealth at a rate never before equaled by any people, the European countries are expending $108,000,000 a day in the devastating work of war. If these conditions are long maintained we will, for the next century, dominate the finances of the world.

I append Table 2 showing the gold movement since 1908, and Table 3 showing foreign loans made by the United States since January, 1915.

FOREIGN TRADE.

A comparison of the condition of our foreign trade under Wilson with its condition under either Taft or Roosevelt is extremely gratifying. My figures embrace fiscal years ending June 30:

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.	Favorable balance.
1909-10	$1,556,947,430	$1,744,984,720	$3,301,932,150	$188,037,290
1910-11	1,527,226,105	2,049,320,199	3,576,546,304	522,094,094
1911-12	1,653,264,934	2,204,322,409	3,857,587,343	551,057,747
1912-13	1,813,008,234	2,465,884,149	4,278,892,383	652,875,915
1913-14	1,893,926,657	2,364,579,148	4,278,504,809	470,653,491
1914-15	1,674,189,740	2,768,589,340	4,442,750,080	1,094,419,600
1915-16	2,197,984,842	4,333,698,604	6,531,683,446	2,135,713,762

Notice that our aggregate foreign trade each year of the Wilson administration was greater than any year of the Taft régime. Note also that our imports as well as exports were greater. With the single exception of the fiscal year 1914 the favorable trade balances were greater. The falling off in favorable trade balance for the fiscal year 1914 is clearly accounted for by the European financial stringency preceding the war and the disturbances incident to that war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to suggest, as an addendum to the analysis which the Senator from Missouri is making of our foreign-trade situation, that during the fiscal year 1916 there was a falling off in our imports of manufactures ready for consumption of $133,000,000; there was during that year an increase in our exports of manufactures ready for consumption of $1,200,000,000, making a net increase of our manufactures growing out of our foreign trade in one year of $1,400,000,000.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator from North Carolina, and should be glad to go further into these questions, but time forbids. I want to conclude what I have to say as soon as possible.

RAILROADS' INCREASED EARNINGS.

The earnings of the railways in the third fiscal year of Wilson's administration (June, 1915, to June, 1916) compared with the same fiscal year of Taft's administration (June, 1911, to June, 1912) show a 27 per cent increase, an aggregate increase of $224,000,000.

POST OFFICE—INCREASED EARNINGS.

From 1883 to 1913 the Post Office Department showed an annual deficiency.

The year 1913 brought a surplus of	$3,841,907
The year 1914 brought a surplus of	3,569,687

In 1915 we were confronted by a deficit of $11,337,939.

Everybody knows the falling off in receipts was occasioned solely by the paralysis of business which occurred during the first few months of the European war. There had been no radical change in the administration of the Post Office.

But business revived, and 1916 under the same administration shows a surplus of	$5,742,443

Notwithstanding the calamitous year 1915 occasioned by the depression of business of the early months of the war, the result to-day compared with previous administrations is as follows:

Four years Roosevelt's administration, net deficiency	$48,739,637
Four years Taft's administration, net deficiency	26,495,914
Three and one-fourth years Wilson's administration, net surplus	1,162,061

Postmaster General Burleson has by various orders extended the service.

The parcel post has been enlarged and improved. Here are some of the splendid results:

Year ending June 30, 1913 (6 months):
Postage	$22,911,504
Number parcels carried	381,394,800
Year ending June 30, 1916 (full year):
Postage	$65,924,158
Number parcels carried	1,001,021,616

Postal savings deposits have increased 186 per cent.

Fees for insurance on parcels increased from nothing to $1,096,537.

Mail-transportation service has been established on 6,248.9 miles of railway.

City delivery has been extended to 204 cities, and village delivery has been extended to 139 villages, serving 5,000,000 additional patrons.

Rural routes extended over 10,000 miles.

Additional people served 23,276,290.

MANUFACTURING AND INDUSTRIAL PROSPERITY.

37. The iron and steel trade is the barometer of business. Bache's Review declares that "for the three months ending July 1, 1916, the earnings of the Steel Corporation are over $81,000,000, and easily the largest ever reported in any quarter. The earnings for the six months are more than the company earned in the entire year 1907. The net earnings for year are $240,000,000, and orders are coming in at the rate of 70,000 tons per day."

I quote now in a condensed form from Moody's Digest of Corporation News, June, 1916.

The Bache Review, March 4, 1916, gives a list of industrial establishments showing the percentage earned for the calendar year 1915 as follows:

	Market value.	Earned per annum on market value of stock.
		Per cent.
American Locomotive (6 months ending December, 1915)	66⅛	23.5
Central Leather (3 months ending December, 1915)	51⅛	40.9
Continental Can	78⅛	15.3
General Motors (6 months ending December, 1915)	460	32.8
Lackawanna Steel (3 months ending December, 1915)	72⅛	28.3
New York Air Brake (12 months)	137½	11.2
United States Industrial Alcohol (12 months)	142½	23.3
United States Steel (3 months ending December, 1915)	79⅛	29.2
Annual earnings if rate is maintained	.....	116.8

FARM PRICES.

A comparison of the average prices paid to farmers during the last year of Taft's administration with the average prices paid during the present year of Wilson's administration is as follows:

	1912	1916	Chicago market, Aug. 9, 1916.
Wheat	89.7	107	1.44
Corn	79.3	79.4	.87
Wool	18.9	28.6	.....
Beef cattle	5.17	6.78	6.90@10.60
Calves	6.33	8.54	9.00@12.25
Sheep	4.21	6.33	6.75@ 8.25
Lambs	5.74	8.16	7.50@11.35
Hogs	6.71	7.78	9.75@10.60

These figures plainly demonstrate that the farmer under Wilson's administration is enjoying a greater degree of prosperity than he did under Taft. And the further you go back in Republican administrations the more apparent and striking is the contrast.

LABOR—WAGES.

Under this administration there has been an enormous increase both in wages paid per man and in the number of men employed.

Figures of the Department of Labor show that in only 4,175 establishments there was in 1916 an increase of wages over 1915 of at least 10 per cent to 5,730,907 men.

An aggregate wage increase of	$300,000,000
The establishments included in the estimate do not employ more than one-sixth of the wage earners of the country. Everybody knows that the wage increase has reached every line of occupation. It is therefore safe to say that the increase in wages from 1915 to 1916 is in excess of	1,800,000,000
The wage earners of the United States exceed 33,000,000. Careful estimates show that at least 10 per cent, or 3,300,000, more persons are employed in 1916 than in 1915. Averaging their wages at the moderate sum of $500 per annum, we ascertain that the persons employed in 1916 who were not employed in 1915 received in wages	1,666,500,000
It follows that the pay roll of 1916 exceeded that of 1915 by	3,466,500,000

At the same time the figures of the Department of Labor, based upon the reports for union labor, show that in 1915 the wages and number of men employed exceeded 1912 by over 3 per cent.

So that the wages and employment of 1916 exceed the last year of Taft's administration by 13 per cent.

"A FOOL'S PARADISE."

Such, sir, is the wonderful prosperity our great country enjoys. Such is the smiling picture which Candidate Hughes characterizes as "a fool's paradise."

By what phrase would he have described conditions had they unhappily been reversed? Would not the man who is now curling his lip at the country's prosperity, refusing his great antagonist any modicum of credit, and sneeringly exclaiming "a fool's paradise," have then charged disaster to the President and bitterly declaimed of "Democratic bread lines" and "Wilson soup houses"?

Plainly, when the justice doffed his ermine he likewise cast aside the judicial temperament.

When he plunged into the stream of politics he abandoned his honorable robes on the bank.

When he forsook the society of the Justices of the Supreme Court and exchanged the precepts of Blackstone, Coke, and Marshall for the companionship and counsel of Flynn and Willcox, Perkins and Schwab, Gary and Guggenheim, et al., he prepared to play the political game in all its baser aspects.

Well, perhaps we do dwell in "a fool's paradise." But the laboring man who, jobless and empty stomached, groped in the desert of Republican hard times during the "Roosevelt panic" and the "Taft stringency" is now quite content to enter that "fool's paradise" in which he can at once fill a job and fill his stomach.

The man whose wages have been increased every year under the Wilson administration, who is better able to educate his children, to buy shoes for feet that were once bare, and to substitute good clothes for the rags of poverty, is at least enjoying a bit of terrestrial paradise even though Candidate Hughes may call it the paradise of "a fool."

The farmer who is receiving a better price for his crops than ever before paid in all the history of the world may be farming in "a fool's paradise," but he is getting the money and lifting the mortgage on his homestead.

The president of a bankrupt railroad who finds earnings increased 27 per cent and transportation business running beyond his capacity may be operating his road in "a fool's paradise," but he is getting his company out of debt.

The small merchant who for years has been struggling beneath a burden of debt to wholesale houses may be doing business in "a fool's paradise," but he is moving from the debtor to the creditor class.

The banker who has lain awake o' nights lest panic should convulse the world and bring him ruin, now realizing that the Democratic Party has made it so he can at the till of a Government-controlled bank transform his good commercial paper into ready cash and meet all emergencies, may sleep and dream the dreams of paradise and wake content, even though Candidate Hughes tells him that his dream was the dream of a fool.

If this be "a fool's paradise," may we dwell in it forever

TO WHAT CAUSES MAY OUR UNEXAMPLED PROSPERITY BE ATTRIBUTED?

Before answering let me briefly reply to certain arguments advanced by Republican leaders.

First, the assertion that "prosperity is occasioned by the shipment of munitions."

The claim is untenable—

(a) Because our munition shipments only equal 6 per cent of the total exports. In support of the statement just made I append Table 4, which was prepared by the Department of Commerce.

(b) Our exports to foreign countries have increased as rapidly outside as within the war zone. To illustrate, exports increased as follows:

	Per cent.
Central America	40
South American countries	31.8
Australia	17.5
Africa	51.5
Japan	13.5

Second, the claim that "the war in itself brought us prosperity" is absolutely untrue.

Against whatever advantages may have accrued from the war must be set the many losses it occasioned. For instance, in a single year our trade with Germany fell off $414,500,000. The loss of trade with Germany to date exceeds $944,957,352. Our foreign commerce was for a time almost totally destroyed. Cotton values shrunk $590,000,000. Foreign exchange stopped, and other calamities were visited upon us to which I shall hereafter refer.

I frankly concede that in seeking to arrive at the cause of the present unparalleled prosperity the influence of the European war must be taken into account.

But I confidently assert—

I.

THAT BUT FOR THE WISE LEGISLATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY THE WAR WOULD HAVE ENGULFED OUR COUNTRY IN THE MOST DEVASTATING PANIC OF HISTORY.

II.

THAT IT IS SOLELY BECAUSE OF WISE DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION AND ADMINISTRATION WE ARE ABLE TO EMBRACE THE OPPORTUNITIES AFFORDED BY THE WAR.

To a demonstration of the foregoing propositions I invite your consideration.

(A) THE ADMINISTRATION OF SECRETARY M'ADOO IS IN SHARP CONTRAST WITH THAT OF HIS REPUBLICAN PREDECESSORS.

Republican Secretaries had obsequiously acceded to the demands of Wall Street—furnished it money while denying relief to the rest of the country—permitted great banks to restrict credits by hoarding enormous sums of money and generally allowed them to assume the prerogative of financial overlords. In contradistinction to such policies Secretary McAdoo in time of stress gave assistance to all parts of the country; demanded that banks throw their excess money into channels of trade, and gave assurance that the Treasury Department stood ready to furnish, if necessary, $500,000,000 of Government money to meet any emergency. At the same time he insisted on legislation making it possible for any bank having good security to obtain cash from the Treasury when needed to meet business demands.

Wall Street bossed Republican Secretaries; McAdoo bossed Wall Street.

(B) THE REPUBLICAN BANKING AND CURRENCY SYSTEMS WERE IN MANY RESPECTS FATALLY DEFECTIVE—I MENTION ONLY THE GROSSER FAULTS.

1. While the demand for cash constantly varied the volume of cash was limited and inflexible. In normal times each dollar of cash carried approximately $10 of credit. In times of emergency cash was always demanded, and as the volume did not exceed one-tenth of the possible demand, money panics frequently resulted even though industrial prosperity existed.

2. There was a total absence of the principles of mutual support and mobilization of resources. Each bank stood by itself and for itself. In case of financial stringency each individual bank sought to save itself from disaster, and in order to do so frequently demanded its money which it had redeposited with other banks.

3. The banks of the Nation were classified as follows:

(a) Banks of central reserve cities—reserve requirement 25 per cent.

(b) Banks of reserve cities—reserve requirement 25 per cent—privilege of redepositing 12½ per cent.

(c) Country banks—reserve requirement 15 per cent—privilege of redepositing 9 per cent.

The banks of reserve and central reserve cities paid 2 per cent on bank deposits. This custom and the privilege of the law resulted in congesting in the central reserve cities a part of every dollar deposited in any bank of the United States.

Accordingly a large part of the reserves of the country were redeposited in New York and there put out on "call loans" collateraled by stock-exchange securities. It followed:

(a) That the reserves of the country instead of being securely locked in bank vaults were subjected to the hazard of the stock-exchange gambling pit.

(b) That any considerable break in stock-exchange values would compel the New York banks to demand immediate payment, and in case of default to sell upon the market the stock-exchange collaterals by them held. Frequently this broke the market and produced stock-exchange panics.

Stock-exchange convulsions often forced one or more New York banks to close. An event of that nature always sent a shiver of dread throughout the country. Immediately banks having large reserves in New York would, in order to save themselves, demand a return of deposits. When conditions reached this point there was often no alternative for the New York banks except to decline to meet their obligations, and panic was upon us.

In many instances banks were forced to close while their vaults were literally packed with the very highest class of securities.

With such a banking and currency system in vogue there was not an hour when every prudent banker did not know that a single untoward event might close every bank in the land.

Business men frequently had the experience of being refused accommodation because their bankers found it necessary to hoard in their vaults a large amount of cash to meet some contingency, actual or imaginary. All business was crippled and went halting on crutches. You can no more have a healthy commercial condition with an unsound currency and banking system than you can have a vigorous body along with a diseased heart and a broken down arterial system.

Because of the defects referred to the system repeatedly broke down and the country was swept by devastating panics. While many influences contributed to produce panics, the initial and explosive cause was often so trivial as to be almost unbelievable. An examination of the Aldrich Monetary Commission report warrants the foregoing statements. I invite attention to the causes of the great panics.

PANIC OF 1873.

The country was apparently enjoying a high degree of prosperity. Suddenly a panic was precipitated by the failure of the New York Warehouse & Factory Co. and of Jay Cook & Co.

PANIC OF 1884.

During a period of economic activity Grant & Ward failed for $16,000,000. It was learned that the president of the Second National Bank had stolen $3,000,000 in securities. These two circumstances produced a general run on the banks of New York and a Nation-wide panic.

PANIC OF 1893.

Unlike the other panics, this one was preceded by a period of world financial stringency. Then came the failure of Baring Bros., an English firm. The Philadelphia & Reading companies attempted to corner great bodies of ore lands and went into the hands of receivers. Again a Nation-wide panic ensued.

PANIC OF 1907.

This panic is frequently referred to as the Roosevelt panic. It followed a period of general prosperity. Its immediate cause was the attempt of Heinze to corner the stock of a copper company. Heinze was president of the Mercantile National Bank, and employed that institution to further his copper speculation. Coupled with this was the attempted flotation by Morse of an ice trust. In connection with this enterprise he dishonestly organized certain banks. He was also a director in the Mercantile Bank. When the Heinze and Morse enterprises were exploded, a run was made on the Mercantile National Bank, which also involved the Knickerbocker Trust Co. and other institutions. Within a few hours substantially every national bank in the United States and nearly all the large State banks and trust companies were compelled to suspend payment.

Notice now that these panics, covering a period of 40 years, were all thrust upon the country by causes which, compared with the vast volume of the country's business, were so small as to appear inconsequential.

Not one of the panics could have occurred if a means had been provided whereby currency could have been furnished to banks possessing securities of an absolutely sound character.

It is needless to argue that if small causes produced great panics, still more trivial conditions brought that financial shiver know as "hard times."

Such was the inefficient and dangerous system which the Republican Party for 50 years maintained and bequeathed to the Democratic Party.

(1) The Democratic Party immediately set about the building of a great system of regional banks and the creation of a new currency system. This necessarily involved the expenditure of time, because a banking and currency system can not be created over night.

(2) In order to provide for existing emergencies and such contingencies as might arise before the new banking and currency system could be inaugurated, the Democrats revised the Aldrich-Vreeland Act.

That bill had been a dead letter upon the statute books for six years. It was absolutely unworkable, because both interest charges and the character of securities required were prohibitive. In its entire history the Aldrich-Vreeland Act had never been utilized.

We revised the Aldrich-Vreeland law so that interest charges were reduced to 3 per cent and the character of securities broadened so that money could be obtained upon those collaterals generally held by financial institutions.

These amendments to the Aldrich-Vreeland Act were in force and the Federal Reserve Banking System was in process of creation when the European war suddenly broke upon the world.

I have referred to the small causes which produced panics for 40 years. I now challenge attention to the conditions produced by the European war which was declared on August 2, 1914.

The cotton crop of the South was selling at 14 cents a pound. On the morning of August 2, 1914, it was of the aggregate value of $750,000,000. On the evening of that day cotton had shrunk to 3 cents a pound—a loss of $590,000,000. On the value of this crop depended substantially all of the business and commercial prosperity of that great domain lying south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Calamity did not fall on the South alone. For 60 days practically all shipments of every kind to Europe were discontinued. Our country was under substantially the same kind of embargo as would have been produced had our shores been infested by the war fleets of some puissant enemy.

International exchange was completely disarranged.

All European banks restricted or suspended payments.

The various war powers declared a moratorium upon all debts, public and private, for 30 days, and this period has since been indefinitely extended.

While refusing payment of American demands, European financial houses drew on us for their commercial obligations, and within 10 days' time had taken from us 48 millions in gold.

The belligerent Governments very shortly began invading their metallic reserves and issuing enormous quantities of poorly secured fiat money.

Our markets for many articles were for months cut off and the course of trade interrupted. This condition exists to a large extent to-day. I instance the single fact that our annual trade with Germany declined from $534,713,406 to $14,233,794.

In the single month of August, 1914, our trade with Europe fell off $73,680,854.

On top of this Europe began dumping upon us American securities held abroad. High authority estimates that in the period of 21 months after the war began we were compelled to absorb of these securities $3,500,000,000.

I do not even pause to mention many other great commercial and financial disasters.

All of these untoward events came upon us in a tidal wave without a moment's warning, and yet our financial structure stood like the Rock of Gibraltar.

Prof. Folwell, of the Royal Institution of London, declares this to be "the most astounding financial fact of the war."

I put it to all fair and candid men: What would have happened to that banking system which, in 1873, broke down because of the failure of Jay Cook & Co. if the calamity of cutting off $73,680,854 of trade in one month had occurred? The answer must be: Panic!

What would have happened to that system which, in 1884, broke down because of the failure of Grant & Ward if our commerce with Germany, amounting to $534,713,406 per year, had been instantly stopped? The answer must be: Panic!

What would have happened to that system which, in '93, broke down because of the failure of a single English house and a single American railroad if there had been in one day's time a shrinkage in the value of the cotton crop of $590,000,000, followed by a complete interruption of foreign exchange and a demand within 10 days for $48,000,000 of gold? The answer must be: Panic!

What would have happened to that system which, in 1907, broke down because of the dishonest transactions of three New York speculators if it had been required to absorb $3,500,000,000 of American securities within 21 months? The answer must be: Panic!

What would have happened to the old Republican system if all these calamities had at one time fallen out of a clear sky? Every candid and intelligent man must answer: Panic, ruin, disaster, and financial chaos.

I boldly assert that if it had not been for the wise legislation of the Democratic Party, and the wise and forceful conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury, our financial ship, instead of riding the crest of the waves of the world's troubled ocean of finance, bearing safely a cargo of prosperity, would have foundered upon the reefs of bankruptcy and gone to the bottom.

The Democratic Party, therefore, has the right to claim credit for the prosperity of this hour, because it revolutionized the Republican financial system and substituted stability for instability, soundness for unsoundness, strength for weakness, safety for danger.

By these great acts must the Democratic Party be judged. If they were right, the party is entitled to remain in power. If they were wrong, the fact should be shown. I challenge the champions of the Republican Party in any forum or upon any platform to attack the great banking and currency measure. They have not done so. They will not dare make the attempt.

I challenge their responsible leader to condemn the legislation favorable to labor, to the farmer, to the children. I challenge him to attack our program of national defense. I challenge him to say he favors a return to dollar diplomacy. I challenge him to declare for the repeal of the Clayton antitrust bill, the good-roads bill, the arbitration laws. Should he do so, he will pronounce his political epitaph.

Accordingly, we find him indulging in a species of attack so pusillanimous as to scarce merit serious reply.

Behold the spectacle!

Issuing forth is one heralded as a mighty champion. He bears the accouterments of a hunter in search of big game.

Before him runs SMOOT, "master of the chase"; gaily upon his huntsman's horn he winds "The dirge of the Bull Moose."

By his side, bearers of incense, workers of magic, political conjurers, troop PENROSE and Perkins, Crane and Cortelyou, Guggenheim and Gary, Barnes and Flynn, Schwab and DU PONT, mighty men of valor, skilled workers in steel and powder.

Close on their heels swarm the redoubtable legionaries of the Old Guard. In command, Roosevelt, bearing aloft on gory pike the slaughtered Moose's bleeding head.

Public proclamation is made that the woods are full of political dragons, tigers, and other beasts that devour the people. Boastfully the announcement is made that the assembled champions go forth like knights to slaughter the wicked beasts of prey.

Anxious days and nights pass. The hunters are returning, led by their illustrious chief.

Proudly at arm's length he displays, suspended by the tail, the spoils of the first week of the political chase. It is a diminutive, civil-service, "Durand" chipmunk of questionable antecedents and doubtful reputation. The people pause in wonderment and ask whether, after all, there were no Democratic monsters in the political jungle or whether through his judicial glasses Mr. Hughes was unable to distinguish between root-gnawing rodents and man-eating carnivora.

These great questions of internal policy are now before the American people. They will either be affirmed by the voters in November or they will be reversed. We will go forward building for the people, or we will turn back to the servitude of the big interests. The Democratic Party has written a record of far-reaching acts and policies. If they are mistakes, then they are vital mistakes.

Why, then, does not Candidate Hughes attack this great accomplished legislative program? Why does he avoid the real issues and concern himself with trifles lighter than air, for nearly always his trifles have turned out to be but vapors of the mind?

When great internal policies of Government are to be weighed in the balance of public opinion, why prate of the discharge of a single man among an army of 476,000 Government employees? Why does the mighty Republican protagonist confine himself to complaints about peccadillos unworthy reply? With the exception of a repetition of the old standpat doctrine of protection and an effort to capture the women's vote in the suffrage States, he talks only of the inconsequential, and then he talks in riddles

He fences with toothpicks; his shield is covered with indecipherable hieroglyphics. His sentences are as incomprehensible and doubtful as a Delphi oracle.

The people have the right to know what he means and where he stands.

MEXICAN POLICY.

If we can credit Mr. Hughes with a positive announcement, it is in relation to our Mexican policy. His words must mean that it is the duty of the United States to conquer Mexico. If we do not ascribe that meaning to his criticisms, then his speeches degenerate into a mere carping at what has been done without any suggestion of betterment.

Many people without really pausing to reflect demand the invasion of Mexico, but prudent men, who give the question sound consideration, are likely to reach the following conclusions:

First. Mexico is one-third the size of the United States. It contains a population of seventeen and a half million people, divided as follows: Indians, 85 per cent; Spanish, about 7 per cent; the remaining 8 per cent embraces the English, French, Portuguese, and American residents. Fully 85 per cent of the people can not read or write.

Second. Before President Wilson was inaugurated the Government of Mexico completely broke down. A number of marauding bands, headed by chiefs frequently of obscure origin, have for months overrun the country. This condition obtains largely at the present time, although Carranza is apparently extending his authority over large portions of the Republic.

What, then, are the possible alternatives presented to America? It seems to me they are all embraced in the following:

First. To invade Mexico, scatter the present armies and bands of men, slaughter a few thousand people, and retire. This would be absurd, because the moment we withdraw from Mexico present conditions in an aggravated form will spring up.

Second. To invade Mexico and remain until the Mexicans under our protection set up a form of government and then to withdraw. This proposition is likewise impracticable, because the moment we withdraw the Mexican people will overthrow any government which has been set up by a foreign power. They will do to that government exactly what they did to the Government of Maximilian in 1867.

Third. We might invade Mexico and take and hold the country as a conquered province. This would require us—

(a) To maintain in Mexico an army of not less than a quarter of million men for an indefinite period of time; probably not less than 20 or 25 years.

(b) It would ultimately mean the incorporation into our citizenry of 17,500,000 people, 85 per cent of whom are Indians, and fully 85 per cent of whom can not read or write, and all of whom are alien to us in language, in blood, and in the character of their civilization.

(c) We would do all this largely for the benefit of American concessionaires who have acquired by honest or dishonest methods large grants from now deposed authorities.

Fourth. The fourth alternative is to protect our borders; to unite with the strongest and most civilized of the Mexican leaders; to aid the Mexicans in gradually establishing order and authority; to exhibit toward the Mexican people a spirit of friendly cooperation rather than a desire to conquer and crush; and in this way to aid in the final establishment of a stable government in Mexico. This is the policy we have been pursuing. It is in fact the only sensible policy.

A consideration which makes the moderate policy the more advisable is found in the fact that all of the Latin-American States would regard a conquest of Mexico by the United States as indicative of a desire on our part to dominate the entire Western Hemisphere. It would create in them the fear that we intend to ultimately absorb their several countries. Such a feeling would make for us enemies upon the Western Hemisphere, where we should have only friends.

EUROPEAN POLICY.

The past 24 months embrace the most tragic period of all time. The spirits of Attila the Hun and Alaric the Visigoth, armed with swords of flame, ride the tempest of passion. The tender soul of Christianity has been cast out by the fiends of cruelty.

Fourteen great nations are seized with the insanity of war. Half the world is mad with the lust of conquest or frenzied with the despair of impending defeat. The earth shakes with the shock of conflict. The temple of reason quakes to its foundations. The combatants regard not the precepts of Christ. Why, then, obey the laws that man has made? They break the treaties they themselves have signed. Why, then, give heed to hoary precedents? Who stands with back to the wall and dagger at his throat stops not to ask, What are the rules of the contest? The old barbaric instinct of self-defense dominates. He strikes and does not pause to think what are the rights of others.

When one's home is aflame he seeks to rescue wife and weans, even though his neighbor's dwelling may be scorched. When the hunter finds himself hunted the chase becomes a tragic thing. When the fear of destruction supplants the hope of conquest; when the field of glory is turned into a shambles covered with the corpses of a nation's dead; when the sun which rose upon a sky of triumph is setting in the bloody ocean of defeat, kings do not always pause to think of neutral nations' rights. The frenzy of terror makes them fight blindly. They behold their throne tottering, their lands invaded, their cities sacked, their people slaughtered, and they strike when and how they may. They do not stop to consider the innocent bystander. The rage of despair is more cruel than the stroke of death.

Fourteen nations at war! A battle line flung across the space of a thousand miles! Thirty million men engaged in the work of killing! They burrow like rats beneath the ground. They fight like harpies from the sky. They employ all weapons from the clubs of savages to poisonous gases distilled by learned chemists.

A hundred thousand cannon night and day bellow their awful maledictions. The air is filled with missiles that go shrieking messages of frightful death.

Behind the crimson lines are the homes of the contenders. Each man is sure that he is fighting for wife and child, for fireside's safety, and for country's honor. Each fears his nation's enemy may plant a conqueror's foot upon the land where he was born and reared. Each feels that all the powers of darkness have made league with enemies who would destroy his liberties. Each fights the battle of courageous despair.

Under such circumstances reason is dethroned, and madness makes mockery and jest of law and precedent.

With such conditions has President Wilson been compelled to contend. But three possible courses were open.

The first—To stand aside in pusillanimous cowardice, neither asserting our rights nor protesting against our wrongs.

The second—To treat every injury inflicted upon us by these half-frenzied nations as a deliberate and vindictive insult offered for the purpose of offending against our dignity and sovereign rights. To hurl ourselves into the flaming vortex, to mass our armies, to rob millions of homes of millions of boys, to arrest our industrial development, and to slaughter hundreds of thousands of the flower of our youth in a war begun by others over causes with which we are little concerned. We would wage this war against a people whose injuries to us only resulted through their desire to overcome an enemy they both feared and hated.

The third—To vigorously and, if possible, effectively protest, to insist that our rights should be regarded and that reparation for wrongs should be made.

We have chosen this latter course. We have pressed our diplomacy almost to the very bloody edge of war, and we have achieved a wonderful and glorious result.

In every great vital controversy the warring powers have recognized our protests, apologized for wrongs done, rectified their conduct in accordance with our demands, and submitted to the law governing our rights upon the seas.

In those instances where these concessions have not been made the controversies do not involve human life, and are substantially all of that nature for which reparation can be ultimately made in damages. In a word, they are commercial losses and these have almost all been adjusted.

As a result of the policies pursued, what?

America sits upon the throne of peace. Plenty fills her lap. Upon the lips of a hundred million people is heard the music of laughter and song.

Of all the great neutral nations of the world America has been least injured, her rights most thoroughly recognized. We have preserved the Nation's honor and the Nation's peace.

Shall we adhere to this policy? The question is not whether we have achieved all we may have desired, but shall we take the responsibility and be guilty of the unspeakable insanity of leaping into a caldron, which is now filled with the bleeding armies of half the world?

Has Wilson been right or wrong? Have his general policies been in accordance with the interests of America, or should they be changed? If he has been right, then the blessings of the people of America will fall upon him while he lives, and when his life has closed will cluster in benedictions about his tomb. If he has been wrong, then the wrong is immeasurable. It stands above everything else. If he has been right, it dominates all mere mistakes, as Chimborazo doth o'ertop the molehills at its base.

In what respect has the President been wrong? It can not be said he failed to vigorously protest against every infringement of our rights. It can not be claimed he did not exhaust the language of diplomacy in the assertion of those rights.

Beyond what President Wilson has already done, there is left nothing save to drop the pen of diplomacy and take up the sword of war.

The man who challenges Woodrow Wilson's European policy can offer no alternative save that of war. He can tell of no stronger messages which might have been sent unless they were shot from the cannon's mouth.

WILL HUGHES INVOLVE US IN WAR?

In the presence of such an issue as I have described, what does Mr. Hughes say? He assumes the air of a critic. He condemns our European policy. What, then, is to be his policy? Is it not necessarily one of war, or one that may lead to war? What meaning shall we attach to his cryptic utterances?

Speaking of our European policy, Mr. Hughes said:

> We have had a clear and definite mission as a great neutral Nation. It was for us to maintain the integrity of international law and to vindicate our rights as neutrals, to protect the lives of our citizens, their property, and trade from wrongful acts. * * * At least we were entitled the safeguarding of American rights, but this has not been secured. * * * Our diplomacy failed, doubtless because of impaired credit and the manifest lack of disposition to back words with action.
> Had this Government by the use of both informal and formal diplomatic opportunities left no doubt that when we said "strict accountability" we meant precisely what we said, and that we should unhesitatingly vindicate that position, I am confident that there would have been no destruction of American lives by the sinking of the Lusitania. There we had ample notice. Furthermore, we knew the situation, and we did not require specific notice. Instead of whittling away our formal statements by equivocal conversations, we needed the straight, direct, and decisive representations which every diplomat and foreign office would understand. I believe that in this way we should have been spared the repeated assaults on American lives. Moreover, a firm American policy would have been strongly supported by our people.

Now, what does this language mean?

> *It was for us to maintain the dignity and integrity of international law, to protect the lives of our citizens, their property, and trade. We have had brave words and a series of notes, but the lives have been destroyed. What does it avail to use some of the strongest words known in diplomacy? * * * It is not words, but the strength and resolution behind them that count. * * * Had this Government left no doubt that when we said "strict accountability" we meant it, the Lusitania would not have been sunk.*

There is but one construction. The words of Hughes mean that the words of Wilson should have been backed by acts.

There was but one act possible, and that was war. Moreover, when Mr. Hughes employs this language he means, as is shown clearly by its context, war against the German nation.

But there is another way to judge his utterances.

"A man is known by the company he keeps." A man's formal political utterances are always to be construed in the light of his acts and the acts and words of his associates and followers. What, then, are the facts?

Within a few weeks after Germany had invaded Belgium Theodore Roosevelt declared that it was the duty of America to take sides against Germany. Later he wrote a series of magazine articles which he finally compiled in the form of a book published last February. In that book not once, but fifty times, he proceeds by this line of argument. He asserts:

1. That treaties are the supreme law of our land.

2. That we entered into the Hague convention which he affirms is a treaty and, therefore, the supreme law of the United States.

3. That by that treaty all nations signing bound themselves not to invade the territory of a neutral country.

4. That when Germany invaded Belgium—a neutral country—it broke the supreme law of the United States, to-wit, the treaty.

5. That no nation can permit its supreme law to be trampled upon, and that it was our duty to resist such breach of our law.

In a word, he plainly asserts that it was the business of our Government to have made war upon Germany, the very hour Germany invaded Belgium. I shall quote a little later some of his specific utterances.

At the meeting of the Republican national committee at New York last spring Elihu Root made a speech denouncing the President for "pusillanimous conduct" in his negotiations with Germany, and repeated literally all of Roosevelt's arguments which I have above quoted.

The same doctrine was later in substance asserted by HENRY CABOT LODGE. On top of all it may be truthfully said that the leading Republicans in the Senate and of the United States have repeatedly, persistently, and relentlessly denounced the President because his policies were not of the Roosevelt kind.

You ask what this has to do with Mr. Hughes? I answer: The great Progressive Party met in convention. It had followed the leadership of Roosevelt with a blind fidelity. It assembled for the purpose of naming him as its candidate for President. The Republican convention sat in the same city on the same day. Roosevelt frequently declared that the principles of the Progressive Party were as dear to his heart as they had ever been, but that there was one great overmastering question in the presence of which all other matters, however important, sank into insignificance. He affirmed that this question was our foreign policy. He declared that he would not accept a nomination at the hands of the Progressive Party if the Republican Party would nominate a man whose foreign policies were in accordance with his own. He refused steadfastly to either accept or reject the nomination of Progressives until he had satisfied his mind upon the one important question, and then in order to settle that question he met Mr. Hughes.

Let me now trace the Roosevelt utterances and his negotiations with Hughes to their final consummation.

In his book, "Fear God and Take Your Own Part," published last February, there are so many declarations similar to the ones I am about to quote that it would take hours to reproduce them. I content myself with two or three samples:

> The Hague conventions were part of the supreme law of our land. They included a guaranty from Germany that she would not violate the territory of Belgium and a guaranty by Belgium that if an attempt was made to violate her territory she would fight. Germany broke her solemn promise to us and offended against the supreme law of our land. Belgium kept her solemn promise. * * * We shirked our duty by failing to take any action; by announcing through the President that we would be neutral in thought as well as in deed between the oppressor and the oppressed (p. 36).

Again, he says:

> It is the allies who are dedicated to the cause and are fighting for the principle * * * that the government of the people shall not perish from the face of the earth. We have stood aside and not ventured to say a word, far less to take any action for the right or against the wrong (p. 47).

And, again:

> It is a wicked thing to be neutral between right and wrong, i. e., between Belgium and Germany (pp. 26–27).

What he means is shown in this sentence:

> A nation is not wholly admirable unless it will go to war for a great ideal wholly unconnected with an immediate material interest (p. 56).

He concludes by demanding—> universal military service and a Navy greater than hitherto dreamed of.

What has this to do with Mr. Hughes? I answer, "Everything."

As already stated, he sent a message to the Progressive convention to the effect that if Mr. Hughes's statements, made to the committee sent to ascertain whether he would accept the Republican nomination, were not satisfactory, they could confer with him and he would consider accepting the Progressive nomination. Later, and on June 27, Col. Roosevelt accepted an invitation to dinner with Mr. Justice Hughes, to be held on June 29, and at that time gave out this statement:

> In my judgment the nomination of Mr. Hughes meets the conditions set forth in the statement of the Progressive national committee, issued last January, and in my own statements. * * *

> No good American, whatever his ancestry or creed, can have any feeling except scorn and detestation for those professional German-Americans who seek to make the American President in effect a viceroy of the German Emperor.
> They represent that adherence to the politico-racial hyphen which is the badge and sign of moral treason to the Republic. I have singled these men out for specific denunciation, and assuredly I am certain that that candidate is incapable of being influenced by the evil intrigues of these hyphenated Americans.

On June 29 Col. Roosevelt and Mr. Hughes were at dinner together for two and a half hours. At that time Mr. Hughes stated:

> I wanted to talk with Col. Roosevelt fully with respect to the issues of the campaign and asked him to dine with me so that we might have that opportunity. He dined with me to-night, and we had a very delightful interview. We talked very fully over all matters and were in complete accord. The evening was a very pleasant one.

After this interview and on August 3, speaking in the light of that conference, Col. Roosevelt said of Mr. Hughes:

> I recognize his high qualities, which must recommend him to the esteem of the whole world, particularly to the sympathy of the allies. * * * He always translates his words into deeds. * * * He certainly would never have suffered the Government of the United States, as one of the signatories to the Hague treaty, to pass over without protest the violation of Belgium's neutrality by Germany. He would never write two notes on the same offense. He would perhaps issue a warning, but afterwards he would act according to his conscience and for the honor of civilization. This is what he certainly will do, if, as I sincerely hope, he becomes the President of the United States.

Omitting all reference to the coarse and brutal verbal attack upon the German-American citizens, I direct attention to the fact that Mr. Hughes states that he and Mr. Roosevelt "talked very fully over all matters and were in complete accord."

"In complete accord" with whom? With a man who has persistently insisted we should have intervened against Germany when she invaded Belgium. In complete accord with a man who because the President did not make war on Germany when she invaded Belgium refers to him as a "mollycoddle," a man of "weasel words." In complete accord with a man who falsely asserts that we were bound by treaty to engage in the conflict against Germany.

In complete accord with a man who demands "universal military service and war preparation upon a scale not hitherto dreamed of."

If Roosevelt had merely visited Hughes and afterwards betrayed the Progressive Party, we might have concluded that Hughes had in no manner committed himself, and that Roosevelt had simply employed the meeting as an excuse for sneaking back into the Republican Party. But we have Mr. Hughes's affirmation:

> We talked very fully over all matters and were in complete accord.

If the policy of Roosevelt, which Mr. Hughes has thus accepted, which he has never in his two weeks of campaign either modified, supplemented, or retracted, nay, which he, in fact, indorses in his speech of acceptance, had for the past 24 months been the policy of this Government, war with Germany would have been inevitable. If such a war had been waged, it would have been at the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of lives and countless treasure. If we had prevailed, we could have obtained nothing more from Germany than an apology for wrongs committed and a promise to respect our rights in the future. All this has been achieved without the expenditure of a dollar of money or the loss of a single drop of blood.

If Mr. Hughes is to be elected to the Presidency on this issue, then it is notice to all the world that America has repudiated Wilson's policy of peace for the Roosevelt-Hughes policy of war.

Even if war should never come the result of such an election would be to convince all the world that the only neutral nation that has dealt with Germany with patience and fairness is now prepared to take a different course, and that at any moment that nation may join the enemies of Germany. The mere fact that such an impression should go out to the world would be in itself a serious blow to the cause of Germany.

But if, unhappily, Mr. Hughes should be elected and carry out the policies to which I think I have fairly proven he is committed, then what will result to our country? We will engage in a bloody war against a nation that has steadfastly remained our friend for a hundred years.

If we embark on such an undertaking, we can not content ourselves with a warfare of words. We will have passed from the realm of diplomacy into the field of battle. We must not only mass armies, but great enough armies to crush Germany. We must stop the wheels of our factories, which are now engaged in making the instruments and articles of peace and transform them into vast plants for the forging of cannon and the creation of deadly missiles. We must issue bonds in the billions. We must arrest our industrial development. We must stop the march of our prosperity. We must mobilize an army of millions, cover the ocean with fleets of transports and load them with boys taken from every American home. We must send them to foreign lands to die beneath foreign skies. We must invade the soil of Germany. We must engage in the slaughter of German citizens by the thousands. We must drain our own veins in order that Germany may bleed the more.

All this to gain that which diplomacy has already gained. The bloody harvest is to be gathered, to what purpose? To help crush a nation, millions of whose sons and daughters dwell in our land and love our flag. We are to do all this to help destroy a people who lead in art, in poetry, in music, in philosophy, in science, and whose sons are dying with that heroic courage which is seldom manifested save by those who believe they are fighting for home, for liberty, and for life.

Let the issue be not misunderstood. We know, the world knows, that Woodrow Wilson will maintain the peace unless the Nation's honor is assailed. Thoughtful men know that a President advised by Roosevelt, in accord and agreement with Roosevelt, will stir up war if war be possible.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has referred to the criticism made by Col. Roosevelt of the present administration because it did not intervene when Germany invaded Belgium. That criticism by President Roosevelt was based upon his construction of the second Hague convention, which gives to neutral powers the right to offer their good offices or mediation to States which are at variance. An examination of The Hague convention shows that it gives the right to intercede, but nowhere makes it the duty of the signatory powers to so intercede. Col. Roosevelt has always insisted it was our duty to vigorously protest against Germany's invasion of Belgium, but he has always failed to call the attention of the country to the resolution of ratification of that treaty passed by the United States Senate. I want, in this connection, to read merely a paragraph from that resolution. It is dated April 2, 1908. I read as follows:

Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to apply to a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Clearly the only construction that can be placed upon this resolution of ratification is that under such circumstances as accompany the invasion of one European country by another this country was under no obligation whatsoever to intervene. The resolution conclusively serves notice on all the powers signing the convention that it must not be so construed as to involve us in entangling alliances with foreign powers. President Wilson was right in not interfering, and Col. Roosevelt is wrong in asserting that it was our duty to intervene.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, not only is it true, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, whom I thank for his contribution, that we expressly excluded ourselves from obligation to take part in the controversies of European powers, but if we had ever signed a treaty binding ourselves to do that which Roosevelt says we are obligated to do, namely, to go to any part of the world and enforce the rights of other nations, however remote from us, and enforce all such rights as they have under The Hague convention, then the men who bound us to such a treaty would have been guilty of the most unjustifiable act ever perpetrated since Benedict Arnold sought to betray the cause of the Colonies. Any administration that would have dared to sign such a treaty would, if the public had ever discovered it, have been incontinently kicked from power.

The whole proposition advanced by Roosevelt is, of course, untenable. It is simply the ground that is sought by those who really desire some excuse to interfere in this war against Germany.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Missouri——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the Senator from Missouri concluded his remarks?

Mr. REED. I have; yes, sir.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the Senator going to speak further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yielded to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] for a question. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to offer, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, an article from the New York Times, which was contributed on the 3d of December, 1915, by Homer B. Hulbert, giving an account of Mr. Roosevelt's action in the case of Korea when that nation was invaded and attacked by Japan, in which instance Mr. Roosevelt was asked to interfere precisely as he now criticizes Mr. Wilson for not interfering in the case of Belgium, and I ask that the article be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed that the article is to be published in connection with the statement just made by the Senator, otherwise I should have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

ROOSEVELT AND KOREA—JAPAN'S ATTACK COMPARED TO THE GERMAN INVASION OF BELGIUM.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., December 3, 1915.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

It is rather amusing to read Mr. Roosevelt's diatribe on the present administration, as given in his letter to Mr. Dutton, published in your December 1 issue, because the words he there uses are even more applicable to himself and his own acts in 1905. He there speaks of Korea as unable to hold her own against Japan.

Precisely as Belgium lies between two great powers, Germany and France, so Korea lies between Japan and Russia. Precisely as Germany wanted to cross Belgium to strike France, so Japan wanted to cross Korea to strike Russia. Precisely as Germany guaranteed Belgium's independence if she would allow this, so Japan guaranteed Korea's independence if she would allow it. Precisely as Germany broke the neutrality of Belgium, so Japan ignored her obligations and trampled upon Korea; or, rather, Japan's acts were far worse than Germany's, for Korea consented to let Japan use her territory to strike at Russia, and in spite of this Japan destroyed Korea.

Precisely as it was the duty of America to protest against the violation of Belgium's neutrality, so it was our duty to protest against Japan's encroachments in Korea. Precisely as the present administration failed to pr test in the case of Belgium, so Roosevelt failed to protest against the rapacity of Japan in 1905.

But not only so. The case is far stronger than this. At the moment when Japan was just crouching to spring at the throat of Korea the Emperor of Korea called upon President Roosevelt to keep America's treaty with him—a treaty which held in its first clause the promise that if Korea were endangered by any third party this Government would use its good offices to effect an amicable arrangement. Roosevelt refused to read or even to receive the written message sent to him from the Emperor of a friendly power with which we were supposedly on friendly relations. This written message was taken to the State Department, but the Secretary of State refused to receive it for 48 hours. Meanwhile Japan, at the point of the sword, had forced her "protectorate" upon Korea, President Roosevelt had hurriedly acknowledged that seizure without a word of warning to the Korean Government, nor a word to the Korean Legation in Washington, and had cabled to our legation to get out of Korea. The State Department then offered to see the written message from Korea; and the writer has in his possession a note from the Secretary of State saying that the message is "too late." It was there 48 hours before President Roosevelt took action and he knew its contents, for one of his secretaries at the White House told me so with his own lips.

When that written message was handed to the Secretary of State he leaned over the table and said to the envoy of the Emperor: "Do you want us to get into trouble with Japan?" This he said as Roosevelt's Secretary of State; and it shows the cowardly state of mind to which the administration was reduced by the distant possibility of a clash with Japan. We did not dare to assert our treaty rights nor live up to our treaty obligations.

The last person in the world to complain of international timidity is Theodore Roosevelt.

HOMER B. HULBERT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has been recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, my only observation was to be addressed to the Senator from Missouri, but the Senator from Missouri having concluded his address——

Mr. REED. I did not intend to yield the floor if the Senator from Illinois desired to ask me a question or to make any comment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a feature of this subject that I feel at this time should be considered; that is, that there seems to be a misapprehension as to our having signed any treaty at The Hague which involved us at all to maintain the neutrality of Belgium. The statement is constantly made by Col. Roosevelt, however, altogether under a misapprehension of the fact. There is no agreement and there never has been any agreement made by this Government concerning maintenance by us of the neutrality of Belgium. There has been no signature of this Government, no exercise of any agency on the part of this Government at any time or at any place concerning the maintenance of the neutrality of Belgium.

Col. Roosevelt himself has made the open statement—and correctly—that there was no obligation of the United States to enter into any conflict whatever touching the maintenance of the neutrality of Belgium. He contends, however, that our interposition should have been based upon the moral ground.

I simply wish to introduce this suggestion, not that I could fortify so able an address as that which the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has made nor add to the very pertinent suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], but to clarify history and to have it now understood that there never was and is not now in existence any compact by this Government respecting the neutrality of Belgium.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know of no one in the United States who denies the fact that prosperity exists in the United States, and I know of no one, Democrat or Republican, who does not know the reason of that prosperity. I was very much surprised to hear the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in which he claimed that the war in Europe had nothing to do with the prosperity existing in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to read him what I said. Of course, if the Senator wants to fight a straw man and set him up himself, well and good, but I did not make that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator state what he did say.

Mr. REED. I will find it and read it to the Senator, as I read it from manuscript.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator made a statement to that effect not only in one place but in two or three places.

Mr. REED. Oh, I made it in one place.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I know the Senator did, and he also made it more than once. The Senator further stated that the exportation of munitions of war only amounted to 6 per cent of our exportations.

Mr. REED. I will read the Senator what I did say:

I frankly concede that in seeking to arrive at the cause of the present unparalleled prosperity the influence of the European war must be taken into account.

But I confidently assert:

I. That but for the wise legislation and administration of the Democratic Party the war would have engulfed our country in the most devastating panic of history.

II. That it is solely because of wise Democratic legislation and administration we are able to embrace the opportunities afforded by the war.

Those are the propositions I made; those are the propositions I proved; and those are the propositions that no amount of fulmination will wipe out.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I will allow the statement which has just been read by the Senator to speak for itself, and let those who read his speech judge as to what he meant by the many statements made by him.

Mr. President, the greater part of the Senator's speech was designed to impress the people of this country with the idea that it was the laws that had been passed by the Democratic Party which had brought to this country the prosperity we have to-day. The Senator said that of our exports but 6 per cent were munitions of war. Why, Mr. President, an editorial in the New York Times, a Democratic paper, only the other day made the statement that three-quarters of our $4,000,000,000 of exports is war trade. Our exports were not $6,000,000,000, as the Senator stated; they were a little over $4,000,000,000, which is an immense trade.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, I wish the Senator would talk about something I said and not something he imagines I said. I never said our exports were $6,000,000,000. I quoted the exact figures.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, then, if the Senator will turn to the statement that he made and will read it, as he did before, he will find that he said our export trade was $6,000,000,000. I do not expect to speak more than five minutes, and if the Senator will let me conclude I will be very much obliged.

Mr. REED. I will apologize to the Senator for having interrupted him——

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator need not do so.

Mr. REED. I assumed the Senator wanted to speak accurately about what I had said and not about something he had misunderstood.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to speak accurately, and I will ask the Senator to refer to what he said. I think the Senator said our exports were $6,000,000. I may be mistaken——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Utah just made a mistake when he said $6,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I said $6,000,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I heard what the Senator said. He said "six million dollars."

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that I intended to say "billion."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It did not reach our ears as "billion," and nobody on this side heard anything but "million," and that is what the Senator said, no matter what he intended to say.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia may know better what I said than I do myself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I listened to what the Senator said, and I know what he said.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think it is proper——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to set him right?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. I have a table right here. It has been checked over by the department, and is absolutely accurate. I read from it. I said that our total foreign business was $6,531,683,446. I said I have a table showing the exports and imports which I will not take the time to read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just a moment—and that table shows——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's figures are perfectly correct, if the imports are included with the exports.

Mr. REED. I did take them both, and I told the Senator that the exports and imports were set out and that I was giving the trade total.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may have skipped over the import part of the table in his reading.

Mr. REED. No; I did not skip anything. I was reading from a manuscript.

Mr. SMOOT. It makes no difference so far as that is concerned. Everybody knows that the exportations of this country have been unparalleled in the history of the country, and everybody knows the great majority of those exportations are made up of munitions of war and articles that are purchased on account of the war.

I thought I would call attention, Mr. President, and that this would be a very appropriate time to do so, to the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, made on January 5, 1916, found in column 2 of page 584 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where he was opposing a bill to place an embargo on munitions of war. Among other things, the Senator said:

Enforce such a doctrine and the price of every horse and mule in America will fall to about 50 per cent of its value; likewise cattle and hogs will go to about 50 per cent of their value; all the products of our farms and mines and factories will go to about 50 per cent of their value; and this country will be engulfed in a financial and industrial catastrophe such as the world has never seen.

That was the opinion of the Senator from Missouri on January 5, 1916. If an embargo on munitions of war was in force I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the statement made on January 5 by the Senator would be correct. There is no one who does not know that the prices that the farmer is receiving for his wheat and his other products are exceedingly high and the result of the war, and if our Democratic friends think they can mislead the American people by claiming that the present prosperity is due to the tariff law, or any other law passed by this administration, they are going to be awfully deceived.

Statistics compiled by the present administration of the Department of Commerce show that we were enjoying industrial prosperity at the time the Democratic administration came into power. The statistics are confirmed by such commercial institutions as Bradstreet's Review. They are confirmed by the record of railroads, banks, and manufacturing institutions. Those records also conclusively show that we suffered a decline which grew into a deplorable industrial depression in the 10 months which followed the enactment of the Democratic tariff law. By the enactment of that law our markets were throw open to foreign competitors; our productive industries were curtailed; and our exports consequently reduced.

The outbreak of the war was what gave us a new market for our commodities and cut off the competition which was rapidly bringing us to industrial ruin.

Mr. President, before this debate ends I am going to call the attention of the Senate to the figures that will prove it without any question of doubt.

In that brief statement by the Democratic Senator from Missouri we have confirmation of what the Republican Party has asserted, that our partially restored prosperity has been due entirely to the war in Europe. If placing an embargo on exports of horses and mules would cut the value of every horse and mule in America 50 per cent; if such an embargo would have the same effect on the value of cattle and horses; and if all the products of our farms and mills and factories would go to about 50 per cent of their value; and if this country would be engulfed in a financial and industrial catastrophe such as the world has never seen, then the conclusion is inevitable that our abnormal industrial situation is due entirely to the war in Europe.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the New York Times says that three-fourths of our $4,000,000,000 of exports is war trade. Secretary Redfield and his echoes try to make the public believe that only a small percentage of the exports, those confined largely to explosives, are the result of war. That is a ridiculous statement and fools no one of sense. But the fact that three-quarters of the exports are the result of the war, according to the Times, indicates the great change that will take place when the war ends. Our trade with some other countries than those engaged in the war has been increased as the result of that struggle. The Senator from Missouri referred to the immense increase of our exports to neutral countries, and I want to take just a few moments to call attention to some of the results of the war, and also the results of our exportations and importations to and from some of the neutral counties; in fact, I may say, the principal ones.

Our exports to Denmark for the 11 months ending with May of this year were in value $51,449,681. Last year they were over $75,000,000; but in 1914, before the war began, for the fiscal year they were only a little over $14,000,000, showing that the increase is altogether due to the war. The imports for the three years from Denmark varied only a few thousand dollars, being a little over $3,000,000 each year.

We sent over $32,000,000 worth of exports to Greece in the last fiscal year; but for the fiscal year 1914, before the war began, we sent only about $1,000,000 worth.

Exports to Italy have more than quadrupled since the war began, but imports from that country remain about the same.

Exports to Norway have increased six times over since 1914, but imports from that country have declined, thus showing the effects of the war trade.

The imports that came to this country before the war have been deflected in part to the nations at war. Exports to Fortugal were three times greater last year than in 1914. To Russia in Europe they jumped from $28,000,000 in 1914 for the 11 months to $175,000,000 for the 11 months of the last fiscal year. To France the increase was from $152,000,000 to $555,000,000. To Spain the increase was from $28,000,000 to $46,000,000. To the United Kingdom the exports increased from $557,000,000 to $1,352,000,000. The Senator from Missouri called attention to the fact that our exports to Germany have decreased from $550,000,000 to some $14,000,000, claiming that the new financial system of our Government was the cause of that change in our exports not bringing on a panic in this country; whereas to the United Kingdom alone our exportations increased from $557,000,000 to $1,352,000,000. That will give a fair idea of what the war has done for our export trade.

As to Central America, what do we find the conditions to be? To Central American countries our exports in 1915 were less by over $5,000,000 than in 1914, and were only $3,000,000 more in the last fiscal year. That is a part of the world where our trade, relieved to a large extent from European competition, should have shown a vast increase; but the fact that it does not do so, while imports from those countries have increased about $7,000,000, shows the absurdity of the statement put forward by Secretary Redfield in regard to exports.

In the same way, to the British West Indies the exports in 1915 were much less than in 1914, and show only a small increase in the last fiscal year. Exports to Cuba and other West India Islands other than British islands increased some $59,000,000, while the imports from these islands increased over $90,000,000. Exports to Argentina increased some $16,000,000, but the imports from that country increased $60,000,000. Exports to Brazil last year were some $8,000,000 more than in 1914, but the imports from that country were $25,000,000 more, and the total of imports was nearly four times as much as the exports to that country. All admit, Mr. President, that our exports have wonderfully increased, and all must admit that our imports have also increased.

The imports for the last fiscal year amounted to $2,197,883,510, and if there had been paid the same average rate of duty as was paid on imports for the year ending June 30, 1913, under Republican laws—namely, 18 per cent—the amount collected would have been $395,619,031 instead of $211,866,222, the amount collected under the Underwood law, or a gain to the Treasury of the United States of $183,752,809. This additional amount collected from customs, with the saving of the unnecessary and extravagant appropriations of at least $150,000,000 in this year's legislation, which should and could have been saved by the Government, would have amounted to $333,752,809—a sufficient amount to meet the unjust taxes imposed upon the people by the pending revenue bill. And I might proceed, Mr. President, to call attention not only to this year but to every year of this administration, but I will not take the time——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to conclude, Mr. President, by saying this——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a Senator, there is not a Representative, there is not a citizen of the United States, I care not what his political affiliations may be, who does not know that our exportations have been brought about by the wicked, unjustifiable, cruel war in Europe. God grant that the Republican Party will never have to rely for prosperity in this country upon a war such as is raging in Europe to-day. If it had not been for the war, Mr. President, and if trade conditions had continued as they were during the four months preceding the outbreak of the war, no law in this country—unless it were a tariff law protecting the industries of this country—would have saved the country from a panic.

For the four months preceding the war there was a trade balance against the United States of nearly $200,000,000. How many more such periods of four months would have passed until a great majority of our industries would have been wrecked, the wheels of industry would have been stopped, and millions of men would have been out of employment? In fact, Mr. President, there is no question but that in April, May, June, and July before the war there were at least 3,000,000 men out of employment in this country. You could hardly pick up a paper in any of the great cities of the country but that attention was called to the fact, and named, through the committees appointed, the number of men that were seeking employment. Assistance was being asked. I say to my friends upon the other side that if it had not been for this war this country would have suffered distress and financial ruin such as we have seldom seen in this country or any other.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. For a question; yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he does not recognize that the enormous increase in the building permits issued in the 108 leading cities of the Union is not due to any war conditions?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, I do not recognize any such thing, for it is not so. With a $2,000,000,000 balance of trade in our favor, and if our exports continue as they are for a few years longer most of the money of the world will be controlled by America, and there is no law of business that can prevent it. Mr. President, you can not have one line of business prosperous without its affecting other lines of business in the country, and you can not export $4,000,000,000 and only import $2,000,000,000 without the balance of trade in our favor being $2,000,000,000; and that means that foreigners must either send us the gold or send back the securities of this country held by them, or make obligations to this country for the difference.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the statement which the Senator has made may be very extreme in its nature, but, as a matter of fact, it is very difficult to show any relation between the European war and the building boom that is existing throughout the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator has not.

Mr. JONES. I think I have the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah sat down. He would not yield to me while he had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor, and yielded to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JONES. I think I will resume the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor and yielded to the Senator from Colorado. He declines to yield further.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator wants to ask a question, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to read just a few statistics which it seems to me ought to convince anybody that prosperity is here, and not only here but that it is not caused by the war. Of course there have been some acceleration caused by the sale of munitions; there is no doubt about that; but to attribute all of the prosperity conditions that exist in this country to the existence of a war in Europe it seems to me would be absolutely absurd. The fact that the 108 principal cities of the Union, scattered over the country from one end to the other, had an increase in their building operations of from 24 to 32 per cent this year over last year and a still greater increase over the conditions of 1914 seems to me to be conclusive proof of my statement.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the building permits of the 108 leading cities of the Union for May, 1916, were $113,904,515, as compared with $86,469,129 for May, 1915. That is an increase of 32 per cent. How it can be charged that that is due to the fact that somebody sold some munitions of war to Europe, especially when we have been sending millions and millions of dollars over there to buy their bonds, I do not understand. It does not seem to me that the Senator's position is at all logical.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I want to ask how long the Senator from Colorado expects to proceed with this?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will quote just one more set of figures.

Mr. JONES. Then I will yield to the Senator; but I hope the Senator from Utah will simply allow the Senator from Colorado to get his figures in here.

Mr. SMOOT. What I want to ask the Senator is this——

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Utah can not convince the Senator from Colorado and that Senator can not convince the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator admits that this vast amount of money is made out of munitions of war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not all of it; no.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator admits, however, that a vast amount of money has come to this country in payment for these munitions of war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, some of it has. There is no doubt about that, and there is no doubt that that is an element which enters into the fact of prosperity.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, what will they do with the money? Will they keep it in their pockets? Will they bury it? Or will they invest it and erect buildings? Anybody knows that they will invest it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President, the principal thing that they have been doing is simply increasing the munition plants and putting their money into them; but when people go out to Salt Lake City, Utah, or Denver, Colo., and put in money in the way of building there to such an extent that the building returns show that there was nearly 100 per cent increase in Denver recently, it seems to me to be quite plain that it has only a very remote connection with the question of whether or not money has been paid to munition factories of this country.

Now, let me quote some figures and then I will close. We find that for the five months of 1916, beginning with January 1 and closing with June 1, the building permits issued in the 108 principal cities of the United States amounted to $393,018,536 as against $317,373,988 for the corresponding period last year, or an increase of 24 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it would be more than that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And when you take into consideration the fact that the returns of the bank clearings of the various cities in the Union showed an increase last week of from 7 per cent to 69 per cent in every city in the Union except Albany, N. Y., it demonstrates that this prosperity is not confined to the Atlantic coast, where the munition factories are, but is scattered throughout the entire country where commerce and great industries exist.

I thank the Senator from Washington for his courtesy.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator just let me ask consent to have an article printed in the RECORD?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I have here an article from the New York World, which is generally supposed to be advocating the reelection of Mr. Wilson, entitled "The cause of prosperity: Record-breaking profits of war have made the United States rich." I should like to have it read, but I do not want to impose on the courtesy of the Senator from Washington, so I will ask to have it put in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that, of course, we have to object to these unless they are read.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator let it be read, then? It will take only a minute.

Mr. JONES. I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has something he wants to put in, too.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we had better let them both go in without stopping to read them. I wanted to put in the RECORD, in connection with the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the 10 questions which the newspaper men propounded to Hon. Charles E. Hughes, but if we have got to stop to read them I will not do so.

Mr. JONES. I do not want them to go in as a part of my speech.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Washington has been so courteous in yielding that I would not read them if he would let me.

Mr. PENROSE. That does not pertain to the discussion; but mine is pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is entirely pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. Anything is pertinent, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, I think, is wise enough to know that no newspaper men, 10 or otherwise, or anyone else, can ask Gov. Hughes questions that he is to take up all of his time in the campaign with answering.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I did not say that he was to take up all of his time.

Mr. SMOOT. You can not place Mr. Hughes on the defensive. He is not going to be placed there; and as long as you people are on the defensive, we are going to keep you there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We will see about that, Mr. President. I am not surprised that the Senator from Utah is sensitive.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not sensitive at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not take up the time of the Senator from Washington, though.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in view of the request of the Senator from Washington, and with the further statement that it is not to establish a precedent to be hereafter followed, I have no objection to putting them both in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is granted, then.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And mine, too?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia also requests to have certain matter put in the RECORD. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree with the Senator from Utah that it is not good practice, but I did not want to interrupt the Senator from Washington to read these questions.

The matter submitted by Mr. PENROSE is as follows:

[From the New York World.]

THE CAUSE OF PROSPERITY—RECORD-BREAKING PROFITS OF WAR HAVE MADE THE UNITED STATES RICH.

The Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000 floated in this market a year ago rested wholly on the joint credit of the two Governments, and the proceeds were equally divided between them. The present additional British borrowing of $250,000,000, like the recent additional French borrowing of $100,000,000, is further protected by collateral security of American and Canadian stocks and bonds and the bonds of a number of neutral Governments of a market value 20 per cent in excess of the loan.

This brings the total British war borrowings in the American market up to $500,000,000. Canada's borrowings here since the war began total $120,000,000. Some $430,000,000 has been loaned to France, $260,000,000 to Russia, $25,000,000 to Italy, $10,000,000 to Germany, and $27,000,000 to neutral European countries. The grand total of European war loans in this market to date is $1,422,000,000.

Since January 1, 1915, we have sold abroad $2,972,000,000 more of merchandise than we have bought abroad. We have so far received in payment for this amazing trade balance these foreign evidences of debt to the amount of $1,422,000,000. We have received in gold a net sum of over $600,000,000. There accordingly remains to July 1, last, an unsettled balance of $950,000,000, which probably in most part represents the amount of foreign-held American securities sold here in the open market during that time, additional to the very large amounts sold before the war broke out.

Our net foreign debt two and a half years ago was around $5,000,000,000. It can not be half that figure to-day, and the balance is melting away rapidly under the continuing vast excess of exports. So swift a rise of the Nation from a debtor to a creditor position would be beyond all belief were not the facts so clearly beyond dispute.

The matter submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia is as follows:

G. O. P. NOMINEE ASKED TO MAKE POSITION CLEAR—PROFESSIONAL WRITERS ADDRESS OPEN LETTER TO MR. HUGHES AND PUT PERTINENT QUESTION UP TO THE CANDIDATE—SPECIFIC ANSWERS ARE REQUESTED BY WRITERS—TOLD HE HAS NOT OFFERED A SINGLE CONSTRUCTIVE SUGGESTION SO FAR.

NEW YORK, August 2.

On behalf of a committee of distinguished American writers, the executive group of which met to-day at the Hotel Biltmore, George Creel gave out the following open letter:

To the Hon. CHARLES E. HUGHES:

The professional writers who sign this letter have small interest in parties but a very deep interest in democracy. It is our hope, through this voluntary association, to assist in the promotion of honest educational discussion in order that fundamental issues may not be decided in prejudice and ignorance.

WILSON'S BELIEFS KNOWN.

Mr. Wilson's beliefs have been expressed in law and in declared policies. He has made an open record by which he may be judged. Wise choice is not possible unless you yourself make equally specific statement of purposes and convictions.

Without intent to offend, we feel justified in charging that in no single public utterance have you filed a bona fide bill of particulars, nor have you offered a single constructive suggestion. Generalities are without value; blanket criticism is worthless.

SPECIFIC STATEMENT ASKED.

What we desire to know, what it is fair that the electorate should know, are the exact details of your disagreement with President Wilson. What has he done that you would not have done, and what has he failed to do that you would have done or propose to do? Honesty and patriotism demand that you put yourself upon record in such manner as to permit people to judge you as they are now able to judge President Wilson. For example—

1. Would you have filed instant protest against the invasion of Belgium and backed up that protest with the United States Navy?

2. It is arrant nonsense to talk about action that would have prevented the Lusitania tragedy. The vague advertisement did not appear until shortly before the hour of sailing. The occurrence was one of these things that civilization has made the world regard as incredible. The only honest question is this: Would you have broken relations with Germany at once?

3. Would you have urged upon Congress an embargo upon the shipment of munitions to the allies?

4. Would you urge universal compulsory military service?

QUESTIONED AS TO HUERTA.

5. You are frank in stating that Huerta's m .als were of no concern to America. Does this mean that you would have rec gnized Huerta?

6. As matters stand to-day, would you be in favor of intervening in Mexico?

7. Does your attack upon the Wilson shipping bill mean that you are in favor of ship subsidies?

8. You speak enthusiastically of the rights of the worker. Does this imply that you indorse the Clayton antitrust law and the seaman's bill, or will you urge their repeal?

THE FEDERAL RESERVE LAW.

9. What are your specific complaints against the Federal reserve law?

10. As governor of New York you opposed the income-tax amendment. Does this antagonism persist? Do you or do you not believe in paying for preparedness out of a tax on incomes, inheritances, and munitions?

We agree with you that it is a "critical period"—by far too critical indeed for candidates to talk in terms of office seeking rather than in the simple, earnest language of definite Americanism.

Respectfully,

Chenery, George Creel, James Forbes, Frederick C. Howe, Gilson Gardner, Frederick Stuart Greene, Oliver Herford, Prof. Louis Johnson, Richard Lloyd Jones, Peter D. Kyne, Percy MacKaye, A. J. McKelway, Basil Manley, Meridith Nicholson, Albert Jay Nock, Harvey J. O'Higgins, Charles Johnson Post, Eugene Manlove Rhodes, William McLeod Raine, Boardman Robinson, John Reed, Opie Reed, Edgar Selwyn, William Leavitt Stoddard, Lincoln Steffins, Augustus Thomas, Frank Vrooman, George West.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will permit me, I will say that I should like very much, indeed, to reply to some of the statements made by the Senator from Utah, which to my mind are the most remarkable and the most reckless that I have heard since I have been in the United States Senate, but, of course, I am not going to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Washington if he desires to go on with his speech.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will have an opportunity to do it, I am sure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will have an opportunity to do it, and I will do it, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I imagine there will be abundance of opportunity while we are here to meet all these things, or try to meet them all.

I want to say that I owe an apology to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. When I sought recognition from the Chair a while ago I did not know that he had given notice of his intention to address the Senate at the close of the routine morning business. If I had known that, I would not have sought recognition at all, so I apologize to the Senator for my apparent attempt to get in at that time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the apology is quite unnecessary, because I know the Senator is incapable of doing anything which would be unkind or impolite.

Mr. JONES. That is very kind of the Senator. I assure the Senator I did not want to be.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 6561. An act providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay; and

S. 6839. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6914) to amend section 82, chapter 231, of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5103. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charlestown-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia;

S. 5496. An act to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908;

S. 6369. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6370. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6497. An act for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum;

H. R. 600. An act to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 10251. An act authorizing the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. to make settlement with Crittenden County, Ark., and for other purposes;

H. R. 13835. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian;

H. R. 13926. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.;

H. R. 17375. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910; and

H. J. Res. 292. Joint resolution proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

DEALERS IN TOBACCO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, which was, in line 5, after "following:", to strike out all down to and including "peddlers," in line 9, and insert: "Provided, That manufacturers of, jobbers and wholesale dealers in, manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, and cigarettes, and the agents or salesmen of such manufacturers, jobbers, and wholesale dealers, traveling from place to place, in the town or through the country, and selling and delivering or offering to sell and deliver such products only to dealers, shall not be construed to be peddlers."

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF FOREIGN-BORN AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on July 25, 1916, I introduced in the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all orders issued by his department during the last three years directing the nonemployment of or discriminating between citizens of the United States in connection with the work, activities, and projects carried on by his department.

This resolution passed the Senate July 29 and was at once transmitted to the Secretary of War. Surely there have not been many orders issued covered by the resolution and such orders as have been issued must have been very short, yet almost a month has elapsed and no report has been sent to the Senate. The Secretary of War is probably too busy campaigning on behalf of this administration to discharge public business and comply with the request of the Senate of the United States.

It may be, however, it is not desired that this report should come to the Senate before the adjournment of Congress for reasons that are apparent to all. I have waited patiently, hoping that this report would come in. I have decided to wait no longer and shall state to the Senate my reasons for introducing this resolution, and I trust the people of the country will take note of what has been done by an administration which has so vociferously spoken for an unalloyed Americanism. No political issue ought to arise over patriotism or Americanism. The Democrats are as patriotic as Republicans. They are as truly American as Republicans. A mistaken course or policy, however, is no less disastrous because those who urge it are patriotic. The promotion of an intense, unified Americanism can be an issue when its attainment is made impossible by the blundering of the administration, however good its intentions, and freely conceding the patriotic motives and purposes of the Democratic Party we can justly denounce its conduct and policies as injurious to the Nation, derogative of its interests, and subversive of united and supreme Americanism.

All denounce any American that places the interests of the United States secondary to the interests of any other nation, everybody appeals for and insists upon a united Americanism. The last two years have been a great test of our Americanism. Ours is a complex citizenship. We have been the greatest citizenship melting pot in the world. From the nations at war have been coming to our shores for years thousands of their citizens. They have renounced their allegiance to the land of their birth and have declared their allegiance to our flag and our institutions and have become American citizens.

These citizens, however, must still look with love and affection toward their native land. It would be inhuman to do otherwise. The ties of friendship and kindred must still stir their hearts. "The mystic chords of memory stretch" from millions of human hearts and hearthstones of this land of peace to the bloody battle fields of Europe, and sorrow and anguish fill many an American home for loved ones and kindred who have passed away in the carnage of battles.

This, Mr. President, we can concede without reflecting upon their American allegiance, and we should concede it and we should consider it in times like these.

To these citizens, as well as to those native born, the United States should be first, and its flag should be the only flag to which any part of their allegiance is given. Some seem to treat this as a new thought and a new sentiment. There are those in high places who have seized upon it as if it were a sentiment new and original. They seem to have discovered quite suddenly that it is necessary to proclaim their unalloyed Americanism, and they have insinuated that there are American citizens who are not supremely patriotic and who are not animated by an undivided Americanism. They fail to comprehend that from the time of our birth as a Nation there has been underlying our whole life and activity an earnest and intense patriotism for our country and its institutions, and a supreme belief and trust in its destiny, and that this sentiment is as truly alive in peace as in war and can be depended upon to manifest itself in any hour of need.

In 1886, at a Fourth of July celebration at Decatur, Ill., I made a speech in which I appealed for an intense Americanism and for a whole-hearted patriotism on the part of those who may be given the rights of American citizenship. I was only giving expression to the feeling that lies down deep in the heart of the ordinary American citizen. I then said:

American citizenship is a priceless heritage, bought by the blood and suffering of our forefathers and preserved by the courage, sacrifices, and lives of our fathers. It was the dream of the ancients, the hope of the Middle Ages, and the acme of the present. Conceived in the persecutions of the centuries, born out of the sacrifices and sufferings of the revolution, and preserved by the blood, sacrifices, and courage of the Civil War, it is more priceless than was the Roman toga to the Roman citizen. Those who seek this priceless heritage now should fully realize and understand what it means. They should know:

"What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope."

When we invest them with American citizenship, we do not ask them to forget their fatherland or their motherland. We do not ask them to love their native land less, but we do ask, and we have a right to insist, that they love the country of their adoption more. We do ask that they make the United States and its interests supreme, and we insist that they pay no allegiance to any other flag than our flag. This is a great country, a powerful country, a vast country, but it is not great enough, it is not strong enough, it is not broad enough to sustain any other flag than the Stars and Stripes or any other citizenship than a purely American citizenship.

Those have ever been and are my sentiments. There may be some in our midst who are not animated by this spirit. They are few and they are not confined to any one previous nationality. The great majority of our foreign-born citizens are undiluted Americans, notwithstanding their hearts may be touched by intimate ties from the homes and battle fields of Europe. They have shown their devotion to our country and our flag upon the battle fields of the Republic and their courage has been surpassed by none.

The true conception of Americanism and American citizenship, and the real sentiments of the great mass of our citizens, whether of native or foreign birth, were aptly and eloquently expressed by Dr. C. J. Hexamer in his Flag Day address June 14, 1916, at the Betsy Ross house in Philadelphia. It is short. I am going to read it. It will do us all good:

We Americans have experienced much and some of us have endured much within the last two years, and, as experience is the best teacher, we have all learned many important lessons since the outbreak of the terrible war in Europe. More or less, the whole world is afflicted and suffers. Our own beloved country has at times not been spared intense anxiety, and human sympathies have been aroused, pulling at the very heartstrings of many of our citizens. Every one of the nations in deadly conflict has relatives living among us, and whether they are here in large or small numbers, whether they occupy modest spheres in our national life or whether they hold influential and powerful positions, makes no difference to a true Republican, for every true American's creed is that all men are born free and equal. By becoming an American citizen a man becomes our brother and everyone of us should feel that he is the peer of any potentate on earth. To me to be an American citizen, freely exercising the right of free speech and action, gladly shouldering all the responsibilities to make this a greater and better Nation, is the proudest title any man or woman can acquire in all the world. No matter to whom we American citizens are related or from which nationality our ancestors sprang, we have a perfect right to be proud of the achievements of men of our blood, the part they played in furthering civilization, and what they did in the upbuilding of the American Nation. We Americans should respect every other American citizen, whatever his racial extraction. Since the founding of our Republic we have lived peaceably side by side, and so we should continue in the future, for this has been the secret of our national strength; we have all contributed to the "melting pot" the best that was in our ancestral races and we should continue to do so. Our Constitution grants us, and our flag stands for, the inalienable right of each American, regardless of racial derivation, creed, or color, to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. A stranger now coming to our shores might gain the impression that Old Glory no longer waves over a united American people. A sane statesman endowed with calm judicial judgment a few days ago said:

"This flag means more than association and reward. It is the symbol of our national unity, our national endeavor, our national aspiration. It tells you of the struggle for independence, of union preserved, of liberty and union one and inseparable, of the sacrifices of brave men and women to whom the ideals and honor of this Nation have been dearer than life. It speaks of equal rights, of the inspiration of free institutions exemplified and vindicated, of liberty under law intelligently conceived and impartially administered. There is not a thread in it but scorns self-indulgence, weakness, and rapacity. It is eloquent of our common interests—outweighing all divergences of opinion—and of our common destiny."

All Americans proud of Old Glory and all that for which it stands to-day celebrate "Flay Day." Those of us of German birth or extraction are happy in the knowledge of loyalty and devotion proved upon hundreds of battle fields and thousands of civic contests by the men of our blood since the birth of our Nation to the present day. Our record stands forth proudly and confidently against the attacks of our traducers. We have always as American citizens proved our good citizenship and we and our ancestors in this country have been an honor to the Nation. True Americanism knows no distinction of race or creed and does not take sides with any foreign nation. It demands a true neutrality solely for the defense of American rights and in the best interest of the United States against any aggression, from whichever side it may come. It follows faithfully and loyally where our flag leads. But those who by one or the other motive are pointing to some of their fellow citizens, insinuating that because they are of a birth or an extraction other than themselves they are therefore of a distinct group, and acclaim them deserters to their country's flag, are committing a crime against the life of our body politic and are shaking the very foundations upon which our Republic rests. The embers of mistrust and hate which they, knowingly or ignorantly, tried to blow into flames shall, however, be extinguished by the good sense of the American people—the plain, the common, people, to whom Lincoln once appealed, not in vain, to preserve our Nation. Let us all honestly endeavor to live in peace and harmony, all of us striving with every fiber within us to serve our Nation.

"One flag, one land, one heart, one hand—
Our Nation evermore."

Mr. President, while we have the right to insist upon an undivided allegiance and an undiluted Americanism on the part of those who have had American citizenship conferred upon them, do they not have the right to be treated by the Government as American citizens in the fullest sense of the word? Are they not entitled to be accorded by the Government every right given them under the Constitution? While they should be undiluted Americans, the recognition of their rights as American citizens on the part of the Government should also be undiluted. Can anyone deny this?

Their rights and privileges should be sacredly preserved, protected, and recognized by the Nation that they have sworn to protect. We should be careful in bestowing American citizenship, but when it is bestowed there should be no distinction between American citizens, except those distinctly made in the Constitution itself. Nothing will do more to produce a divided allegiance, nothing will do more to cause a really dangerous hyphenated Americanism, nothing will do more to destroy, weaken, and suppress a real, genuine, and undivided Americanism than the withholding of the rights and privileges of American citizenship by the Government as represented by those in authority.

Mr. President, this administration has repeatedly vigorously denounced hyphenated Americans; it has made the charge that there are those in our midst who, as individuals or through organizations, would injure our country to promote the interests of another nation.

This may be true; but if there are such, they should be named and proper punishment should be meted out to them. Even so, this administration has done more to destroy an undivided Americanism, it has done more to belittle American citizenship, and it has done more to justify hyphenated Americanism than any other agency. It has denied to American citizens the rights and privileges guaranteed them under the Constitution purely on account of their nativity. It has diluted Americanism and has made American citizenship mean to one man one thing and to another something else. It has changed the meaning of American citizenship, and by its acts has declared that American citizenship is not of the priceless character claimed for it. American citizenship should mean exactly the same thing to every citizen, whether inherited or whether conferred. It should mean the same thing to every other American citizen that it means to you and me. Treatment of Americans abroad has brought the blush of shame to every loyal citizen.

Americans have been robbed, pillaged, and murdered abroad, and nothing done about it. Some have denied their American citizenship to claim the protection of another flag in order to save their lives. This is humiliating; this is disgraceful. It has been excused by some on the grounds of unpreparedness. What shall we say of the treatment we have accorded our own citizens here at home in the midst of peace and tranquillity? What protection may we expect abroad when we deny at home to our citizens the rights that are lawfully theirs?

As nearly as I can ascertain, under date of April 24, 1916, the Secretary of War issued an order directing the discharge of certain men in the service of the United States on the U. S. S. Ringgold. Why were these men ordered discharged? Were they inefficient? No. Were they charged with misconduct of any kind? No. Were they dangerous men? No. Had they shown that they were not to be trusted? No. Were they seeking to advance the interests of some other nation above those of the United States? No. Were they aliens? No. They were American citizens. Why were they discharged? Solely because they were not native born.

Ah, Mr. President, what does American citizenship mean? What does it mean to these men when their Government discharged them simply because they are not native born? What effect must such action have upon the millions of American citizens of our great country who were born abroad? If these men could be discharged on this ground, the thousands of other foreign-born citizens can be discharged for the same reason. Cabinet officers, generals of the Army, admirals of the Navy, and officials of every rank and in every department come under the ban.

Where were these American citizens born? This question is immaterial, and yet some might attach some importance to it in view of the conflict now going on and of the controversy which we have had with some of these nations and the character of the work their ship was doing. It is interesting to note that none of these discharged American citizens was born in any of the nations now at war. John W. Carlson was born in Finland and naturalized December 13, 1913; L. Hermansen was born in Norway and naturalized November 21, 1904; Alfred Christianson was born in Denmark and naturalized February 27, 1912; Karl Tomassen was born in Norway and naturalized March 8, 1913; William Matheon was born in Finland and Anton Greenroos was born in Finland and naturalized May 7, 1910, and had been working on the Ringgold since November 10, 1904, or almost 12 years. How do I know they were discharged because they were not native born? This was the reason given them on discharge. Upon the discharge of Anton Greenroos, his commander gave him a certificate setting out the character of his work and the reasons for his discharge, which reads as follows:

U. S. A. MINE PLANTER "MAJOR SAMUEL RINGGOLD,"
Seattle, Wash., May 10, 1916.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Mr. Anton Greenroos has been employed as oiler and assistant engineer about the U. S. A. mine planter Ringgold for nearly 12 years. Although he has not been doing his work directly under my supervision, I have observed that he has been earnest and sincere in his efforts to accomplish what the chief engineer required of him.

I believe him to be a faithful employee and that he will do well any duty he may be required to perform in the line of his professional ability. As to his qualifications as an engineer, I can make no statement, as I am not an engineer.

He is being discharged this date due to no fault of his own; it is for the convenience of the Government, due to the fact that he is not an American-born citizen. The War Department has just decided that foreign-born citizens of the United States shall no longer be employed as civilian employees on Army mine planters.

H. D. COLLEY,
Captain C. A. C., Commanding "Ringgold."

Mr. President, in order to be certain about that order I introduced the resolution I have referred to, but it has not yet been reported upon. I wanted to find out what were the exact terms of the order, but I have not been able to do so yet.

Mr. President, this is not politics. It is not presented for political purposes. It is simply to acquaint the people of the country with one more of the many blundering, stupid, and unfortunate acts of this administration which have brought us so much discredit at home and abroad. The action taken was not intentionally unpatriotic, but it discredits American citizenship, causes distrust of the flag, and arouses ill will against our Government on the part of its own citizens, and subjects us to the ridicule of the world. It was a crime against American citizenship, a slur upon the Americanism of which we have heretofore been so proud.

If such a course had been followed during the Civil War, what a heritage of matchless courage and noble sacrifice would have been lost to us. If applied generally in the legislative and administrative branches of the Government, many illustrious names would be stricken from the Government rolls, and probably none of them is more devoted to the peace, happiness, and welfare of the country or to the perpetuity of its institutions than these good citizens who have so long well filled the humble positions which they held.

No Republic, no democracy like ours, can long exist and discriminate among its citizens in this way. A diluted citizenship means a hyphenated Americanism in spirit as well as in name.

The Democratic Party in its platform of 1916 declares:

We again declare the policy that the sacred rights of American citizenship must be preserved at home and abroad, and that no treaty shall receive the sanction of our Government which does not expressly recognize the absolute equality of all our citizens, irrespective of race, creed, or previous nationality.

That is a wise and patriotic declaration of genuine Americanism, but what does it amount to in the face of these acts of the administration? Words, mere words. What good does it do to declare that we will insist upon other countries "recognizing the absolute equality of all our citizens irrespective of race, creed, or previous nationality" when we do not do it ourselves?

Mr. President, we should be careful in bestowing the priceless, blood-bought rights and privileges of American citizenship upon the foreign born. When bestowed, however, he is entitled to and must be given the same consideration as the native born. He is and from that time should be an American. For the Government to discriminate between its citizens is to strike at the very basic foundations of the Republic and create a hyphenated Americanism which is far more dangerous than hyphenated Americans.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'GORMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator fom Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Husting	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Brady	James	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Jones	Penrose	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Phelan	Sterling
Chilton	Kern	Pittman	Taggart
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Pomerene	Thomas
Colt	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Thompson
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lewis	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Harding	McLean	Sherman	Williams
Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JONES. I should have announced on the first call made to-day that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Senator from California ready to have his amendment acted upon now?

Mr. PHELAN. Inasmuch as several Members are present who were not present at the close of the session last evening, I will state in one moment, consuming no unnecessary time, what the amendment is, if that is agreeable to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is necessarily called away, and he desires unanimous consent to submit an amendment at this time to the income-tax provision. I do not think it will take very long.

Mr. PHELAN. It is quite agreeable for me to give way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. HUGHES. I will suggest that the Senator from California proceed, inasmuch as he says he will make his statement in two minutes, and I will not make any reply——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. HUGHES. Relying upon the reputation of the Senator for fairness, and that he will do justice to my side as well as his own.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand from the Senator from New Jersey that immediately after my statement a vote will be taken?

Mr. HUGHES. That is what I want to do.

Mr. LANE. I wish to make some inquiries about the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I ask that the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the income-tax schedule for this purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the amendment I propose, which is to be inserted on page 40, after line 2. In a word, it is an amendment designed to permit every corporation in making its return to secure a deduction in the payment of such part of its income as it receives by way of dividends on the stock of other corporations which are taxed. The design of the amendment is to save corporations in certain cases from a double tax In other words, that the corporation may have the same immunity that is accorded the individual taxpayer in the earlier part of the bill.

With regard to the individual citizen paying an income tax, he is permitted to deduct from his income such part of his income for the purposes of a normal tax as he receives through corporations that are subject to the tax. It is the purpose of this amendment merely to extend to a corporation, which is at best but an aggregation of individuals, the same privilege of exemption that is accorded to the individual citizen.

I understand that the matter was discussed in the Finance Committee, and while the members of the committee were not insensible to the suggestions that I am now conveying to the Senate, there was a disposition nevertheless to discourage what are called holding corporations. This revenue bill is not to be regarded as a punitive bit of legislation. If Congress thinks there is some vice in holding corporations that can be corrected, I suppose, through more legitimate channels than by using an income tax bill for the mere purpose of correcting it, especially when it must be remembered that however much we may all be opposed to certain features of holding corporations, yet there are some which are absolutely essential.

We know that there may be a corporation organized in each one of the 48 States and yet be unable to carry on business in certain States without first complying with some extra or perhaps unusual regulation prescribed by the State, and to overcome or to meet that situation very often an industrial or commercial corporation doing business throughout the country will organize a separate company within a particular State for the purpose of operating within that State and meeting the requirements of the law of the State. All of the stock of that particular corporation will, of course, be held by the parent corporation, whether it be a New Jersey, West Virginia, New York, or Massachusetts corporation. It is the purpose of this amendment to save the parent corporation from the necessity of paying a tax after its subordinate corporation has paid the tax on a particular profit enjoyed by the enterprise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is true that where a corporation pays a tax for the individual stockholder under the policy of this bill, which is the policy of payment at the source in cases of that sort, the individual stockholder making his report upon the dividends received from that corporation reports that the corporation pays upon that much of his income at the source, and that much of his income is therefore deducted. It is also true that when one corporation is a stockholder in another corporation that course is not pursued, and that the corporation paying at the source pays and the stockholding corporation also pays.

Mr. President, the reason of that discrimination I will unfold in a moment, but I will state, first, that that matter was very carefully thrashed out in the House committee, in the House, in the Senate committee, and in the Senate when we first adopted the income-tax law; that is, the present law. Moreover, it was very carefully rethrashed in the House committee, in the House, and in the Senate committee this time.

The reason of it is this: We did not want holding companies to be encouraged by the tax laws of the country. Upon the contrary, we did desire to discourage them. We also desired to discourage the system of interlocking stockholders, which has led to very much abuse. Both these things have led to abuse.

The Senator from New York says the income tax ought not to be a punitive tax for the purpose of discouraging holding companies. That is not quite a fair statement, but whether it be a fair statement or not, we took this view, that when a great question of public policy was presented to us, when a thing presented itself which was contrary to public policy, in our opinion, we should so frame the law as to discourage that thing.

The Senator says that some of the States require, in order that a corporation which has taken out a charter elsewhere may do business within their limits, that that corporation shall organize a subsidiary company in the State. Mr. President, that is just what that State does not want. It does not want that corporation to organize a subsidiary company; it wants that corporation to take out a new charter in that State for itself.

The State that is most often pointed to in that respect is the State of Texas. Texas requires foreign corporations doing business in Texas to take out a charter in Texas so that the corporation may have a home in the State and may be reached by the judicial processes of the State.

To show how that law has been abused, the Standard Oil Co. was attacked in the courts of Texas, was declared to be a trust under the laws, and was forbidden to do business in the State of Texas, whereupon the Standard Oil Co. went out and got a new charter in the name of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.—I believe it was the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.—and proceeded to do business in the State of Texas under the guise of being an independent corporation. It turned out afterwards that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. was a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. owing to some lawsuit that took place and during which evidence was produced disclosing that fact. Under this amendment the Standard Oil Co. would issue a dividend to the Waters-Pierce Co., and the Standard Oil Co., having paid at the source, the Waters-Pierce Co. would be exempt from the payment of the tax under this title.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It would be the reverse.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the Senator from New York is right. I had it precisely reversed. The Waters-Pierce Co. would pay first, as having withheld at the source, and then the Standard Oil Co. would be exempt from the payment of an income upon its dividends.

Whether the view of public policy which we have taken is right or wrong is a matter which is debatable, perhaps; but if the view of public policy which we have taken is right, then the provision of this House bill, which is also the provision of the present law and is also the provision of the bill as reported by the Senate committee, is undoubtedly correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 2, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Fifth. All amounts received within the year as dividends upon stock or as distributions of profits of other corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations subject to the tax hereby imposed: Provided, That in the case of dividends or distributions of profits received from foreign corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations when only part of the net income of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association shall be subject to the tax hereby imposed only a corresponding part of such dividends or distributions of profit shall be deducted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask, Mr. President, to have stated the other amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 6, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Fifth. Amounts received within the year as dividends upon stock or as distributions of profits of other corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations subject to the tax hereby imposed to the extent that such dividends or distributions are included in the gross amount of its income returned as herein provided.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That amendment embraces substantially the same considerations as the previous amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the same reasons that I have heretofore given, I ask that that amendment also be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Now, I ask the attention of the Senate to another amendment, which I think is more likely to receive the favorable consideration of some members of the Finance Committee, if not perhaps the favorable consideration of all of them. It is a proposed amendment on page 30, line 15, and it reads as follows:

Provided, That the income embraced in a return of an insurance company organized in the United States shall be credited with the amount received by such company as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations whose net income is taxable under this title.

This involves in a measure the same considerations as were presented a moment ago with respect to corporations generally. This exemption, however, is confined to insurance companies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To all insurance companies?

Mr. O'GORMAN To all insurance companies. It differs from corporations generally in this respect: Insurance corporations have their moneys invested for the benefit of those who are insured. The various States have insisted upon particular classes of investments to be made by insurance companies in order to preserve the rights of the insured. In view of the State legislation, the investments made by insurance companies are usually confined to what are called high-class approved securities, paying a lower rate of interest and affording a lower return than other and perhaps less safe investments. I beg to submit to my colleagues that, with regard to insurance companies, when it is remembered especially as to insurance companies that all their moneys are being held for the benefit of citizens of the country, that when they make their investments as directed by the several State legislatures they ought to be exempt from the payment of any additional tax on the income derived from those investments where the corporations issuing the securities are subject to the income-tax provisions of this law.

If you deny the insurance companies this exemption you are taxing the same property twice. While you think it proper to do that with regard to corporations generally, as is evidenced by your vote of a few minutes since, I think there are reasons why a distinction should be made between insurance corporations and other corporations. If that distinction commends itself to the Senate, this particular amendment should have the favor of this body at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this identical question was before the subcommittee and before the full committee; it was argued out very thoroughly, and we concluded to abide by the provision as it is. There were reasons which made something of a distinction between insurance companies and other corporations, but we did not think that they were sufficiently weighty to destroy the uniformity of the law and make us cause a discrimination in favor of insurance companies.

We have not subjected the insurance companies to the stamp tax; we have exempted the real mutual insurance companies from income taxes altogether, and we think that we have done what was right with regard to that.

Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] says, that an insurance company is not left free to invest its funds in any sort of bonds or stock that it may choose, but that the laws of the respective States confine them to certain classes of bonds and stocks, which, because of their very safety, are bonds with a low rate of interest and stocks with low dividends, because safety of investment and lowness of interest and of dividends always go together; but it must be remembered, after all is said and done, that this tax is levied upon the net income of the corporation and not upon its gross income. A corporation which is compelled to keep its investments in low interest-bearing bonds or in low dividend-paying stocks has earned just that much less net income and has, as a consequence, paid just that much less income tax. So in the long run the fact that the State compels it to invest in these bonds and stocks which are ultra safe and therefore bring in small returns is reflected in the amount of tax paid upon the net income of the corporation from every source—its business and its investments put together.

It is also true, as the Senator from New York says, that insurance companies do not form holding companies, so far as I know; but it is also true that the vice of interlocking directors does prevail amongst them, as amongst other corporations. That was one of the evils aimed at.

I do not want to take up the time of the Senate. I merely want to express in brief the considerations that led the committee to arrive at the conclusion that we had better maintain the tax uniformly upon all corporations, including insurance corporations, especially in view of the fact that all mutual insurance companies—those which are really mutual—are exempt. There are some so-called mutual insurance companies, such as the New York Life and the New York Equitable, for example, that everybody knows are not mutual. They are carried on for profit, they make very enormous profits, and they have, in times past, at any rate, shown a very reckless disregard of ethics in the distribution of their profits. At one time, I remember, they had contributed to both campaign funds, for example.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 15, after the word "income," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the income embraced in a return of an insurance company organized in the United States shall be credited with the amount received by such company as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations whose net income is taxable under this title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether it is not true that very enormous holdings of stocks and bonds would be exempted from taxation by this amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that if the first amendment offered by the Senator from New York had been adopted we should have lost about $20,000,000 of revenue, and we should lose by this proposed amendment, if adopted, in the neighborhood of five or six million dollars of revenue.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the impression that the great insurance companies have many millions of dollars invested in stocks and bonds upon which they are now paying taxes, but which would be exempted under this proposed amendment, and that the loss of revenue would be very large.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment as represented to me and as I understand from reading it is that the Government will be confined to one tax on a particular property. If this amendment is not passed, then, with respect to insurance companies, as well as with respect to corporations generally, the same property may be taxed twice; it may be taxed three times; it may be taxed half a dozen times.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose a large insurance company has a half million dollars invested in the preferred stock of a good corporation, from which it is deriving, say, 5 per cent income, why should it not pay on that 5 per cent income just as it pays on any other income?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I might answer that question by asking the Senator this question: If instead of an insurance corporation owning the stock in question it was owned by an individual, why should not the individual pay a tax on his 5 per cent, even though that 5 per cent represents the net profit of a corporation which has already paid a tax under the income-tax law?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That individual does pay his tax if he owns as large quantities as the insurance company owns. He pays it in the shape of a supertax.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes; but this is confined to the normal tax.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand it is proposed to exempt the very largest companies in the country, owning the very greatest quantities of stocks and bonds, and as I read the amendment it seems to me that it would exempt them not only from the payment of the income tax on their stock dividends, but possibly also on their bonds.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The design of the amendment—and that is the question which the Senate will have to pass upon—is to establish whether the exemption that is enjoyed by an individual citizen is going to be extended to an insurance company.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, does he contend that that exemption is enjoyed by an individual citizen who only pays the normal tax?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; if he pays a normal tax and not the supertax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean an individual citizen who pays the supertax. Does the Senator make that contention?

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is the purpose of the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would not the Senator thereby introduce a different rule with reference to corporations from that which applies to individuals?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the two Senators are talking at cross purposes. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] misunderstood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who has misexpressed himself. He asked if it applied to the normal tax, when he meant to say the "supertax."

Mr. SIMMONS. I meant to say the supertax.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The individual has to pay also when it comes to the supertax.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from New York is not attempting to modify the rule as to the supertax. His amendment applies only to the normal tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not here when the Senator from New York presented his amendment and did not hear his first statement; but is it now the proposition of the Senator to exemp.

insurance companies from this tax when other corporations are subject to it?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I proposed an amendment before the Senator came into the Chamber placing all corporations with respect to the normal tax in the same class with the individual citizen. That has been voted down. Now I press the immediate amendment, which gives the exemption only to insurance companies, because of the special circumstances affecting those companies.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator now; and I desire to ask the Senator a question with reference to the investments of insurance companies. Is it not a fact that the great insurance companies, acting under the laws of the States, and acting under the necessity of keeping on hand liquid assets, to a very large extent invest in municipal bonds, State bonds, and Government bonds, which do not pay any tax at all? My advice is—and it came from an insurance man who came to me and talked about this very question—to that effect.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If the Senator will allow me, right there, as to that income the insurance companies, under this amendment, would have to pay their tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but there is no first tax paid on such securities.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Then, that character of income is not covered by this amendment. This amendment specifically states that insurance companies may deduct income received "as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations whose net income is taxable under this title."

With regard to municipal bonds, Federal bonds, and State bonds, they are not taxable, and, therefore, income derived from them is not affected at all by this amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am making is that the Senator is asking for a special exemption in favor of insurance companies on the ground that they have to invest in a certain class of bonds from which they would receive the revenue that he wants untaxed. The point I am trying to present to the Senator is that insurance companies probably less than any other character of corporations in this country carry bonds which are subject to the normal tax which a corporation has to pay. Take our railroads, for instance——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not know whether or not that is correct, but, assuming that it is so, how does that affect the subject?

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is so, I do not see the grounds upon which the Senator asks this special exemption of insurance companies.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I place it on the simple, reasonable, and, as I conceive it, absolutely just ground that an insurance corporation or any other corporation is nothing but an aggregation of individuals; and I say that when the Government of the United States commence to tax incomes they should not have one rule where they are dealing with one individual and an entirely different and more burdensome rule when they are dealing with a number of individuals.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am invoking that very rule. I am saying there should not be one corporation to which one rule is extended, while an entirely different rule is extended as to all the other corporations of the country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to be willing to have all corporations enjoy the same immunity that the individual citizen enjoys?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I am opposed to any of them enjoying such immunity. My understanding is that the Senate has just voted down the Senator's proposition to extend such immunity to all corporations, and now the Senator is asking to extend it to insurance companies.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have just conveyed that information to the Senator. That was the action of the Senate when the Senator from North Carolina was not here; but I had proposed two amendments, one extending the immunity to all corporations, so that there would not be double taxation of any profits; and then a separate amendment, giving immunity to insurance companies; and it is upon that, as I understand, we are about to vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I make is that the Senate has just voted down the proposition to extend the immunity to all corporations, and I have not heard any good reason given by the Senator why, if it is not to be extended to other corporations, it should be extended to insurance corporations.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think one reason why this immunity should be extended to insurance companies is—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the Senator in charge of this portion of the bill [Mr. WILLIAMS]—that by reason of the very nature of insurance the law compels insurance companies to invest a very large proportion of their assets for the benefit of their policyholders as a reserve against losses, particularly in the case of fire insurance companies against losses by fire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Their reserves are not taxed.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me finish, Mr. President. They are compelled to invest their reserves in some sort of securities. They are not like banks, which purchase securities for the mere sake of investment and for the sake of making money, but the reserves of insurance companies are entirely for the benefit of the parties who insure in the different companies. Therefore it is hardly fair to compel the insurance companies to pay a tax on the net profits or the income arising from these investments, when a like tax has been exacted from the corporations whose stocks they hold. I think insurance companies in this respect stand in an entirely different light from other corporations, from so-called holding companies, for instance. The holding company element does not enter into this question, and, notwithstanding what the Senator from Mississippi has said, the question of interlocking directorates does not enter into it in any way whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second? [A pause.] The yeas and nays will be ordered; but the Senate, having adopted the concurrent resolution to convene in the Chamber of the House of Representatives and listen to a communication from the President of the United States, the Sergeant at Arms will proceed to carry out the orders of the Senate.

Thereupon the Senate, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and preceded by the Vice President and its Assistant Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 3 o'clock p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 1340).

The address of the President of the United States, delivered before the joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives, is as follows:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Congress, I have come to you to seek your assistance in dealing with a very grave situation which has arisen out of the demand of the employees of the railroads engaged in freight train service that they be granted an eight-hour working day, safeguarded by payment for an hour and a half of service for every hour of work beyond the eight.

The matter has been agitated for more than a year. The public has been made familiar with the demands of the men and the arguments urged in favor of them, and even more familiar with the objections of the railroads and their counter demand that certain privileges now enjoyed by their men and certain bases of payment worked out through many years of contest be reconsidered, especially in their relation to the adoption of an eight-hour day. The matter came some three weeks ago to a final issue and resulted in a complete deadlock between the parties. The means provided by law for the mediation of the controversy failed and the means of arbitration for which the law provides were rejected. The representatives of the railway executives proposed that the demands of the men be submitted in their entirety to arbitration, along with certain questions of readjustment as to pay and conditions of employment which seemed to them to be either closely associated with the demands or to call for reconsideration on their own merits; the men absolutely declined arbitration, especially if any of their established privileges were by that means to be drawn again in question. The law in the matter put no compulsion upon them. The four hundred thousand men from whom the demands proceeded had voted to strike if their demands were refused; the strike was imminent; it has since been set for the fourth of September next. It affects the men who man the freight trains on practically every railway in the country. The freight service throughout the United States must stand still until their places are filled, if, indeed, it should prove possible to fill them at all. Cities will be cut off from their food supplies, the whole commerce of the nation will be paralyzed, men of every sort and occupation will be thrown out of employment, countless thousands will in all likelihood be brought, it may be, to the very point of starvation, and a tragical national calamity brought on, to be added to the other distresses of the time, because no basis of accommodation or settlement has been found.

Just so soon as it became evident that mediation under the existing law had failed and that arbitration had been rendered impossible by the attitude of the men, I considered it my duty to confer with the representatives of both the railways and the brotherhoods, and myself offer mediation, not as an arbitrator, but merely as spokesman of the nation, in the interest of justice, indeed, and as a friend of both parties, but not as judge, only as the representative of one hundred millions of men, women, and children who would pay the price, the incalculable price, of loss and suffering should these few men insist upon approaching and concluding the matters in controversy between them merely as employers and employees, rather than as patriotic citizens of the United States looking before and after and accepting the larger responsibility which the public would put upon them.

It seemed to me, in considering the subject-matter of the controversy, that the whole spirit of the time and the preponderant evidence of recent economic experience spoke for the eight-hour day. It has been adjudged by the thought and experience of recent years a thing upon which society is justified in insisting as in the interest of health, efficiency, contentment, and a general increase of economic vigor. The whole presumption of modern experience would, it seemed to me, be in its favor, whether there was arbitration or not, and the debatable points to settle were those which arose out of the acceptance of the eight-hour day rather than those which affected its establishment. I, therefore, proposed that the eight-hour day be adopted by the railway managements and put into practice for the present as a substitute for the existing ten-hour basis of pay and service; that I should appoint, with the permission of the Congress, a small commission to observe the results of the change, carefully studying the figures of the altered operating costs, not only, but also the conditions of labor under which the men worked and the operation of their existing agreements with the railroads, with instructions to report the facts as they found them to the Congress at the earliest possible day, but without recommendation; and that, after the facts had been thus disclosed, an adjustment should in some orderly manner be sought of all the matters now left unadjusted between the railroad managers and the men.

These proposals were exactly in line, it is interesting to note, with the position taken by the Supreme Court of the United States when appealed to to protect certain litigants from the financial losses which they confidently expected if they should submit to the regulation of their charges and of their methods of service by public legislation. The Court has held that it would not undertake to form a judgment upon forecasts, but could base its action only upon actual experience; that it must be supplied with facts, not with calculations and opinions, however scientifically attempted. To undertake to arbitrate the question of the adoption of an eight-hour day in the light of results merely estimated and predicted would be to undertake an enterprise of conjecture. No wise man could undertake it, or, if he did undertake it, could feel assured of his conclusions.

I unhesitatingly offered the friendly services of the administration to the railway managers to see to it that justice was done the railroads in the outcome. I felt warranted in assuring them that no obstacle of law would be suffered to stand in the way of their increasing their revenues to meet the expenses resulting from the change so far as the development of their business and of their administrative efficiency did not prove adequate to meet them. The public and the representatives of the public, I felt justified in assuring them, were disposed to nothing but justice in such cases and were willing to serve those who served them.

The representatives of the brotherhoods accepted the plan; but the representatives of the railroads declined to accept it. In the face of what I cannot but regard as the practical certainty that they will be ultimately obliged to accept the eight-hour day by the concerted action of organized labor, backed by the favorable judgment of society, the representatives of the railway management have felt justified in declining a peaceful settlement which would engage all the forces of justice, public and private, on their side to take care of the event. They fear the hostile influence of shippers, who would be opposed to an increase of freight rates (for which, however, of course, the public itself would pay); they apparently feel no confidence that the Interstate Commerce Commission could withstand the objections that would be made. They do not care to rely upon the friendly assurances of the Congress or the President. They have thought it best that they should be forced to yield, if they must yield, not by counsel, but by the suffering of the country. While my conferences with them were in progress, and when to all outward appearance those conferences had come to a standstill, the representatives of the brotherhoods suddenly acted and set the strike for the fourth of September.

The railway managers based their decision to reject my counsel in this matter upon their conviction that they must at any cost to themselves or to the country stand firm for the principle of arbitration which the men had rejected. I based my counsel upon the indisputable fact that there was no means of obtaining arbitration. The law supplied none; earnest efforts at mediation had failed to influence the men in the least. To stand firm for the principle of arbitration and yet not get arbitration seemed to me futile, and something more than futile, because it involved incalculable distress to the country and consequences in some respects worse than those of war, and that in the midst of peace.

I yield to no man in firm adherence, alike of conviction and of purpose, to the principle of arbitration in industrial disputes; but matters have come to a sudden crisis in this particular dispute and the country had been caught unprovided with any practicable means of enforcing that conviction in practice (by whose fault we will not now stop to inquire). A situation had to be met whose elements and fixed conditions were indisputable. The practical and patriotic course to pursue, as it seemed to me, was to secure immediate peace by conceding the one thing in the demands of the men which society itself and any arbitrators who represented public sentiment were most likely to approve, and immediately lay the foundations for securing arbitration with regard to everything else involved. The event has confirmed that judgment.

I was seeking to compose the present in order to safeguard the future; for I wished an atmosphere of peace and friendly cooperation in which to take counsel with the representatives of the nation with regard to the best means for providing, so far as it might prove possible to provide, against the recurrence of such unhappy situations in the future,—the best and most practicable means of securing calm and fair arbitration of all industrial disputes in the days to come. This is assuredly the best way of vindicating a principle, namely, having failed to make certain of its observance in the present, to make certain of its observance in the future.

But I could only propose. I could not govern the will of others who took an entirely different view of the circumstances of the case, who even refused to admit the circumstances to be what they have turned out to be.

Having failed to bring the parties to this critical controversy to an accommodation, therefore, I turn to you, deeming it clearly our duty as public servants to leave nothing undone that we can do to safeguard the life and interests of the nation. In the spirit of such a purpose, I earnestly recommend the following legislation:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now awaiting action by the Senate; in order that the Commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are with its present constitution and means of action practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the President of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads; its effects in the matter of operating costs, in the application of the existing practices and agreements to the new conditions, and in all other practical aspects, with the provision that the investigators shall report their conclusions to the Congress at the earliest possible date, but without recommendation as to legislative action; in order that the public may learn from an unprejudiced source just what actual developments have ensued.

Fourth, explicit approval by the Congress of the consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted.

And, sixth, the lodgement in the hands of the Executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes, with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

This last suggestion I make because we cannot in any circumstances suffer the nation to be hampered in the essential matter of national defense. At the present moment circumstances render this duty particularly obvious. Almost the entire military force of the nation is stationed upon the Mexican border to guard our territory against hostile raids. It must be supplied, and steadily supplied, with whatever it needs for its maintenance and efficiency. If it should be necessary for purposes of national defense to transfer any portion of it upon short notice to some other part of the country for reasons now unforeseen, ample means of transportation must be available, and available without delay. The power conferred in this matter should be carefully and explicitly limited to cases of military necessity, but in all such cases it should be clear and ample.

There is one other thing we should do if we are true champions of arbitration. We should make all arbitral awards judgments by record of a court of law in order that their interpretation and enforcement may lie not with one of the parties to the arbitration, but with an impartial and authoritative tribunal.

These things I urge upon you, not in haste or merely as a means of meeting a present emergency, but as permanent and necessary additions to the law of the land, suggested, indeed, by circumstances we had hoped never to see, but imperative as well as just, if such emergencies are to be prevented in the future. I feel that no extended argument is needed to commend them to your favorable consideration. They demonstrate themselves. The time and the occasion only give emphasis to their importance. We need them now, and we shall continue to need them.

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, it was—Ordered, That 5,000 additional copies of the address of the President of the United States this day delivered to the Congress be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. SMOOT. May the Secretary read the pending amendment before the yeas and nays are taken?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 15, after the word "income," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the income embraced in a return of an insurance company organized in the United States shall be credited with the amount received by such company as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations whose net income is taxable under this title.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, for the benefit of any Senator who may not have heard the discussion, I want to make a single observation. It is the purpose of this amendment to give to insurance companies the same rights with respect to deductions that are given to the individual citizen making his return. In a word, it is intended to prevent a double taxation on the same profits and provides that that part of the income received by an insurance company which comes from another corporation subject to the tax shall be exempt.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Myers	Simmons
Bankhead	Harding	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Brady	Husting	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	James	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	Jones	Phelan	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pittman	Stone
Chilton	Kern	Pomerene	Taggart
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Reed	Thomas
Colt	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Thompson
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Underwood
Cummins	Lewis	Shafroth	Vardaman
Curtis	McCumber	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Williams
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He is absent on important business. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed that he has not voted. Is that right?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I am compelled to withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr CLARKE].

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the negative). I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have been unable to get a transfer, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I have been absolutely unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore I am obliged to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but under the conditions at present, I can vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—24

Borah	Curtis	McLean	Pomerene
Brady	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Brandegee	Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Jones	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Kenyon	O'Gorman	Sterling

Gore	Norris	Sutherland

So Mr. O'GORMAN's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The purposes for which I asked unanimous consent to recur to the income-tax provisions have been exhausted, and I ask now that we go back to the wine schedule.

Mr. THOMAS. On yesterday, when the so-called munitions schedule was reached, I asked for a postponement of it until to-day, because there was some information regarding some subjects in that schedule which I was expecting and had not then received. At that time the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado in reference to the third title of the bill going over, but there are some items in that title in which a number of Senators are interested who have been waiting here to vote on them. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he can not fix it so that it shall go over and be taken up at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS. As far as it is within my power to do it, I will consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator to modify his request to that extent.

Mr. THOMAS. I will do that. I ask that the third title may go over until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Colorado is that Title III may go over until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

As I understand the parliamentary situation, the munitions schedule is the subject next in order, and to be proceeded with in advance of the wine schedule. I do not want to cut off the Senator from California in any way or interfere improperly with the consideration of the wine schedule, but it seems to me, in view of the position the schedule occupies by reason of the request of the Senator from Alabama, I should insist upon its consideration for his sake if not for my own.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Colorado to withhold his insistence about that matter. I have conferred with the Senator from Alabama, and, for certain reasons connected with the schedule, it is thought desirable that it should go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS. If it is satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. I only desired to keep my understanding with the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator from Colorado for the courtesy he has shown me in this matter. I wish to say that I have reached an understanding with the Senator from North Carolina in reference to the consideration of the munitions schedule that is satisfactory to me and to others who hold my view, I think, and I am perfectly willing to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. My only purpose in intruding the subject now was for the reasons I have stated. I will make no further interruption of the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, when we adjourned last evening the Senate was about to vote upon an amendment which I had submitted to the wine schedule of the revenue bill, but inasmuch as there are many Senators present to-day who were not in attendance upon yesterday I desire very briefly to state what the amendment is.

There are two propositions involved in the wine schedule. One is section 53, which provides for the quality of the wine, and the other section provides for the rates which shall be levied upon the wine. The committee has submitted a substitute to the section which was proposed in the printed bill and my amendment is an amendment to the substitute. I call it my amendment, but, as a matter of fact, it is not my amendment, nor does it emanate from California, although by reason of the fact that California produces 90 per cent of all the wine produced in the United States, she might well be entitled to be heard. Yet she has no representation on the Finance Committee, while Senators from other wine States dealing in a small way in grape growing compose the subcommittee of the Finance Committee. Hence it is necessary to bring the matter up before the Senate, in order that all the facts may be perfectly understood. I will not say that the subcommittee is not informed, but I know that there is a certain difficulty on the part of most men to understand the science of wine making and what it all signifies.

I am disposed to believe also that those who have passed upon it as a whole committee, and even the Members of the Senate now present, have but little accurate and exact information on the subject.

In order to assure Senators that the amendment which I have proposed, and which I now advocate, is worthy of their confidence and consideration, I desire to inform them that on August 21 the Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter signed by himself as Secretary, communicated to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, in which he inclosed a tentative amendment, which I have adopted as my own and offered as a substitute for the one proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee on that subject. In his letter the Secretary of Agriculture says:

This department regards wine in the process of the manufacture of which more water is added than is necessary to correct natural defects in the must as being both adulterated and misbranded.

Therefore, the amendment prepared by the department limits the amount of water and sugar which may be added to wine to 25 per cent; which is all that the legitimate wine makers of California and of the East demand.

When I refer to the East, I mean New York, New Jersey, and Virginia. But in the proposal of the Senator from New Jersey 35 per cent increase of volume is permitted, and then 35 per cent more, which is a stretching of the wine, repugnant to the policy and advice of the Department of Agriculture. California is interested not because it affects her industry more particularly than it does the industry of a like kind in any other State, except in so far as her volume of production is greater, but because it will destroy the industry itself. This is a general law, and California can, if permitted, stretch, as it is called, the volume of her production so that it will not be necessary to produce more than one-quarter of the grapes which we now produce. Senators will see the effect upon the industry of giving license to men, exciting their cupidity to grow a small quantity of grapes, and then expanding the volume by the addition of 35 per cent and then 35 per cent more. It will mean a diminution in the revenues of the Government; it will mean an impairment of the quality of the wine.

I shall not on this occasion speak of the other subject involved, namely, revenue; but I desire, for the information of Senators on the other side of the Chamber, to say that my colleague [Mr. WORKS], holding the views he does upon the relation of the wine traffic to temperance, is in favor of the amendment which I advocate. He left his pair here with a Senator in order that his vote and influence might not be lost; and in a letter to the California Viticultural Commission, which is a legal body representing the government of the State of California, so extensive is the industry, he says:

I had hoped that the grape growers and wine manufacturers of California had escaped the high taxation that Congress had attempted to impose upon them. It seems now, however, that, in the ruling made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, they have not escaped. I think this is entirely unjust, and I shall be very glad to do anything I can to relieve the industry from this condition.

I shall be very glad to see the time when the grape growers are able to dispose of their products for something else besides the making of wine and the wine makers may find a more profitable business than that of wine making, and that California may no longer be burdened by the liquor traffic.

But, so long as the making of wine is allowed by law—

That is the question, I submit—the industry should be protected from unfair and unjust legislation.

This question of the adulteration, sophistication, or "amelioration," so called, of wine, which certain gentlemen want, who represent but probably 5 per cent of the entire industry, is provided for in the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey; and I have offered as an amendment to that a provision which allows 25 per cent stretching—all that could reasonably be expected—a provision which has the approval and indorsement of the Department of Agriculture. I submit it with confidence to the Senators who are here with open minds to consider the proposed legislation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have been a bit interested in listening to this discussion. I have acquired a good deal of information, and my idea of what wine was composed has entirely changed. It seems that there is a contest between one set of persons who make wine practically out of water and sugar, with alcohol or "booze" added to it—I do not know whether they flavor it or not—while upon the other side there is another set of gentlemen whose wine has to be watered because it is too "foxy," on account of the grapes having too thick a skin on them; and from what I have heard here the whole wine-making business seems to be a foxy business. There is also the contention made by one of the contestants that potassium tartrate is an adulterant, and he protests because the department allows it to go into some wines to sweeten them. I can not conceive how that which has been taken out of wine and is formed in wine can be considered an adulterant. Bitartrate of potassium is deposited from wine on the sides of the casks. Tartaric acid is the acid which gives the eastern grape its sour taste and which, it seems, requires the sugar used to sweeten the wine.

The California wine, it is said, is diluted with water to tone down its foxy flavor. Then it has added to it brandy, which is made from fermented grapes, to strengthen it again in order to give it—what do they claim alcohol is put in it for?

Mr. HUGHES. To make people drunk.

Mr. LANE. To make the drunk come.

Mr. PHELAN. The object of adding brandy is to arrest the natural fermentation of the sugar and not to add strength.

Mr. LANE. I am glad to hear that; but I have not been able to understand to what extent you put in alcohol. Many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of alcohol have gone into this wine. Would it all turn to vinegar if you did not add alcohol?

Mr. PHELAN. It would have an excessive sweetness, and it would contain too much alcohol. The sugar, which is natural in the California grape, ferments up to a certain point, and if it went on fermenting it would create too much alcohol. So, in order to check the development of sugar into alcohol, as I understand, brandy is added to arrest fermentation.

Mr. LANE. It has too much alcohol in it as it naturally comes from the press?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; unless arrested by the addition of grape brandy.

Mr. LANE. And so you add more alcohol to weaken it as a beverage? That is, as I understand it.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not understand the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I say it has too much alcohol in it as you produce it from the natural juices of the grape, and so you add more alcohol to weaken it, so that it will not go on and destroy itself.

Mr. PHELAN. With regard to brandy, it is used in fortification as an agency for arresting fermentation.

Mr. LANE. But you say it has too much alcohol in it already, and so you add more. If it has too much alcohol in it and will go on fermenting, why do you put more alcohol in it?

Mr. PHELAN. The doctor will understand that that is done on the principle of curing like by like.

Mr. LANE. Yes; possibly on the principle of applying the hair of the dog to cure its bite.

Mr. PHELAN. Practically that is the principle upon which the brandy acts upon the sugar contents. I am not attempting to give the Senator any information on that subject.

Mr. LANE. I do not think the Senate has acquired accurate information concerning it. I know I have not. It was a matter of curiosity with me to ascertain how much alcohol you put into it. You say you add water, that of course dilutes it, reduces its sweetness, and also its "foxy" flavor, and reduces the amount of alcohol in it. I assumed when it was stated that alcohol was added to it, that that was done for the purpose of giving it its intoxicating effect upon the person who drank it. On the other hand, wines which are made in Ohio seem to be so sour that no man can drink them unless they are diluted; and then that makes them too weak for intoxicating purposes. So they add grain alcohol, which they have to purchase, and they add cane sugar to sweeten it, whereas the California grape, it seems—and I think it is true as a matter of fact—does have an excess of sugar, and for that reason it is a heavy wine, unless it is diluted.

The whole wine business and the manufacture of wine seems to be a process of manufacturing a concoction which is called wine. I am informed by a gentleman from California that in the Eastern States, in the States east of the Rocky Mountains, that after they press out the juice from the grape and there remains a mass of residue, for which I have forgotten the technical name, they put that residue under pressure, dry it, and store it away until they get ready to use it, and then they mix it up with water and sugar and allow it to ferment, and then add alcohol to give it vim. They call that "wine," and sell it all over the country. The people of California consider that unfair competition; and, so far as I am concerned, if the statement is true, I think it is unfair. The California wine has the advantage, at any rate, of making its own alcohol from the residue of the grape.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it will not do to assume that that is true, for it is wrong. The difficulty is the Senator has been misinformed.

Mr. LANE. That may be.

Mr. POMERENE. That was done some years ago, but it was stopped by the State of Ohio, and also by the Agricultural Department. The Senator's informant, no doubt, knew that, but did not impart the information to him.

Mr. LANE. That may be so. I am glad to hear that Ohio has stopped such a practice as that. I would regret deeply to think that they had continued it, because it is not a fair way of making wine. I am glad that it is no longer done.

As I have said, there is a great deal concerning this wine business that Senators do not generally understand. Ohio wines and the wines made east of the Rocky Mountains, generally, as I have said, seem to be too sour to drink, sour enough to make a pig squeal, perhaps, but that wine is sweetened with cane sugar. The natural sugar content of the grape and of the human body is grape sugar, and is an entirely different sort of sugar from cane or beet sugar, and responds to an entirely different test, shows different characteristics on chemical analysis, and has an entirely different and milder effect upon the human system if used for food. So the eastern wines to which I have referred have sugar added to sweeten them, and then water is added to "balloon" them or make them fill more barrels; and then a certain amount of alcohol is added to give them the "nip" necessary to get the people to consume them who drink them for exhilarating purposes.

Mr. Pesident. I do not know how to vote intelligently on this question. It is a mixed case. I would think, in a general way, looking at it from a neutral standpoint, that that grape which carried itself into wine and made its own alcohol and furnished its own sugar would be a better type of grape, a little more high-toned and efficient grape, than the grape whose wine had to be doctored up in order to carry itself along. Outside of that I do not know much about it. The grain alcohol placed in it has to be purchased for lack of sugar in the grape to make its own alcohol. That grape ought to carry weight. As is said in horse racing, such a grape should be "handicapped" a bit in fair and equal justice in the race between the two grapes in the wine business.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, if this discussion keeps on much longer, I will not know anything about the grape question myself. I have heard some of the strangest theories promulgated here this afternoon and some of the most wonderful and ingenious arguments that have ever been made before any legislative body. Hardly any of them have had anything to do with the subject matter under consideration, but that does not prevent them from being interesting. I do not know when I have been more highly entertained than I have been here this afternoon by the arguments and suggestions which have been made.

Now, for the benefit of the Senator from Oregon, I want to suggest that, in the first place, we are dealing with two kinds of wine—dry wine and sweet wine. None of the arguments or suggestions the Senator has made have any reference at all to dry wine, which is the character of wine that we are seeking to set out and define in section 53.

In order to make it as brief as possible, I will read the provision to show what we are trying to give these people an opportunity to do by means of this legislation. I quote from the bill the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Finance:

SEC. 53. That wine within the meaning of this act as well as within the meaning of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 768), shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and commercially pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar to the must or to the wine; when such addition shall not increase the volume more than 35 per cent, so that the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid——

Mr. LANE. That refers to sweet wine, does it?

Mr. HUGHES. That refers to dry wine. Up to that point there has been no alcohol added to that wine. This law does not permit any alcohol to be added to wine of that kind. It is what is known as a "dry wine." But in every wine-raising country in the world, so far as I have been able to learn, wine makers have been permitted to correct seasonable deficiencies. Everywhere in the world, perhaps with the single exception of California, there will come a season when the grapes will be deficient in some respect. They will be oversupplied with acid and undersupplied with sugar. Every grape-growing, wine-making country in the world, so far as I know, permits its wine makers to correct the natural deficiency in the grape. The California people have consented to an amendment to permit the Ohio wine growers to do it to the extent of 25 per cent. The difficulty is that the Ohio men say, "Thank you for nothing. Twenty-five per cent will not be of any benefit to us. We want to correct the deficiency when the grape needs it to the extent of 35 per cent. We are willing to do it under the supervision of the Government; we are willing only to do it when the grape needs it; but we deny your right to say to the Ohio wine maker, who has been making wine, and a better wine than yours," as they say, "for the last 60 years, and who was making wine before the State of California came into existence and before these legislative privileges were given to you, what he shall be permitted to do." We have thrashed this all out once or twice, and this is the third time, and it looks like it will not be the last time. We got them all to agree.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, my interest was not so much in the wine makers of California, nor yet of Ohio and the States east of the Rocky Mountains, as it was in the unfortunate consumer who has to drink these different concoctions which vary year by year, owing to climatic conditions. The addition of 35 per cent of water to a gallon of so-called wine simply amounts to selling water for wine. It is like watering milk and then chalking it and grating turnip into it to give it the color. It is something on that style.

Mr. HUGHES. I can only say that I want to reassure the Senator and say to him that the more water the United States Government permits to be added to wine the better it is going to be for the ultimate consumer.

Mr. LANE. I think that is right.

Mr. HUGHES. I can not for the life of me understand why Senators should be so touchy about this matter of permitting pure water and pure sugar to be added to grape juice. The Agricultural Department sees no harm in it. I laid this proposed legislation before them, containing the figures as they are set out before you now. I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN]—who I think rather unkindly threw some doubt upon my veracity yesterday, although I acquit him of any intention to do so, though my attention was called to his language—that when I went to the Agricultural Department I there consulted——

Mr. LANE. Before the Senator answers that, will he not allow me to say just one word? I have no objection to their putting in it all the water that they desire. They can put in 35, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, or 90 per cent water, if they want to, if they will sell it for water.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that they specially designate it as Ohio and as Missouri wine.

Mr. LANE. Watered wine?

Mr. HUGHES. They have the right, and have had the right for 60 years, to designate it in that way, and it has always been called that. It is known to the trade and known to the consumer that wine that is labeled Ohio and Missouri wine is wine to which water and sugar have, in all probability, been added.

Mr. LANE. I did not know it.

Mr. HUGHES. When they go beyond 35 per cent, then the Agricultural Department says they must label the wine "ameliorated wine." The whole difficulty here is that one section of the country where an industry was called into existence by favor, by being made the favorite of legislation, still, not satisfied with the fact that it has 90 or 95 per cent of the industry, wants to lay down definitions and restrictions upon the 5 or 10 per cent that is left in other sections of the country.

Mr. LANE. Then it is ameliorated with water and fortified with alcohol?

Mr. HUGHES. Not necessarily. I tried to explain it to the Senator, but I know how difficult it is to explain anything to the Senator when he does not want to understand it. I have confined myself up to this point to dry wines, which are not fortified at all.

Mr. LANE. I was talking about sweet wine. I guess that is the difference.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, will the Senator inform the Senator from Oregon as to the amount of stretching——

Mr. HUGHES. I have not yielded to the Senator, and I am not going to yield to him. I have been interrupted by him at every stage of this discussion, and I should like to be permitted to make one continuous statement.

I am going now to call the Senator's attention to the fact that when I went to the Agricultural Department and laid the legislation which is now pending before the Senate before those gentlemen down there to see if they had any objection to its form or to its substance I saw Dr. R. L. Emerson, the acting chief of the United States Bureau of Chemistry; I saw Dr. W. P. Jones, the assistant chief of that bureau, and several of the solicitors of the Department of Agriculture who were actively engaged in enforcing the pure-food law. The Bureau of Chemistry has entire charge of enforcing the national pure-food law. Dr. Emerson was acting chief in place of Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, who was out of town that day. Prof. Husmann was also present, but he belongs to the Bureau of Plant Industry. They read these amendments and suggested some slight changes; and after the discussion Dr. Emerson, speaking for the bureau, said they had no objection to the amendment as I submitted it. The pending amendment takes care of the changes they wanted with reference to the definition of sugar.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have spent about enough time on this amendment. I for one should be exceedingly glad to have it disposed of. In closing I content myself with saying that the argument of the Senator from California, like nearly all his arguments, was directed at an amendment which is not before this body. I told him over and over again that the amendment with reference to which the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture was written is not before the Senate, but, as a matter of fact, that I am now proposing a substitute for that amendment.

I ask for a vote.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the debate, and ask for a vote. I merely wish to reaffirm that my amendment is the amendment of the Agricultural Department, and is recommended by the Agricultural Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, were not the yeas and nays ordered on this amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have not been called for nor ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, on a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 21, after the word "wines," to insert "or compound sold as wine"; on page 87, line 1, after the word "paid," to strike out "taxes" and insert "a tax," and in the same line, after the word "at," to strike out "rates as follows" and insert "the rate of 8 cents per wine gallon," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 54. (a) That upon all still wines, including vermuth, and upon all artificial or imitation wines or compound sold as wine hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, and upon all like wines which on the date this section takes effect shall be in the possession or under the control of the producer, holder, dealer, or compounder there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax at the rate of 8 cents per wine gallon.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, we are now approaching the rates fixed in the bill, and I desire to address myself to the Senate on that subject. I did not ask for a roll call on my amendment, because it seemed to be highly technical, and any modifications can well be made in the committee of conference. I have had intimations to that effect from Members who probably will sit in conference; but a matter of rates is well within the understanding of the Senate. It is a matter of raising revenue, the very purpose for which we are here.

As the law now stands there is a tax of 55 cents per gallon levied on brandy used in fortification, and it is proposed by the Senate committee to perpetuate that emergency tax which was adopted a year and a half ago. Twenty-six years ago the rate fixed on brandy used in fortification made on the premises of the winery was set at 3 cents a gallon, and the grape brandy so used led to the upbuilding of the sweet-wine industry of California, which attained a degree of productiveness which enabled us two years ago to produce 20,000,000 gallons of wine; and under the emergency tax which is now sought to be perpetuated the volume was reduced to 6,000,000 gallons, the difference between 20,000,000 gallons and 6,000,000 gallons being the measure of injury done not only to the wine growers but also to the Government. As we are here for the purpose of raising revenue, naturally the Treasury Department was interested in the situation, and during the entire year since the beginning of this Congress there have been debates and discussions between the department and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, and as a result the House provided for the taxation of wines as follows: Ten cents a gallon instead of 55 cents a gallon upon grape brandies used in fortification, and then, on top of that, 10 cents a gallon upon the wine itself after it is made, which means 13 cents a gallon, because a tax of 10 cents a gallon on brandy used in fortification means in the final product the levying of a tax of 3 cents. So, with 10 cents, a direct tax upon wine by the gallon, and 3 cents added for fortification, we have a tax of 13 cents. Under the 55-cent tax which has existed for a year, and which it is sought to reenact, the tax at once rises to 23 cents a gallon, and as the wine does not sell in normal times for more than 30 cents, it leaves no profit to the grower of the grape either for his labor or for his investment. Hence it is destructive, and it has actually worked out in that way.

So we are confronted with a proposition so simple that he who runs might read, that if this law is passed in its present form you destroy the subject of taxation; you kill the goose that lays the golden egg; you cut down the tree in order to gather the fruit; and I can not imagine such fatuity.

But it was stated here yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that California, because she has enjoyed for 26 years a 3-cent tax on brandy used in fortification, has actually despoiled the United States Government of something like $70,000,000. He figures that in this manner: That if the Government had collected $1.10 per gallon on brandy used in fortification, on the volume of business done by California in the production of sweet wines over a period of 26 years, that sum would have amounted to $70,000,000. But, of course, his argument is absolutely without foundation and utterly fallacious, because it was the 3-cent tax that enabled the sweet-wine industry to be developed at all, and if there had been a tax of $1.10 there would have been no sweet-wine industry upon which to levy a tax.

Notwithstanding the disparity between 3 cents and $1.10 no fortunes have been made in the wine-growing business in California. The people earn a mere subsistence and little more; the California Wine Association, to which I referred yesterday as a nefarious monopoly and which epithet I desire to withdraw; I did not mean to use such strong language, because it is an important agency, and because it only took advantage of an act of Congress and canceled its contracts with the growers, something which might very well entitle it to divide the epithet with Congress itself. But I say that notwithstanding the great difference between the tax enjoyed for 26 years and the tax put on as an emergency matter and which is now sought to be reenacted, no fortunes have been made in that industry; and this same California Wine Association, which is a great purchaser of wine, has been in financial distress during the last 5 or 10 years, and its stock has fallen 50 per cent in the market. So it is not fair to say that California has imposed upon the Federal Government; and whatever collections have been made from the sweet-wine industry is good money which otherwise would not have been forthcoming to the Government.

Approximately 6,000,000 gallons of brandy are made each year in California, of which 2,000,000 gallons are used for commercial purposes, leaving 4,000,000 gallons for the making of sweet wine. I claim that the 4,000,000 gallons used in the fortification of sweet wines never would have been made had it not been for the fact that it is used in fortifying process. Therefore it is perfectly clear that the Government has not lost any money, as the Senator from Ohio stated yesterday. If the tax of 55 cents is imposed again this year, only a very little sweet wine will be made by a few wine makers who will be able to pay the tax 90 days after assessment. Some of the grapes will be made into dry wines, which will have a tendency to ruin and demoralize the dry-wine market by making an inferior dry wine out of the sweet-wine grapes, and also by overproduction. The great raisin industry will also be imperiled by glut and by the inferior quality of the raisins, which will be made of wine grapes by growers seeking a market at any price. The balance of the grapes will rot on the vine, as they did last year.

This brandy which is taxed under the emergency law at 55 cents, and which the House taxed at 10 cents, is the brandy made of the very grapes that make the wine in the winery. It is not made for the purpose of selling it upon the market as brandy, and when it is so sold outside of the use of fortification it pays the dollar and 10 cents tax, so there is a perfect equality between all the wine makers of the country, so far as grape brandy is concerned. California uses the brandy made upon the premises, and under the House bill would pay 10 cents, and the men in Ohio and in Missouri can make their grape brandy in the same manner and pay the same rate. But they do not make their grape brandy for that fortification. They make it for sale, because grape brandy used for fortification is worth only 22 cents, whereas they can sell the brandy free of tax for $1. Hence it is more profitable to the men of Ohio and Missouri to sell their grape brandy in the market for commercial use than it is to convert it into brandy for fortification.

Now, when I tell you that the New York wine makers, where the industry is of first importance, have been behind this measure which I advocate, the House rate, and the Secretary of Agriculture, as I have shown, it will be seen that there is nothing sectional about my advocacy. They go into the market and they buy California grape brandy for the purpose of fortifying their New York sweet wine, and the records of the department which I have here state that they used 67,000 gallons of such California grape brandy last year.

That means that the New York makers realize, as they testified before the committee, that grape brandy is superior for the purpose of fortification to ordinary brandy, and that they can well afford to purchase grape brandy in making perfect wines in that State, because there is always a certain congeniality between the product of the grape, and if you introduce extraneous substances you destroy that congeniality and you do not therefore get a perfect product.

So the Senator from Ohio is clearly wrong when he says that California is escaping a tax which otherwise it should pay and which falls as a burden upon the rest of the country. The California grape-wine brandy is made in the wineries from the same grapes which are used for the purpose of making the wine. It makes a homogeneous mixture, and therefore it enjoys the quality which I fear has excited the envy and the jealousy of other States not so highly favored by nature.

But after all it is only a question of revenue. I am not going to give my own words for the statement which I have made that the imposition of the 55 cents tax upon grape brandy will not only ruin the industry but necessarily destroy the subject of taxation. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, June 3, 1916, from which I will quote:

> 1. In a reclassification of the wines and the imposition of the following rates of tax in place of those now contained in the bill, namely, on wines containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, a tax of 3 cents a gallon; on wines containing more than 14 per cent and not exceeding 21 per cent, 10 cents a gallon, with a proviso that all wines containing more than 21 per cent of absolute alcohol shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall pay tax accordingly.

That is to say, any wines containing more than 21 per cent of alcohol shall be taxed as spirits at the rate of $1.10, but legitimate wines shall be taxed according to the schedule which he enumerates and which has substantially been incorporated in the bill by the House, the provision which I am now advocating. He says furthermore:

> Regarding these proposed amendments, I would state that the classification and rates contained in the bill and recommended in my letter to you under date of March 6, 1916, and also in a letter addressed to Representative KENT under date of March 15, were the rates which, from the best information obtainable, seem to be the most likely to produce the maximum revenue at this time without injury to the wine industry.

The Secretary of the Treasury, charged with the national finances, says, under date of May 19, 1916, to Representative RAINEY, that these rates will produce the maximum revenue. He is not speaking idly—he knows by experience—because this 55 cents tax has been enforced for more than a year and a half. He says:

> The records show that since the enactment of the present wine law there has been a large falling off not only in the production of certain grades of wines but in the quantity of brandy used for fortifying purposes.

The very point is made, that when you burden an industry you diminish the output; and hence the figures of the Senator from Ohio are of no value, because he assumes that the wine industry is so strong that it will pay any income tax that may be imposed no matter how excessive.

> This large decrease is doubtless due mainly, if not wholly, to the high rates of tax now imposed; and it is reasonable to conclude that, under the reduced rates of tax provided for in the pending bill—

That is, the House bill which I advocate—> the wine industry will again assume normal proportions.

Then he says that under this emergency tax the sweet wine has fallen off, as I before stated on my own authority, from 20,000,000 gallons to 6,000,000 gallons, and whereas it was estimated that there would be a yield of $4,600,000 in revenue it fell off a million and a half dollars. After computing all the sources of revenue, not only derived from sweet wines, but from dry wines and from cordials, there is a loss of a million dollars and a half. I will quote him again:

> The above figures, based on incomplete returns, show conclusively that the pending bill, even though it reduces the present rates of taxation from 35 to 50 per cent, will provide an increase of revenue of over a million and a half annually.

By the reduction of the rates provided in the House bill under the emergency rates that now exist there will be an increase of a million and a half. He adds:

> Moreover, the bill provided a permanent tax whereas the present law was enacted merely to provide a temporary source of revenue.

And again:

> Another advantage is that with the improved administrative features of the pending bill there will be little opportunity to evade payment of taxes. Under the present law there have been discovered flagrant abuses and evasions.

So the House provision not only will provide more revenue, it will not only preserve the industry but improve all the administrative features by which the evasion of the taxes will be made an impossibility.

The final figures of his letter show the average price received. I consider this important and as he has repeated it I will repeat it.

The average for three seasons, in the production of sweet wines in California, show 20,993,000 gallons; the production in the 1915–16 season 6,051,000 gallons, or a drop of about 72 per cent.

It is therefore perfectly apparent that if we are here for the purpose of raising revenue without destroying the subject of taxation it is wise to follow the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the House committee. In the House under the Constitution all revenue-producing bills must originate. Consideration was given to this measure extending over a period from last February until the bill was reported to the Senate. I must say that the House, following the advice of the Department of the Treasury and profiting by its experience, has in my judgment given us a bill which we can, to say the least, safely follow.

California is of course more interested in this schedule than any other State, and whereas other States produce wines in large quantities California ranks them all. But that does not make by any means this question a local one. The Congress of the United States has just as much concern for the interest and right of the humblest of the sisterhood of States as it has for the greatest in importance or the greatest number. It can not be possible that a State like California producing 90 per cent of the product will be sacrificed in order to enhance the political or other interests of any other State or set of States.

I would hate to see the wine growers of California made the victims of legislation prompted by any other motive than that of the good of the whole country; and yet, if any sacrifice is to be made, it would be utterly impolitic for Congress to sacrifice the greater State to the smaller State, because the small State, with an inferior area given to grape cultivation, could the more quickly recover. But there is no question of that kind involved. The laws of Congress apply equally to all States; but as the industry in California is out of all proportion to the industry in other States, it must either bear the brunt of excessive taxation or go out of business. Injustice is very often done by legislation. There are three sources of injustice, I have read: Force is one, malicious ensnarement under color of the law is another, and a third is hardness of the law itself. I am pleading against the hardness of the law itself.

I have here from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture a brief table showing the production of wine, which, he says, may be regarded as ultra conservative: Southern States, 500,000 gallons; New Jersey, 250,000 gallons; New York, 2,500,000 gallons; Ohio, 2,000,000 gallons; Western States, 750,000 gallons; California, 39,000,000 gallons; all other States, 500,000 gallons, making a total of 45,500,000 gallons a year, of which, as you see, California produces about 90 per cent. Therefore California has a right to be heard.

I have read the letter even from the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], who has in these Halls consistently advocated temperance. He says as long as the industry is recognized he is strongly in favor of this legislation which I am advocating to-day. He certainly is not in favor of imposing upon the country an inferior wine, nor is he in favor by legislation to impose a prohibitive tax. That is not the way he fights. If he is for prohibition, he votes for prohibition, but he does not stab an industry in the back under the guise of taxation.

Senator WORKS knows very well that the wine interests of California can not be classified with the whisky interest, and it is the bane of our position that the whisky interests will force their association upon the wine interest. Everyone concedes that the drinking of whisky is a national vice, whereas the drinking of wine, a food beverage, so declared by the Agricultural Department, is, when used in moderation as in all the Latin countries of Europe and in our own country where the Latin population lives, a matter of daily diet, and you never see drunkenness among those people.

The classic centenarian of the fifteenth century, I think his name was Luigi Cornaro, wrote a book on long life. He was a resident of Venice and attained an age of something like 110 years, although up to 40 years he had led a riotous life, and he was the marvel of his generation. He states in that book that what caused him to live to that very ripe and unusual age was the daily use of pure wine made of the juice of grapes. He went further than the connoisseurs by saying that the newer the wine was the better the wine was—for him, at any rate.

There is a gentleman, a distinguished ornament of this body, who assured me that one of his ancestors was totally opposed to wine drinking in any form until he went to California. He went to California for his health, and he recovered his health there, not, it is claimed, by reason of the sunshine, not by the ocean breezes, but by the moderate use of wine. When he came back to his eastern home and persisted in his habit of drinking wine the neighbors were all shocked and alarmed that this good man had departed from the ways of grace. But there he learned that the use of wine, far from exhilarating even, certainly far from intoxicating, was a suitable article of daily diet and added to his strength and vigor and helped the debilitated and the weak body, after the labors of his years of life, to enjoy in his declining days some measure of comfort and of health.

I do not know, therefore, why even the men who advocate temperance should seek to destroy this industry indirectly by taxation.

I have here a telegram, just received, from Mr. Sbarboro, president of the Italian-American Bank, the founder of the famous Swiss-Italian colony in California, where champagnes are made by the champagne process, a most wonderful and beautiful country, where all the charms of France and Italy are reproduced in our own soil. He simply says, succinctly:

> Protect the light table wine; only remedy for alcoholism.

The only remedy for alcoholism, he declares, is the light table wine, and the Bible tells us—and I should like to address this to the Senator from Ohio:

> Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake.

The Senator's purpose is to convert wine into water; his purpose is to reduce the quality; and the reason why the Agricultural Department opposes it is very largely because by that dilution you destroy the food value of wine. Knowing wine as I do, I would not recommend those who desire to become centenarians, who want to live longer than a period of a hundred years, nor the debilitated men from the East who come to California for their health, to drink anything like that, although it may be, under authority of an act of Congress, labeled "wine," when, in fact, it is water and sugar. That legislation is most preposterous, and I can not believe that it will survive the conference. It is the only hope. It is preposterous to believe that under the authority of law the Agricultural Department, against its protest, will be dragooned into saying that water and sugar are wine. Let them call it, as they have a right now under the law to call it, "imitation wine"; let them call it "sarsaparilla"; let them call it "coca-cola." There are a thousand and one concoctions, no doubt grateful to the taste, even if productive of headaches, that are available for those who seek "soft drinks" and believe that in pursuing that course to avoid intemperance; but certainly let the public be advised what are the contents of the container.

Mr. President, the Senator in his remarks stated that 10 per cent of the wine produced in the country is produced outside of California. Granted. Under the law now the same magical 10 per cent is the limitation imposed upon the stretching or expanding of the wine; and that Missouri and Ohio have always enjoyed in recent years; but he did not state that, whereas the amendment proposed by me allowed 25 per cent expansion, his amendment not only allowed 35 per cent expansion, to which he referred often and again, but on top of that another 35 per cent.

I submit that by allowing that expansion we destroy the pure-wine industry of the country: we seriously affect the revenue; and, in estimating the revenue for next year, we can not delude ourselves into the belief that by increasing artificially the volume of wine we will create an increase in the revenue. I do not believe that the California sweet-wine industry will survive this tax. I have demonstrated to you that by actual trial and experiment we know, because the present tax, which they seek to reenact, has been in force for a year and a half, and it has caused 67 per cent loss of volume to the industry and the serious loss of expected revenue to the Government.

I therefore move as an amendment to the proposal of the Finance Committee, on page 87, the restoration of the rates imposed by the House bill, which read:

> On wines containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 4 cents per wine gallon, the per cent of alcohol taxable under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight.
>
> On wines containing more than 14 per cent and not exceeding 21 per cent of absolute alcohol, 10 cents per wine gallon.
> On wines containing more than 21 per cent and not exceeding 24 per cent of absolute alcohol, 25 cents per wine gallon.

I am informed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that it will be better to put the motion in another form and to disagree to the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not need any motion whatever. If the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the Senate committee, it leaves the bill as the Senator from California wants it left.

Mr. PHELAN. Then it is a question, without any motion, of agreeing or disagreeing to the recommendations of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without any motion, the question of agreeing to the Senate committee amendment. If not agreed to, the bill will be left as the Senator from California desires.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the Senator from California includes in his motion to disagree all the language down to and including line 12, on page 87, I presume?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no need of a motion to disagree. The motion is on agreeing to the committee amendment. If that is voted down, then the committee amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I wanted to include in the motion all of the language that is germane, which will include all of the language down to and including the end of line 12, on page 87.

Mr. PHELAN. That is my intention. I should like to have the committee amendment down to the end of line 12, on page 87, disagreed to.

Mr. PHELAN subsequently said: Mr. President, as part of my remarks, I ask permission to insert certain telegrams and statistical tables.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., August 14, 1916.

Senator F. M. SIMMONS,
Washington, D. C.:

This department of the State government wishes to advise you correctly in relation to the personnel of Mr. H. E. Welch and his authority for being in Washington in behalf of relief legislation for our grape growers. Mr. Welch represents the State Viticultural Commission of California, which is charged by statute of this State with fostering and protecting our great vineyard interests, which are valued at $150,000,000 and which have long received State and Federal aid. We now have 14 Government experimental vineyards in California, and there are 370,000 acres in grapes under cultivation here alone. We want you to know that before going to Washington, Mr. Welch made a tour of the entire vineyard districts of this State under the auspices of this board and met thousands of the growers and manufacturers of wine. The efforts of the board and of Mr. Welch are unanimously indorsed, and we indignantly resent the insinuation of eastern rectifiers with ulterior motives that Welch represents special interests. The most that Mr. Welch will ever get for all the time he has spent in Washington will be his actual living expenses, and no other remuneration. He is not an attorney but merely a practical business man living in California in the midst of a great vineyard section in San Joaquin County, and he gives up his time for nothing but the good of the general industry.

Your departments at Washington know what the emergency tax has done to this industry. They will tell you that it destroyed four-fifths of the sweet-wine production and gained the Government but a little more in taxes, and that the burden fell heaviest on the thousands of tillers of the soil, whom we want to help most of all. Please do not believe that Mr. Welch is in the same rôle as Theodore Bell, who went to Washington two years ago to represent the California Wine Association, and who was their paid attorney. Mr. Welch receives no pay and represents the whole industry. Your emergency tax two years ago enabled those interests represented by Bell to cancel hundreds of term contracts with growers, and these growers are all in hearty accord with our efforts and those of Mr. Welch. We can not live under the present tax, but we are going to try to exist under the moderated form of tax passed in the House bill. Please assist us in this fair, open, and just effort for relief.

We can send you all the credentials you wish as to the motives of Mr. Welch and this board. They are above suspicion and reproach.

E. M. SHEEHAN,
Secretary State Board of Viticulture.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 19, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM KENT,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. KENT: Responding to a telephone request from your office on April 5 for estimates of the production of dry wines, champagnes, cordials, and compounds in the United States, by States and counties, if possible, the inclosed memorandum prepared in the Bureau of Plant Industry is submitted.

It is regretted that the statistical information available does not furnish the information in detail with respect to the quantities of the several types produced in the several States and localities.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. MARVIN, Acting Secretary.

Memorandum on production of wine, in response to a telephone request from the Hon. WILLIAM KENT, April 5, 1916, for estimates of quantities of dry wines, champagnes, cordials, and compounds produced in the United States, by States and counties, if possible.

We have no adequate basis for estimating the production of these several products in the detail requested, the statistical information showing only the totals. It is known, however, that a large part of the sweet and sparkling wine output is confined to a very few States and localities.

New York State produces the great bulk of the sparkling wines (not carbonated) made in this country, and most of them are made in the Keuka Lake district, although some establishments are also to be found in other districts, as the Hudson River district; in Ohio, in Erie and Cuyahoga and other counties on Lake Erie. In New Jersey in the Egg Harbor district, and in Virginia, at Norfolk, limited quantities are made. In California there are three sparkling-wine establishments of importance—the Paul Masson Co., at San Jose; the Italian-Swiss Colony, at Asti; and Korbel Bros., at Guerneville.

Under sparkling wines are not included artificially charged wines.

As regards sweet wines, the great bulk of them are made in California, where until last year the annual output in recent years has been from 16,000,000 to 19,000,000 gallons. The counties in which these are principally made are Fresno, San Joaquin, Merced, Kern, Sacramento, Placer, Yolo, Los Angeles and San Bernardino.

Dry wines are not only made where the sweet and sparkling wines are, but are the wines produced in other parts of the country.

The counties considered most important in wine output in New York are Chautauqua, Ontario, Orange, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Ulster, and Yates. In Ohio, Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Erie, Lake, Lorain, Lucas, and Ottawa Counties, and Kelleys Island, Middle Bass and Marblehead Islands. In New Jersey, Atlantic and Cumberland Counties. In Virginia, Albemarle and Norfolk Counties. There are, of course, other counties in each of the States mentioned making dry wines.

Excepting last year (1915), which was an exceedingly poor year so far as the grape crop is concerned, the following figures are about what the average annual total wine production (this includes the unfermented grape juice) in the United States has averaged since 1910, as published in the trade papers:

	Gallons
Southern States	500,000
New Jersey	250,000
New York	2,500,000
Ohio	2,000,000
Western States	750,000
California	39,000,000
All other States	500,000
Total	45,500,000

These estimates are regarded as ultraconservative, the total output probably being 20 to 30 per cent larger.

PENN YAN, N. Y., August 14, 1916.

E. L. TRAVIS,
Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

A fortifying tax of 55 cents payable when spirits used will prohibit making sweet wines in California and mean confiscation of millions of investment in vineyards and wineries.

Any eastern sweet wine manufacturer satisfied with this tax hopes to profit by the catastrophe to California grape growers.

No California company can finance the tax, as banks won't lend money.

PAUL GARRETT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
Washington, D. C., August 14, 1916.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PHELAN: I understand the statement has been made that Garrett & Co., wine makers, are in favor of the Pomerene or committee amendment to the wine schedule in the pending revenue bill. I desire to say emphatically that Garrett & Co. are unalterably opposed to the committee amendment and to the Pomerene amendment and cordially favors your amendment.

Garrett & Co. are also opposed to the use of grain spirits in fortifying wine and opposed to any amelioration beyond 35 per cent. I refer you to a brief filed by me before the subcommittee.

Yours respectfully,

E. L. TRAVIS,
Attorney for Garrett & Co.

NEW YORK CITY, April 7, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM KENT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KENT: Your letter of April 6 has just been read with the greatest of interest as it is the most honest expression of true facts that I have ever read or heard uttered by any California wine maker.

I wish to state my personal opinion as a practical eastern wine maker and not in an official capacity as president of the American Wine Growers' Association. In the many years that I have been associated with members of the American Wine Growers' Association it has been seldom that I have met a man who is willing to talk honestly in regard to the manufacturing of wines.

* * * * * * *

We are opposed to the "stretching" of wine as much as any house in America and feel that the ideas of this California gentleman that amelioration should be allowed to the extent of 25 per cent is extremely liberal, as in almost every year this amount would be entirely too much. If the revenue department stands firm on the question of Government supervision we are willing to submit to this if every section in the country has the same strict supervision, as we personally have nothing to fear, except that as wine makers for over 50 years and having learned by experience the different methods of handling wines to perfect them to the highest possible degree, we do not feel that we should be compelled to allow a Government officer to come into our cellars all through the wine-making season and acquire our methods, which have cost us so many years of experience, to find out how to perfect our wines to the standard which they now hold and then have the same Government officer go to other cellars and impart our methods to other wine makers.

* * * * * * * *

Thanking you sincerely for sending me your letter of April 6, which I shall cherish most highly, I am, with the highest respect,

Yours, very truly,

HIRAM S. DEWEY,
Vice President H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.

THE SWEET VALLEY WINE CO.,
Sandusky, Ohio, April 8, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM KENT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KENT: Your favor of the 6th instant received; and the further you go into this matter of enacting into law a bill defining wines, the more you will find out that our contention from this locality has some merits. I believe you have already been convinced of that; I can not help but feel that people from other sections are helping to establish and fix the truth in your mind. Your friend from California speaks the truth, and I simply want to add at this time that it is still my honest opinion that a wine should be permitted to be ameliorated with sugar and water, or both when required, and that the amelioration should not reduce the natural acid content of the wine when put on the market below five per mill. It may seem that at times a larger per cent of amelioration could be used than you would like; however, there are many times when a smaller per cent would be used. There are so many years when you would require less than 25 per cent amelioration—we will say even less than 20 per cent—and some grapes would not require any amelioration, providing amelioration was established on the basis which I have said heretofore, namely, not less than 5 per cent acid and not over 13 per cent alcohol.

I wish you would use your influence along this particular line, which is the only honest way to make a merchantable and salable article, and the only way to keep all wine makers honest as to the amount of amelioration. You know under such a method it could be easily determined whether a wine maker was going beyond the limit permitted or not.

With kindest regards,

Yours, very truly,

WM. H. RINEHART.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 11, 1916.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate:

My most urgent protest against proposed wine tax. Those rates have nearly ruined the California industry, and their continuance will finish the job, and will not produce revenue.

WILLIAM KENT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, August 21, 1916.

Hon. BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: After six months' work and study am absolutely certain that raise in wine tax and lowering in quality, as provided in Senate amendments, will be destructive of industry in California, where 90 per cent of legitimate wine is produced. Without fullest unqualified indorsement of the Treasury Department we can not expect justice or revenue.

Senate proposes:

First, excessive tax.

Second, breakdown of pure-food powers of Agricultural Department.

Third, a premium on sour and unripe grapes.

Fourth, a practical elimination of use of second-quality grapes for brandy in fortification.

Fifth, almost unlimited use of sugar for glucose and water instead of grapes.

The standard based on acid contents is as absurd as to permit use of flour adulterants in proportion to the weevils in the flour. Whisky-made-glucose makers and sour-grape growers are all favored by Senate amendments and those able and willing to produce pure standard wine made of good grapes are penalized. My criticism is not sectional, as my views have been indorsed by the New York wine makers and many others. The Treasury Department should work in harmony with the Agricultural Department as to pure-food requirements, as provided in my bill. The grape growers are not asking for privilege, but merely that they shall not heedlessly be taxed out of business nor ruined by enforced competition with acid, glucose, water, and cheap alcohol.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM KENT.

[From the Sacramento Bee of Aug. 2, 1915.]

SENATOR WORKS IS AGAINST BRANDY TAX; SAYS IT IS UNFAIR—HE ASSURES VITICULTURAL COMMISSION HE WILL WORK FOR ITS REPEAL.

Although a strong and outspoken opponent of the liquor traffic, including the wine industry of California, Senator JOHN D. WORKS is stoutly opposed to any unfair and unjust legislation by Congress, with particular reference to the proposed tax on brandy, which the growers claim will ruin the wine industry.

In a letter to E. M. Sheehan, secretary of the State Viticultural Commission, Senator WORKS declares he will do anything he can to relieve the industry from the menace that threatens it.

In discussing the letter to-day Commissioner Sheehan asserts that he considers it one of the strongest arguments in the hands of the growers and wine men against the proposed ruinous tax on brandy for fortifying purposes contemplated by Congress.

SENATOR WORKS'S LETTER.

Here is Senator WORKS's letter, in part:

"I had hoped that the grape growers and wine manufacturers of California had escaped the high taxation that Congress had attempted to impose upon them. It seems now, however, that, in the ruling made by the commissioner of internal revenue, they have not escaped. I think this is entirely unjust, and I shall be very glad to do anything I can to relieve the industry from this condition.

"I shall be very glad to see the time when the grape growers are able to dispose of their products for something else besides the making of wine, and the wine makers may find a more profitable business than that of wine making, and that California may no longer be burdened by the liquor traffic.

"But so long as the making of wine is allowed by law the industry should be protected from unfair and unjust legislation."

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a good deal of the debate which has preceded this motion has not been pertinent to the matter now before the Senate. The Finance Committee has decided that it would attempt to settle this controversy by reverting to the legislation which was enacted by the consent of all of the parties when the emergency act referred to went into effect.

The Senator from California argues that the rate of tax was so high that the legislation defeated its own purpose. So far as I am concerned, I am compelled absolutely to dissent from that view and to disagree with the Senator. The United States Government failed to get the amount of revenue that it was estimated it would get under this legislation for the reason that the California wine people had time to make certain preparations between the date when the legislation was agreed upon and the date when the legislation went into effect; which preparation enabled them to defeat the object and purpose of the legislation. They fortified their wine before the tax was due, and subsequently, to a great extent, the tax was evaded by the failure of the sellers to affix the stamp required under the administrative provisions of the law before the wine could be sold to the ultimate consumer. The California sweet-wine producers were under the impression, and risked all on the chance, that the law known as the emergency law would indeed be an emergency law, and that the taxes laid therein would not be laid for more than a year. If they had been correct in that, they would have saved something like $4,000,000 in taxes. It was estimated that the Government would collect something like $7,000,000 from the wine schedule last year, but because of the manner in which they dealt with this emergency legislation and the means employed to evade the payment of the tax the Government collected something like $3,000,000, a net loss to the Government because of the evasion of the law of $4,000,000. This year the tax will have to be paid. There will be no opportunity to fortify that wine before the law goes into effect, because the law is now in effect and will continue to be in effect unless the Congress changes it.

The amendment which the Finance Committee has reported and asks favorable action on at the hands of this body is the same and provides the same rate of taxation as the present law. I do not know that there is anything further to be said on the subject. If the Senator from California is satisfied, I am, to leave it to the decision of this body, and I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PHELAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator will withdraw his point of no quorum and renew his request for the yeas and nays, we may save time by getting a vote at the same time the roll is being called.

Mr. PHELAN. Very well. I withdraw the suggestion of the lack of a quorum and renew my request for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS (when Mr. BECKHAM's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent on business. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I announce my pair and transfer as heretofore, and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], and withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and, he not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I would vote "yea" upon this motion, but I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and can not obtain a transfer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has not voted. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HUSTING. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. The senior Senator from Kentucky is unavoidably absent on official business.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am informed that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not voted, and, having a pair with him, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who, I believe, has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish again to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on account of illness.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and to state that he has a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I am not prepared to say how my colleague would vote on this matter if he were present.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN];

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

The roll call resulted—yeas 36, nays 3, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Hardwick	Myers	Smith, Ga.

Lewis	Pomerene	Smoot	Wadsworth
McCumber	Saulsbury	Sterling	Weeks
Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Stone	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll-call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea," and if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his named was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I am not able to obtain a transfer so I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I again withhold my vote on account of my pair with that Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and withhold my vote. While I am on my feet I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], who is absent on official business, and is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted; but I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. BRYAN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] which I transfer to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CHILTON. I voted "yea" in order to make a quorum, notwithstanding my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The roll call resulted—yeas 41, nays 4, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the question of agreeing to the committee amendment the yeas are 41, the nays are 4, Senators KERN, OVERMAN, SAULSBURY, SHERMAN, THOMAS, LEWIS, VARDAMAN, and STONE being in the Chamber and not voting. The amendment is agreed to.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to occupy a very few minutes in the discussion of an important matter.

The Democratic National Convention held in Baltimore in June, 1912, adopted the following plank, which became a part of the platform on which Prof. Woodrow Wilson was elected to the Presidency of the United States:

> The high cost of living is a serious problem in every American home. The Republican Party, in its platform, attempts to escape from responsibility for present conditions by denying that they are due to a protective tariff. We take issue with them on this subject, and charge that excessive prices result in a large measure from the high tariff laws enacted and maintained by the Republican Party and from trusts and commercial conspiracies fostered and encouraged by such laws, and we assert that no substantial relief can be secured for the people without import duties on the necessaries of life are materially reduced and these criminal conspiracies broken up.

Four years have elapsed since that declaration was made, and it is interesting to note what the result has been under the operations of the near free-trade law of the Democratic Party enacted October 3, 1913.

I have taken the trouble to have a table prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, showing the relative retail prices of 15 of the principal articles of food in June of each year, 1912 to 1916, inclusive. To form a basis for the table the price for June, 1912, is placed at 100, and the price for each succeeding year is figured accordingly.

It will be observed that in June, 1913, there was a considerable increase in the entire list, with the exception of flour, corn meal, potatoes, and sugar. In June, 1914, there was also a considerable increase in everything except the four articles above mentioned, with butter added. In 1915 every article in the list, with the single exception of potatoes, also increased over June, 1912, while in June, 1916, there is a very large increase over any of the preceding years.

A careful calculation shows that with 100 as a basis for 1912 the 1916 percentage is 114, or an increase of 14 per cent in the cost of the combined articles since the date of the declaration in the Democratic platform.

I beg to request that the table be inserted at this point without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Month and year.	Sirloin steak.	Round steak.	Rib roast.	Pork chops	Bacon, smoked.	Ham, smoked.	Lard, pure.	Hens.	Eggs, strictly fresh.	Butter, creamery.	Milk, fresh.	Flour, wheat.	Corn meal.	Potatoes, Irish.	Sugar granulated.
June, 1912	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
June, 1913	109	109	103	110	112	112	107	109	105	104	103	92	95	61	84
June, 1914	110	114	105	114	111	110	104	110	106	100	103	91	99	77	81
June, 1915	110	113	104	109	111	106	102	105	101	103	102	118	104	58	109
June, 1916	120	126	115	121	119	120	116	122	113	109	103	107	104	98	138

Mr. GALLINGER. The increases in cost of these articles of necessity in every American household were certainly not affected in price by the European war prior to June, 1914, and as the imports from Canada of food products since that time have been the largest in our history, it is equally evident that war conditions have had no substantial influence in adding to the high cost of living, the Democratic claim being that placing foodstuffs on the free list, as was done in the Underwood-Simmons tariff law, would greatly reduce their cost to the American people, another instance of the fallacy of Democratic reasoning on economic questions.

ATTENDANCE OF ABSENT SENATORS.

Mr. KERN. Before proceeding with the revenue bill I desire to present a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read subject to objection.

The resolution (S. Res. 259) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that in the present emergency every Member of this body not excused on account of illness should be in attendance upon his duties, and that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each absent Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to offer a proposed amendment that it may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table to be called up at the proper time.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 144, after section 102a, add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 102b. That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency, contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted, the President is authorized and empowered, within his discretion, to prohibit or restrict during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force the importation into the United States of similar articles; or, in case the United States does not import similar articles from that country, then other articles, products of such country, dependency, or colony, as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 or more than $50,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation, in his discretion."

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 87, line 13, after the word "than," to strike out "24" and insert "21"; in line 14, after the word "alcohol," to insert "by volume"; and in line 15, after the word "accordingly," to strike out "Provided, That on all unsold still wines in actual possession of the producer at the time this title takes effect, upon which the tax imposed by the act approved October 22, 1914, entitled 'An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes,' and the joint resolution approved December 17, 1915, entitled 'Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916,' has been assessed, the tax so assessed shall be abated, or, if paid, refunded under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

All such wines containing more than 21 per cent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall pay tax accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 9, after the word "this," to strike out "title" and insert "section"; on page 89, line 3, before the word "removed," to insert "otherwise"; and in line 6, after "and," to insert "to," so as to make the clause read:

(b) That the taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by stamp on removal of the wines from the customhouse, winery, or other bonded place of storage for consumption or sale, and every person hereafter producing, or having in his possession or under his control when this section takes effect, any wines subject to the tax imposed in this section shall file such notice, describing the premises on which such wines are produced or stored; shall execute a bond in such form; shall make such inventories under oath; and shall, prior to sale or removal for consumption, affix to each cask or vessel containing such wine such marks, labels, or stamps as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe; and the premises described in such notice shall, for the purpose of this section, be regarded as bonded premises. But the provisions of this subdivision of this section, except as to payment of tax and the affixing of the required stamps or labels, shall not apply to wines held by retail dealers, as defined in section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, nor, subject to regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall the tax imposed by this section apply to wines produced for the family use of the producer thereof and not sold or otherwise removed from the place of manufacture and not exceeding in any case 200 gallons per year. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to have prepared and to issue such stamps denoting payment of the tax imposed by this section as he may deem requisite and necessary; and until such stamps are provided the taxes imposed by this section shall be assessed and collected as other taxes are assessed and collected, and all provisions of law relating to assesssment and collection of taxes, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to the taxes imposed by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 23, after the words "tax of," to strike out "10" and insert "55," so as to read:

(c) That under such regulations and official supervision and upon the giving of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, any producer of wines taxable under the provisions of this section may withdraw from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse grape brandy or wine spirits for the fortification of such wines on the premises where actually made: Provided, That there shall be levied and assessed against the producer of such wines a tax of 55 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy or wine spirits so used by him in the fortification of such wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within 90 days from the date of notice thereof: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as exempting any wines, cordials, liqueurs, or similar compounds from the payment of any tax provided for in this section.

That sections 42, 43, and 45 of the act of October 1, 1890, as amended by section 68 of the act of August 27, 1894, are further amended to read as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 2, on page 91.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to offer a verbal amendment, a formal amendment. On page 89, line 18, I move to strike out the word "taxable" and insert the word "defined."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. On the same page, line 19, after the word "section," I move to insert the words "or section 53 of this act." It is in the interest of clarity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 7, on page 92.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of this branch of the bill——

Mr. HUGHES. I wish the Senator would wait until the Secretary finishes the reading of the section. I have some amendments to offer.

Mr. POMERENE. I was simply going to call attention to the two provisos which the Secretary has read and to ask the Senator a question. This seems to define the amount of sugar which may be added and provides also that the addition of water shall be "under such regulations and limitations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe." Is not that inconsistent with the amendment which the Senator offered and which was adopted?

Mr. HUGHES. This applies to sweet wines; the other applied to dry wine.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not clear about it and simply wanted to call attention to it.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think there is any inconsistency. This is the way the department wishes it. Let the Secretary read the rest of the section.

The Secretary read to line 17, page 92.

Mr. HUGHES. On page 91, line 19, after the words "dextrose sugar," I move to insert the words "containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar calculated on a dry basis."

I offer this amendment on the suggestion of the Agricultural Department to define sugar in terms rather than to let it remain as described in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. On page 92 of the same section, I move to strike out the words "so used" and to insert the words "added for sweetening purposes." This amendment is simply formal and in the interest of clarity.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. On the same page, line 5, I move to strike out the words "and limitation," so that it will read "under such regulations as the Commissioner of Revenue," and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 19, after the word "premises," to insert "or from said premises to other bonded premises: Provided, That not more than one such additional removal shall be allowed," so as to make the clause read:

(d) That under such regulations and upon the execution of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, domestic wines subject to the tax imposed by this section may be removed from the winery where produced, free of tax, for storage on other bonded premises, or from said premises to other bonded premises: Provided, That not more than one such additional removal shall be allowed, or for exportation from the United States or for use as distilling material at any regularly registered distillery: Provided, however, That the distiller using any such wine as material shall, subject to the provisions of section 3309 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, be held to pay the tax on the product of such wines as will include both the alcoholic strength therein produced by fermentation and that obtained from the brandy or wine spirits added to such wines at the time of fortification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 7, after the word "liqueurs," to insert "cordials"; in the same line, before the word "compounds," to insert "similar"; and, in line 8, before the word "takes," to strike out "title" and insert "section," so as to make the clause read:

(e) That upon all domestic and imported sparkling wines, liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds remaining in the hands of dealers when this section takes effect, or thereafter removed from the place of manufacture or storage for sale or consumption, there shall be levied and paid, by stamp, taxes as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 16, after the word "wine," to strike out "1 cent" and insert "2½ cents," so as to make the clause read:

On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 2½ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to present certain proposed amendments to the bill under consideration for the purpose of having them printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I am on my feet I desire to give notice that some time to-morrow, if opportunity offers, I shall submit some observations upon further legislation on the strike problem.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to make a clerical correction in the income-tax schedule?

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 62, line 4, occur the words "section 103." The section is 30 of this bill. I move to substitute "30" for "103."

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 4, strike out "103" and insert "30," so as to read "as provided in section 30, is hereby imposed," and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 19, before the word "compounds," to insert "or similar"; in the same line, after the word "compounds," to strike out "or preparations containing distilled spirits of" and insert "by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet"; in line 21, after the word "wine," to insert "fortified with grape brandy under the provisions of paragraph (c) of this section"; and in line 23, after the word "thereof," to insert "not containing such sweet wines, three-fourths of 1 cent on each one-half pint or fraction thereof," so as to make the clause read:

On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine, fortified with grape brandy under the provisions of paragraph (c) of this section, 1½ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof; not containing such sweet wines, three-fourths of 1 cent on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, beginning in line 23, it is proposed to strike out "not containing such sweet wines, three-fourths of 1 cent on each one-half pint or fraction thereof."

The VICE PRESIDENT. A negative vote on the amendment of the committee will accomplish the Senator's purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I think that is true. The same question would be presented by a vote on the Senate committee amendment. I simply desire to say in opposition to the amendment proposed by the committee that the words in italics, "not containing such sweet wines, three-fourths of 1 cent on each one-half pint or fraction thereof," apply to cordials which are made out of spirits.

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask the Senator what his amendment is? What does he propose?

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment is to strike out the words in italics, or, to express it in another way, to disagree to the committee amendment for this reason: These spirits are taxed at $1.10 a gallon. I have no objection to that at all, but we provide here that certain grape brandies, and so forth, shall be taxed only 55 cents a gallon.

This tax of three-fourths of 1 cent on each half pint or fraction thereof amounts to a supertax over and above the $1.10 per gallon. It seems to me we ought to equalize these burdens and bring the tax on all these spirits up to $1.10 before we add a supertax. That is my objection to the amendment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 30 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY IN PORTO RICO.

During the executive session the Senate adopted a resolution advising and consenting to the extension and application to the island of Porto Rico of the terms of a convention between the United States and Great Britain signed March 2, 1899, regarding the tenure and disposition of real and personal property, in accordance with the report by the Secretary of State transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States April 12, 1916, and on motion by Mr. STONE the injunction of secrecy was removed from the same.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

During the executive session the Senate adopted a resolution advising and consenting to the ratification of a convention between the United States and Great Britain, Executive Document E, providing for the protection of migratory birds in the United States and Canada, signed at Washington August 16, 1916, and on motion by Mr. O'GORMAN the injunction of secrecy was removed from the same.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 30, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 29, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, teach us wisdom in the use of the gifts which Thou hast bestowed upon us as intellectual and moral beings gifted with the power of choice, the crowning glory of man if he shall harmonize his thoughts and deeds with the eternal laws which Thou hast ordained. Hence we pray for a deeper, wider use of that quality which for a better name we call common sense, that truth, justice, and liberty may obtain in the affairs of men that they may conserve their energy by abstaining from things harmful and use it in the promotion of the things which make for righteousness, and Thine be the praise through Him who taught us how to live in peace and harmony. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, August 25, 1916, was read and approved.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION TO HOUSE GALLERIES.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House the Chair would like to make an announcement. The news came so late this morning—the Chair never heard of it until about half past 10 o'clock—that the President wanted to come over here at 2.30 and address the Senate and House that the Doorkeeper had no earthly chance to have new tickets printed or to send them through the mail, so after consultation he concluded he would take a lot of old tickets and put some kind of stamp on them so as to be recognized; but there is no chance to send them through the mail, and Members can get their tickets from the Doorkeeper out in the House lobby. That is the best we knew how to do.

JOINT SESSION OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1916, at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker: Several years ago, while making some remarks upon the floor of the House concerning the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the United States, I made the statement that I was satisfied that large sums of money were owing to the United States on account of several institutions in the District of Columbia.

Upon being asked what, in my opinion, such indebtedness, if it existed at all, would amount to, I replied in substance that I had not gone sufficiently deep into the matter to even approximate a correct sum, but I thought the amount was as much as a million dollars.

I can look back now and see upon the faces even of some of the Members of this body expressions which betrayed their lack of sympathy with me when I made the declaration. I suspected then and ascertained afterwards that many of those who heard the statement could not but believe that I was mistaken, while the expression and side remarks of others indicated a lack of sympathy with me in my declared undertaking to cause the United States to be reimbursed.

The Washington papers for weeks and weeks after this declaration belittled me for making the assertion that public officials, through so many years, would permit the United States to be cheated year after year out of so much money. One of the Washington papers tauntingly invited me to crack my whip and go ahead, saying that all I could find could be placed under the nail of the little finger of a child. Those taunts did nothing more nor less than to encourage me in the prosecution of the work upon which I then declared my intention of entering.

In those remarks I expressed the opinion that large sums of money were owing to the United States on account of the Federal lunatic asylum located in the District of Columbia, in which institution, by special act of Congress, resident lunatics of the District of Columbia might be confined and treated. Within a very short time after I commenced this agitation the superintendent of the lunatic asylum came to the Capitol, went before the committee handling the affairs of the District of Columbia and admitted that there was uncollected and owing to the Federal lunatic asylum of which he was the principal officer the enormous sum of $719,536.09. That indebtedness first commenced in 1879 and, year by year, grew to the sum just referred to.

As I have said, the superintendent of that institution, after this agitation had been started by me, came and acknowledged that nearly three-quarters of a million dollars were owing to that institution, yet neither he nor any of his predecessors in office had taken the necessary steps to have any part of the money collected.

Notwithstanding the admission of the failure to collect the large sum which I have just named, I believed that more money was then yet due to the United States on account of that institution, and prosecuted my research into its accounts. That research finally disclosed that, in addition to the sum of $719,536.09 just referred to, there was owing to the United States the sum of $282,574.26. Those two sums amounted to $1,002,290.35.

I am glad to report that that amount of money has been collected on account of the unpaid balances due the Federal lunatic asylum and has been paid into the Treasury of the United States.

In 1874 the District of Columbia was authorized to issue $15,000,000 worth of bonds, which have come to be known as "the 3.65 bonds." Upon another occasion than the one just referred to relative to the lunatic asylum, I stated it as my opinion that the holders of these bonds had improperly collected interest upon these bonds from the United States without any subsequent adjustment being made.

Again I was ridiculed by the Washington papers and held up as a laughingstock not only to the local community but to Congress and to the Nation for making a statement which they said was so ridiculously preposterous. However, neither their taunts, their derision nor their belittling of me caused me to hesitate. As in former instances their mean censure acted as an incentive and spurred me on to establish the truth of my assertions.

Day after day, week after week, and month after month, through the long hours of many nights I went through records which were black with the dirt of years with the view of getting the information upon which to make my assertions indisputable. At last I arrived at the conclusion that the amount of $1,003,257.24 had been wrongfully collected by the holders of these bonds from the Treasury of the United States without any subsequent adjustment being made.

Turn where I would in my efforts to have this money collected I met but little encouragement. Thereupon I went to Mr. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury. In turn he referred me to one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury by whom, I am sorry to say, I was not encouraged. Again I went back to the Secretary of the Treasury and told him how futile my endeavors had been toward finding anyone in authority who would render me the slightest assistance. Upon this visit, instead of referring me to another, he himself heard my statement of the entire matter and exhibited much interest in it. He then detailed an expert accountant from the Treasury Department to go over the figures which I had submitted for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they were correct. In the course of time that accountant reported that my figures were correct, but declined to express an opinion as to the legality of the payments which had been made. However, it was not his opinion upon the legal phase of the situation which I desired.

Again I visted Secretary McAdoo and he then referred the matter to the Comptroller of the Treasury for the purpose of having the legal status determined. This official, too, had my figures verified. Then he went into the legal aspect of it. After he had laid down the false premises of treating the act of June 11, 1878 as retrospective, when it is entirely prospective, he decided that one-half of the said interest had been properly paid out of the United States Treasury and that the United States had been wrongfully deprived of the other one-half thereof. The one-half which the comptroller held the United States had been wrongfully deprived of amounted to $586,067.22. This last-named amount has since been collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Later along another howl went up from the Washington newspapers and those upon the floor of the House who were more the friends of the people in the District of Columbia than of the people who sent them here, when I made the statement upon the floor of the House that the rentals from the Washington Market Co., while rightfully due to the United States, had improperly been withheld from the United States.

Again, Secretary McAdoo, with approving interest, heard my statement relative to the claim that the rents from the Washington Market Co. belonged to the United States. Upon my request he referred this matter also to the Comptroller of the Treasury for decision.

Just here it may be well to say that the act of Congress approved May 20, 1870, creating the Washington Market Co., provided that this company should pay $25,000 a year for the use of a parcel of land in the District of Columbia owned by the United States. Shortly thereafter this rental, by a piece of legislative legerdemain, was reduced from $25,000 per year to $7,500 per year.

Under the provisions of the act of May 20, 1870, the rental was to be used for the relief of the poor of the city of Washington. However, the money was not so used, and the Comptroller of the Treasury held that the act of June 11, 1878 repealed that provision. In accordance with my contention the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered an opinion wherein he held that the rent of that property subsequent to June 11, 1878 should go to the United States. In consequence the sum of $166,012.50 has since been paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The lease under which the Washington Market Co. holds that particular piece of land has some years yet to run. In addition to the $166,012.50 which has already been collected, future rentals, amounting to $202,500, will be paid into the Treasury of the United States, thus making a total of $368,512.50 which has been and which will be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the Washington Market Co.

I trust that it will not be thought unbecoming in me to say that without my agitation and investigation of this subject that none of this money would have found its way into the Treasury of the United States.

In looking through musty records for the purpose of establishing these errors against the United States, the records show that other sums due the United States, amounting to $15,588.04, had not been collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States. This sum, also, has now been collected and so paid.

The items which in this way actually have been recovered and paid into the Treasury of the United States as the result of my efforts amount to $1,972,458.11.

I now wish to make the statement, even though it raise another storm of indignation from the favored classes in the District of Columbia, that more than $200,000 is due to the United States because of fines and forfeitures which have been collected in the District of Columbia for violations of United States laws, which have not been paid into the Treasury of the United States.

In Kentucky and in every other State the fines for violations of United States statutes are paid into the Treasury of the United States and not into the treasury of the State. I contend that this same rule holds good in the District of Columbia. Later along I hope to be able to establish the correctness of the statement which I now make.

In addition to that I feel reasonably certain that when the figures and facts have been ascertained I will be able to lay my finger upon another item amounting to $125,000 which should have been paid into the Treasury of the United States years ago, but which has not been so paid.

I make this statement not only for the purpose of rendering an account of my stewardship to those who have sent me to Congress but also for the benefit of the Members of this body. Year after year this membership has seen me derided, vilified, abused and belittled for the work which I have undertaken; and, even though my efforts in the future to see that the Treasury of the people of the United States gets its just dues should bring no valuable results, I feel that what has been done in the past has far more than vindicated every claim that I have made, and that the expectations of the House in making me chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia have been fulfilled.

I hope not to be charged with violating becoming modesty when I say that during the time I have been in Congress I have, in my humble way, participated in all of the legislation of the body; and, in addition thereto, I have, as an individual, succeeded in accomplishing that which I have just recited.

If I can have substantial cooperation from this membership instead of having obstacles put in my way by some of them I shall have another favorable report to make of large amounts of money collected for the Federal Treasury. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17375. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13926. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 15158) to amend the Judicial Code, to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence, and further to define the jurisdiction of that court, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of the wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bill (S. 5496) to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5103) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or parcel of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River, in West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 292. Joint resolution proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17567. An act to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On August 23, 1916:

S. 1781. An act for the relief of Nathaniel Monroe;

S. 1818. An act for the relief of Nelson T. Saunders; and

S. 5425. An act to standardize lime barrels.

On August 24, 1916:

S. 3539. An act for the relief of John L. Moon.

On August 25, 1916:

S. 5202. An act to authorize the maintenance and operation of dams across the St. Croix River at Baileyville and Grand Falls, Me.;

S. 6013. An act to confirm the entry of John Dowd; and

S. 6331. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to William H. Ingle for homestead entry in Colorado.

On August 26, 1916:

S. 3533. An act for the relief of Mike G. Wommack.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same.

H. R. 600. An act to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana.

H. R. 10251. An act authorizing the Kansas City & Memphis Railway & Bridge Co. to make settlement with Crittenden County, Ark., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13835. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION TO HOUSE GALLERIES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. LLOYD. I rise to ask unanimous consent for the presentation of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 360.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House be authorized to deliver 25 tickets to the presidents of railroads and 25 tickets to the representatives of their employees for admission to the galleries to hear the address of the President of the United States this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the presidents of the railroads who have been in the city conferring with the President for several days, and the representatives of their employees who have been here for the same length of time, are very anxious to hear the address of the President this afternoon, and I think it is nothing but fair under the circumstances that this resolution be passed and that the same number of tickets be given to the railroad presidents as are given to the railroads' employees.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I believe in absolute fairness and justice. We have had published in the papers the statement the President of the United States made to the managers of the railroads. We have not had published in the papers the statement of the President of the United States to the employees of the railroads, and it seems to me that in order that the House of Representatives may have absolute information on which to act, if they have to act at all, that this paper be also published before action is called for. I merely suggest it as a matter of fairness and justice.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will attend to these 25 tickets each.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech to be delivered by Woodrow Wilson accepting the Democratic nomination for the Presidency on September 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech to be delivered by President Wilson next Saturday at Shadow Lawn. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as the gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks that way, in the permanent RECORD this speech will be inserted as of to-day, several days before being delivered.

Mr. DOREMUS. I merely desired permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I did not intend to insert it until after it is delivered.

Mr. MANN. I know; but under the gentleman's request in the permanent RECORD it would be inserted as of to-day. I think the gentleman should ask unanimous consent that he have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, so it will appear in the permanent RECORD some time next week. I would hate to see the speech printed in the RECORD several days before it is delivered.

Mr. DOREMUS. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. I would hate to see the speech printed in the RECORD several days before it is delivered.

Mr. DOREMUS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is no intention on my part to have the speech inserted before it is delivered.

Mr. MANN. In the permanent RECORD, under the request that the gentleman made, it would be shown that it was inserted several days before it was delivered.

Mr. DOREMUS. It means that it is to be inserted in the permanent RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. ADAMSON. I just want one minute before the House forgets about what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] agrees that I may be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas did not have the power to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask the Speaker to concur in the acquiescence of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I failed to secure the eye of the Speaker in time to fit in and dove-tail right, but I want to say before the House forgets it, in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], that the President made substantially the same proposition, the same speech, to both bodies, and I understand he intends to disclose in his address to us to-day what he said to both sides, to the railroad presidents and to the representatives of the brotherhoods, substantially, and that he has nothing to conceal from either. The cards will all be laid upon the table in the way that a good Presbyterian ought to play cards—if a good Presbyterian will play cards [laughter]—and the facts will all be open to the public.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EX-GOV. COLQUITT.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, in December, 1914, Mr. Colquitt, the then governor of Texas, issued an interview which was a blast of denunciation of the President and his administration. That interview was published in all the Republican papers, and it was inserted gleefully and gloatingly in the RECORD by a Republican Member of Congress. I took occasion to reply almost immediately to the interview when it was inserted in the RECORD, and denounced it as not representing the sentiment of the people of Texas.

That governor took occasion to run for the Senate of the United States in the State of Texas, and in the first primary, on July 22, in which there were six contending candidates, he had a plurality, and that fact was proclaimed all over the country by the Republicans as showing or tending to show that the national Democratic administration was not approved by the Democracy of Texas. But a second primary was had, when there were only two candidates in the field. That primary was held last Saturday. I have a clipping from the Washington Post of yesterday, which says that—

> In the Texas primaries in July former Gov. Colquitt ran ahead of Senator CULBERSON for United States Senator. In the election just held, Mr. CULBERSON has badly defeated Mr. Colquitt. The latter has lost every large city and every large county, and has carried only 23 of the 256 counties of the State. It is estimated that the final vote will stand: CULBERSON, 177,000; Colquitt, 102,000.

In that primary the candidate who was denouncing the administration of the President was supported by a strong organization. His attack on the administration was withdrawn, except in two particulars.

He failed further to repeat his attack on the tariff bill, or on the Federal reserve act, and on the Federal Trade Commission and on other features of the Democratic administration. He tried to ignore and have the people ignore every other criticism he had made, and he narrowed his attack in the last of his campaign for the Senate practically down to the criticism of our Mexican policy and to his charge that the Secretary of the Treasury had done nothing to aid our people in 1914 when he could by furnishing money to the Texas banks, have prevented the calamity of 6-cent cotton. Upon that charge some of our people in Texas were fooled, but as a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Treasury, had furnished to the bankers of Texas all the currency they had asked for. I know this because I helped some of them get the currency.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARDY. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that ex-Gov. Colquitt, to whom the gentleman refers, received a vote far in excess of the vote received by anybody else in the primaries?

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman had listened to what I said he would have known what is the fact, that he received only 102,000 votes in the second primary to Senator CULBERSON'S 177,000. He ran ahead in the first primary, when there were six candidates in the field, for the simple reason that the vote he got in that primary was tied to him by his opposition to the President's foreign policy and by his appeal in New York to German-American organizations for aid to himself in the State of Texas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point I made in discussing this matter before, if the gentleman will permit, was that former Gov. Colquitt had opposed the President of the United States, a member of his own party, and in the primaries he received 102,000 votes from the citizens of Texas who evidently indorsed his stand.

Mr. HARDY. And I will say to the gentleman that he never had an executive in his State, or a Republican President, who did not have some votes against him in a primary for renomination. In 1912 the President of your party, lost your own State in the convention to nominate his successor. But former Gov. Colquitt did not get a third of the Democratic votes in Texas. It was proclaimed from the house tops by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others that the President was not supported in Texas, and the gentleman inserted an interview from Gov. Colquitt to show that the President was not supported in Texas, and I replied saying that the governor did not represent the Democrats in Texas, and this second primary that I have just referred to shows that his kind of Democrats in Texas are in a vast minority.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the last election?

Mr. HARDY. Yes; in the last primary election. I have already read how he carried only 23 small counties out of the 256 counties of the State. He did not carry a large town or a large county in the State, and that notwithstanding he had appealed to the farmer element of our country with the pretense that the Secretary of the Treasury had nothing to do except to lend money and open the vaults of the Treasury freely to the farmers, and thereby avert that catastrophe of 6-cent cotton. As I said before, it is true that some of the farmers were fooled.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. In addition to this, I wish to state that the candidate, Mr. Colquitt, went all over the State of Texas campaigning and presenting his attacks upon the administration, which, however, he narrowed down to two points—the attack upon the President's Mexican policy and the attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury for not furnishing money. We all know that his main attack, to be used by the Republicans and to be rolled as a sweet morsel under their tongues in their campaign, was upon other issues; upon our tariff bill, our Federal reserve act, our Federal Trade Commission, and his broad general sweeping denunciations of the administration. These he tried to forget and have our people forget. This candidate went all over the State. Senator CULBERSON did not go into the State. It came to be a fight between those who defended and those who attacked the administration; and there are some protection Democrats or alleged Democrats in the State of Texas. I apprehend that Gov. Colquitt got before that class of Democrats, and he got some Democrats down on our border who wanted to plunge this country into war with Mexico, and he got some German-Americans, who are influenced by the German editors to whom he appealed, or by the German-American Society, which is trying to organize the Germans of this country for Hughes. Senator CULBERSON has practically carried the State 2 to 1, and that without moving out of his seat in the Senate, and I am proud of the fact that many of the border counties voted for CULBERSON and that many of the Germans of Texas did likewise; and that is the answer to the interview of the governor of Texas, published in the RECORD by the gentleman from Philadelphia two years ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. HARDY. Just one moment. Not only that, but this candidate lost his own home county in the State of Texas. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Are there any other questions?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The 23 counties were all country counties, were they not, that were carried by Gov. Colquitt?

Mr. HARDY. Oh, yes; all our counties are country counties. Mr. Colquitt's home county is perhaps three-fourths country farmers, but it went for CULBERSON. I think, perhaps, in some remote, back districts of the State of Texas, Mr. Colquitt induced the farmers to believe the false statement that the Secretary of the Treasury had not done everything he could to relieve farmers in 1914, and I apprehend that those who voted for him on that ground were in little counties, far away from the centers of information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that some very strong friends of the farmer were not returned to this Congress?

Mr. HARDY. As far as that is concerned, everybody is a strong friend of the farmer, and everybody knows that a man would hesitate to announce for office in Texas if he was not a friend of the farmer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not that indicate that what you might call the country vote in Texas, quite a large part of it, was rather against the President of the United States?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. Texas is a State of country voters. Our large cities are few. My county has perhaps a third of its population of 60,000 urban, counting big and little towns, and that is far above the average proportion of town to country population.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the governor carried the country districts, it would seem as if he had the country voters with him.

Mr. HARDY. But he did not carry the country districts. He only carried a few little counties, with few votes. Mr. Colquitt did carry the two towns of Kaufman and Terrell, in his home county, but the country vote of the county wiped out his town majority and gave the county to CULBERSON by 303 majority.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not belittle the country votes. I never do that, although I come from a large city. I value the country vote, and I take it as a fair indication of political opinion in the country.

Mr. HARDY. Yes; and the country vote in my county and all over Texas was for Wilson.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

EXTENDED REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Colquitt is one of the most adroit and aggressive politicians that ever ran for office in Texas. With the full knowledge that our people are a proud people and brook no dictation from any source however high, he sought to rouse their prejudices by asserting everywhere that the national administration was fighting him and trying to dictate to the people of Texas in their choice of Senator. The President would have been more than human if he had not preferred to see triumph one who has been all through his administration his warm friend and strong supporter and able counselor rather than one who, at least for two years, has manifested his hostility in every possible way. Nevertheless he did not try to influence the people of Texas in their vote. While this is true, the friends of the President and the friends of Senator CULBERSON in Texas resented the attacks of Mr. Colquitt and made that the paramount issue. They published in the Dallas News, the Waco Tribune, and distributed generally this circular:

TO ALL GOOD DEMOCRATIC VOTERS OF TEXAS—READ, CONSIDER, REFLECT, VOTE—THE PEOPLE WANT TO KNOW.

The following questions were propounded to Mr. Colquitt:

To Oscar B. Colquitt, candidate for the United States Senate:

You are respectfully requested to make direct answers to the following questions:

1. If you had been in the Senate, how would you have voted upon the following measures: The child-labor act, the antilottery act, the white-slave act, the pure-food act, the antinarcotic act?

2. In a letter written by you and published in the New York American December 27, 1914, you said:

"The Wilson administration has been the greatest failure in the history of the Presidency."

Have you changed your opinion, or do you adhere to that belief?

3. You said in that letter, "The administration's foreign policy has been imbecile." Is that your present opinion?

4. You said in that letter, "The administration's antitrust laws are barefaced fakes." Do you still hold to that opinion?

5. You said in that letter, "I believed at first that the Federal reserve banking act was the administration's one meritorious achievement, but national bankers tell me it is going to prove a failure." Do you now consider the Federal Reserve System a failure?

6. You said in that letter, "I am fully convinced the national election of 1916 will end the Democratic regime." Is it now your opinion that Wilson will be beaten for the Presidency?

7. If your opinion of the Wilson administration, as expressed in the letter to the New York American, is unchanged, why do you not support Hughes for the Presidency?

CULBERSON is an experienced legislator, tried and true, the leader of the Democrats in the Senate, looked to as such by the President and the party. He is doing his full duty. Every vote for CULBERSON is a vote to perpetuate the Democratic Party. Every vote for Colquitt is a vote for Hughes. If you are a Democrat, vote Saturday for CULBERSON, and get your Democratic neighbor to vote. Attend the grand CULBERSON rally at courthouse Friday night.

MCLENNAN COUNTY CULBERSON DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

The New York Times also to-day has an editorial, part of which I insert, as follows:

AMERICANISM IN TEXAS.

Former Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, tried to be nominated for United States Senator by the help of "the German vote." He appealed in writing to a superactive "professional German-American" in this city. He sought help from the organizations whose alien allegiance has been evident since the European war began. He had long been a fire-eating assailant of Mr. Wilson's Mexican policy. Opposition to that was his chief recommendation for Senator CULBERSON'S seat. In the first senatorial primary, before the great mass of Texas Democrats woke up to the meaning of his raid upon the Senate, he beat Mr. CULBERSON. The Republicans, the American-Germans, all the enemies of Mr. Wilson and Americanism, roared applause. Mr. Wilson was renounced, they said, by his own party in Texas. It was a "square fight" between the administration represented by Mr. CULBERSON, and its critics and opponents, represented by Mr. Colquitt.

The joy was premature. In the second primary, made necessary by the failure of any candidate to get a majority in the first, Colquitt was beaten out on his boots. In July he carried 114, in August but 23 of 256 counties. All the large cities and counties voted him down. It is significant that he was beaten 5 to 1 in all the border counties, with possibly one exception. The very districts where, if anywhere, the heat and fury against Mr. Wilson's Mexican policy would most make themselves felt, repudiated the champion of "vigor" and "firmness," approved "vacillation." It was a straight fight between the administration and those who condemn it for what it has done or left undone at the border and across the sea.

* * * * * * *

Another wholesome lesson to the public men who seek to climb into place by flattering a class of citizens, by relying on a nonexistent race solidarity. It was enough to vanquish Gov. Colquitt that he sought the favor of and was largely favored by a single element of the electorate. In Ohio the other day a Republican and a Democrat who had counted upon "the German vote" were licked ignominiously. Every time the politicians crook the hinges of the knee to "the German vote," the Americans of whatever origin, the constant majority, quiet, unheard from amid all the howl and clamor of the outlanders, kick the deserters of Americanism into the middle of next week.

The vote on August 27 is a grand answer of the Texas Democracy to the appeal to them to uphold the President who amid storm and stress has discharged without fear or favor every duty of his high office patiently, wisely, firmly, and has preserved the peace and honor and increased the glory and prosperity of our country.

Now that the primary in Texas is over and there can no longer be raised the cry that Washington is trying to dictate to Texas I have made this speech and placed these clippings in the RECORD, so that justice may be done to the Democracy of Texas to Senator CULBERSON and to our President, and so that the people of the United States may know the truth.

TOBACCO SALESMEN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, be amended by adding at the end of said subsection the following: Provided, That agents or salesmen of manufacturers of, or wholesale dealers in, tobacco selling their product only to other dealers, either on order or by direct delivery, shall not be construed as peddlers.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the proviso beginning in line 5 and ending in line 9 and insert the following:

"Provided, That manufacturers of, jobbers and wholesale dealers in, manufactured tobacco snuff, cigars, and cigarettes, and the agents or salesmen of such manufacturers, jobbers, and wholesale dealers, traveling from place to place, in the town or through the country, and selling and delivering or offering to sell and deliver such products only to dealers, shall not be construed to be peddlers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have had some interest in this bill, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means knows, and have taken it up with certain parties in Pennsylvania. I have had no answer from them, hence I presume there is no opposition to the bill. But before the bill is passed I desire to make this comment, that the House of Representatives is the body authorized by the Constitution to originate revenue legislation. The Senate is not so authorized by the Constitution of the United States, but it frequently arrogates to itself the right to originate such revenue legislation. Here is a bill coming from the other body which proposes to interfere in the matter of revenue. It is transmitted in due course to the Ways and Means Committee. It comes before the House now for passage. I have no personal objection to its passage, but I do object to the Senate constantly interfering in these matters of revenue, whether it be in the matter of treaties with foreign countries, providing in advance for the payment of large sums of the people's money, or whether it be, as in this case, for the alteration of laws affecting the revenues of the United States, which this body, the House of Representatives, is solely delegated to originate.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that I am in sympathy with a great deal of what the gentleman says. I rather think that this would have been more proper to have originated in the House; but I rather think under the circumstances the Senate had the constitutional right to originate this bill, as it does not raise revenue.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. If it were a bill raising revenue, it would be a privileged bill, and would not require unanimous consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I think the universal rulings in this House have been that a bill of this sort is not a bill raising revenue, and can not be called up as a privileged matter.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my judgment about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. This is a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do not profess to be at all posted in reference to revenue legislation relating to tobacco nor the regulations regarding it. When I first looked at this bill it seemed to be designed to injure the local dealers in tobacco, to take away some privileges which they have had and give them to peddlers. I do not know that that is the case. I am asking for information, because I think, as a rule, the little dealer in small country towns, and in larger places, for that matter, who maintains a place, pays his rent, pays his taxes, is entitled to reasonable protection against the peddler who comes through, who pays no rent, who pays no taxes, but who delivers the goods possibly a little cheaper than the local dealer. I ask whether this makes any change in that respect?

Mr. KITCHIN. This is designed to protect that very dealer. It only applies to sales to dealers, and not to consumers. It is in the interest of the little wholesale dealer and jobber. For instance, in this city I have seen in show windows men making their own cigars to sell. Under the present law if they take four or five boxes and go around to sell them to the druggists they will have to pay a license of $10.

Mr. MANN. I recall now that the bill only applies to sales to dealers.

Mr. KITCHIN. Under this a man can take his five or six boxes and sell them; and while under the present law he would have to get the order and come back for the cigars, under this it relieves him from paying the tax; and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MADISON, WIS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14391) authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Madison, Wis., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the provision of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 873), which authorizes the demolition of the present Federal building and the construction of a new post office and courthouse upon the site thereof at Madison, Wis., at a limit of cost of $550,000 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury further, in his discretion, to sell the present post office and courthouse and the site thereof in said city to the highest bidder, at public or private sale, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States; to convey said property to the purchaser thereof by the usual quitclaim deed and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided, however, That if such sale is made before the completion and occupancy of the new Federal building hereinafter authorized, the agreement of sale shall reserve to the United States the right to continue to occupy said present Federal building property free of rent for not exceeding three years from the date of such sale.

SEC. 2. That if the Secretary of the Treasury elects so to sell the present Federal building property, he is hereby further authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in said city, and to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, mechanical equipment, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the post office, United States courts, and other governmental offices in said city, at a cost for said new site and building of not exceeding $550,000.

SEC. 3. That if the Secretary of the Treasury elects so to sell said present Federal building property, the appropriations of $200,000 and $15,000 made by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., p. 825), for the demolition of the present Federal building and commencement of a new building on the site thereof and for temporary quarters and moving expenses, be, and the same are hereby, made available for the acquisition of such new site and the commencement of the erection thereon of the new building authorized in the next preceding paragraph hereof.

SEC. 4. That if a new building is erected on the present Federal building site, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may disregard the provision requiring 40 feet open space for fire protection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if this makes any additional appropriation?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all; it avoids the necessity of coming to Congress and asking for an increased appropriation.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is a matter of economy.

Mr. NELSON. It is a matter of economy. We have to provide a larger site, and in order to do that we have first to sell this site to get a larger one.

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I see the chairman of the committee is not present, and I would like to ask the gentleman if the chairman understood that this bill was to be called up to-day?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it is a unanimous report, and it was arranged that I might call it up at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13391) amending the Federal reserve act. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Federal reserve act and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read instead of the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is important legislation in this conference report that has never been read in the House, and I think it ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1175).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"That the act entitled 'Federal reserve act,' approved December 23, 1913, be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

"At the end of section 11 insert a new clause as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power, from time to time, by general ruling, covering all districts alike, to permit member banks to carry in the Federal reserve banks of their respective districts any portion of their reserves now required by section 19 of this act to be held in their own vaults.'

"That section 13 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may receive from any of its member banks, and from the United States, deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, Federal reserve notes, or checks, and drafts, payable upon presentation, and also, for collection, maturing bills; or solely for purposes of exchange or of collection, may receive from other Federal reserve banks deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, or checks upon other Federal reserve banks, and checks and drafts, payable upon presentation within its district, and maturing bills payable within its district.

"'Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States. Notes, drafts, and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days, exclusive of days of grace: Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding six months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board.

"'The aggregate of such notes, drafts, and bills bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower, whether a person, company, firm, or corporation, rediscounted for any one bank shall at no time exceed 10 per cent of the unimpaired capital and surplus of said bank; but this restriction shall not apply to the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values.

"'Any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances of the kinds hereinafter described, which have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than three months' sight, exclusive of days of grace, and which are indorsed by at least one member bank.

"'Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than six months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace, which grow out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods; or which grow out of transactions involving the domestic shipment of goods provided shipping documents conveying or securing title are attached at the time of acceptance; or which are secured at the time of acceptance by a warehouse receipt or other such document conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples. No member bank shall accept, whether in a foreign or domestic transaction, for any one person, company, firm, or corporation to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 10 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus unless the bank is secured either by attached documents or by some other actual security growing out of the same transaction as the acceptance and no bank shall accept such bills to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than one-half of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus.

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make advances to its member banks on their promissory notes for a period not exceeding 15 days at rates to be established by such Federal reserve banks, subject to the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, provided such promissory notes are secured by such notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or bankers' acceptances as are eligible for rediscount or for purchase by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of this act, or by the deposit or pledge of bonds or notes of the United States.'

"Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows: 'No national banking association shall at any time be indebted, or in any way liable, to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock at such time actually paid in and remaining undiminished by losses or otherwise, except on account of demands of the nature following:

"'First. Notes of circulation.

"'Second. Moneys deposited with or collected by the association.

"'Third. Bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit to the credit of the association, or due thereto.

"'Fourth. Liabilities to the stockholders of the association for dividends and reserve profits.

"'Fifth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act.

"'The discount and rediscount and the purchase and sale by any Federal reserve bank of any bills receivable and of domestic and foreign bills of exchange, and of acceptances authorized by this act, shall be subject to such restrictions, limitations, and regulations as may be imposed by the Federal Reserve Board.

"'That in addition to the powers now vested by law in national banking associations organized under the laws of the United States any such association located and doing business in any place the population of which does not exceed 5,000 inhabitants, as shown by the last preceding decennial census, may, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, act as the agent for any fire, life, or other insurance company authorized by the authorities of the State in which said bank is located to do business in said State, by soliciting and selling insurance and collecting premiums on policies issued by such company; and may receive for services so rendered such fees or commissions as may be agreed upon between the said association and the insurance company for which it may act as agent; and may also act as the broker or agent for others in making or procuring loans on real estate located within 100 miles of the place in which said bank may be located, receiving for such services a reasonable fee or commission: Provided, however, That no such bank shall in any case guarantee either the principal or interest of any such loans or assume or guarantee the payment of any premium on insurance policies issued through its agency by its principal: And provided further, That the bank shall not guarantee the truth of any statement made by an assured in filing his application for insurance.

"'Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than three months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace, drawn under regulations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board by banks or bankers in foreign countries or dependencies or insular possessions of the United States for the purpose of furnishing dollar exchange as required by the usages of trade in the respective countries, dependencies, or insular possessions. Such drafts or bills may be acquired by Federal reserve banks in such amounts and subject to such regulations, restrictions, and limitations as may be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board: Provided, however, That no member bank shall accept such drafts or bills of exchange referred to in this paragraph for any one bank to an amount exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of the paid-up and unimpaired capital and surplus of the accepting bank unless the draft or bill of exchange is accompanied by documents conveying or securing title or by some other adequate security: Provided further, That no member bank shall accept such drafts or bills in an amount exceeding at any time the aggregate of one-half of its paid-up and unimpaired capital and surplus.'

"That subsection (e) of section 14 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'(e) To establish accounts with other Federal reserve banks for exchange purposes and, with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, to open and maintain accounts in foreign countries, appoint correspondents, and establish agencies in such countries wheresoever it may deem best for the purpose of purchasing, selling, and collecting bills of exchange, and to buy and sell, with or without its indorsement, through such correspondents or agencies bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions which have not more than 90 days to run, exclusive of days of grace, and which bear the signature of two or more responsible parties, and with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board to open and maintain banking accounts for such foreign correspondents or agencies.'

"That the second paragraph of section 16 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the local Federal reserve agent for such amount of the Federal reserve notes hereinbefore provided for as it may require. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the local Federal reserve agent of collateral in amount equal to the sum of the Federal reserve notes thus applied for and issued pursuant to such application. The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances rediscounted under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange indorsed by a member bank of any Federal reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14. The Federal reserve agent shall each day notify the Federal Reserve Board of all issues and withdrawals of Federal reserve notes to and by the Federal reserve bank to which he is accredited. The said Federal Reserve Board may at any time call upon a Federal reserve bank for additional security to protect the Federal reserve notes issued to it.'

"That section 24 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. Any national banking association not situated in a central reserve city may make loans secured by improved and unencumbered farm land situated within its Federal reserve district or within a radius of 100 miles of the place in which such bank is located, irrespective of district lines, and may also make loans secured by improved and unencumbered real estate located within 100 miles of the place in which such bank is located, irrespective of district lines; but no loan made upon the security of such farm land shall be made for a longer time than five years, and no loan made upon the security of such real estate as distinguished from farm land shall be made for a longer time than one year nor shall the amount of any such loan, whether upon such farm land or upon such real estate, exceed 50 per cent of the actual value of the property offered as security. Any such bank may make such loans, whether secured by such farm land or such real estate, in an aggregate sum equal to 25 per cent of its capital and surplus or to one-third of its time deposits and such banks may continue hereafter as heretofore to receive time deposits and to pay interest on the same.

"'The Federal Reserve Board shall have power from time to time to add to the list of cities in which national banks shall not be permitted to make loans secured upon real estate in the manner described in this section.'

"That section 25 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 25. Any national banking association possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more may file application with the Federal Reserve Board for permission to exercise, upon such conditions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said board, either or both of the following powers:

"'First. To establish branches in foreign countries or dependencies or insular possessions of the United States for the furtherance of the foreign commerce of the United States, and to act if required to do so as fiscal agents of the United States.

"'Second. To invest an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus in the stock of one or more banks or corporations chartered or incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, and principally engaged in international or foreign banking, or banking in a dependency or insular possession of the United States either directly or through the agency, ownership, or control of local institutions in foreign countries, or in such dependencies or insular possessions.

"'Such application shall specify the name and capital of the banking association filing it, the powers applied for, and the place or places where the banking operations proposed are to be carried on. The Federal Reserve Board shall have power to approve or to reject such application in whole or in part if for any reason the granting of such application is deemed inexpedient, and shall also have power from time to time to increase or decrease the number of places where such banking operations may be carried on.

"'Every national banking association operating foreign branches shall be required to furnish information concerning the condition of such branches to the Comptroller of the Currency upon demand, and every member bank investing in the capital stock of banks or corporations described under subparagraph 2 of the first paragraph of this section shall be required to furnish information concerning the condition of such banks or corporations to the Federal Reserve Board upon demand, and the Federal Reserve Board may order special examinations of the said branches, banks, or corporations at such time or times as it may deem best.

"'Before any national bank shall be permitted to purchase stock in any such corporation the said corporation shall enter into an agreement or undertaking with the Federal Reserve Board to restrict its operations or conduct its business in such manner or under such limitations and restrictions as the said board may prescribe for the place or places wherein such business is to be conducted. If at any time the Federal Reserve Board shall ascertain that the regulations prescribed by it are not being complied with, said board is hereby authorized and empowered to institute an investigation of the matter and to send for persons and papers, subpœna witnesses, and administer oaths in order to satisfy itself as to the actual nature of the transactions referred to. Should such investigation result in establishing the failure of the corporation in question, or of the national bank or banks which may be stockholders therein, to comply with the regulations laid down by the said Federal Reserve Board, such national banks may be required to dispose of stock holdings in the said corporation upon reasonable notice.

"'Every such national banking association shall conduct the accounts of each foreign branch independently of the accounts of other foreign branches established by it and of its home office, and shall at the end of each fiscal period transfer to its general ledger the profit or loss accrued at each branch as a separate item.

"'Any director or other officer, agent, or employee of any member bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, be a director or other officer, agent, or employee of any such bank or corporation above mentioned in the capital stock of which such member bank shall have invested as hereinbefore provided, without being subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes."'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend certain sections of the act entitled 'Federal reserve act,' approved December 23, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

The amendments of the Senate to the bill have been accepted by the House conferees with some slight verbal modifications, except that the House declined to agree to and the Senate receded from its amendment of section 16 of the Federal reserve act which would have explicitly authorized and encouraged Federal reserve banks to issue Federal reserve notes based upon gold or gold certificates.

The House conferees declined to agree to the Senate amendment proposing to permit national banks in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants and possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more to establish branches, and the Senate conferees have agreed to recommend that the Senate recede from this amendment.

The House conferees insisted upon an amendment to section 11, which was accepted by the Senate conferees, permitting the Federal Reserve Board, upon an affirmative vote of not less than five, to permit member banks to carry in the Federal reserve banks any portion of their reserves now required to be held in their own vaults.

CARTER GLASS,
CLAUDE U. STONE,
EDMUND PLATT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 17645) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. (H. Rept. 1177.)

Mr. MANN reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of the general deficiency bill. It is already in print.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill, it having been already printed. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the bill has never been printed except for the information of the committee. There are no copies accessible to Members of the House. It is a very unusual request, and never has been submitted before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill has been printed.

Mr. MANN. It may be in print in the Government Printing Office, but not in the document room, and I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection. It was arranged with the Printing Office to have the bill printed in order to expedite business and permit Members to go home to the bosom of their families and associate with their constituents, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object.

Mr. MANN. It looks to me as though there will be plenty of time to consider it in the ordinary way. I think a general deficiency bill at the end of a session which carries a very large amount of money should be considered in the ordinary way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill carries $14,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Usually there is considerable legislation upon it, and I think that the bill ought to be printed, so that Members of the House may have an opportunity of seeing it in advance. This would establish a very bad practice, and it would not expedite the getting away of Congress at all. I shall have to object for the present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might expedite my getting away.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman's services are entirely too valuable to permit of allowing him to go away from here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order to-morrow under the rule may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that business in order to-morrow under the rule may be dispensed with. Is there objection??

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if it is necessary, that request can be made to-morrow, and I shall have to object for the present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am making the request so that Members may understand that the general deficiency bill will be taken up to-morrow. They may wish to know when it is to be called up. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement of the railway employees' side of the present controversy between the railroads of the country and the operating employees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a statement of the railway employees in the pending controversy. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JUNEAU, ALASKA.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 6839) to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 6839 and to consider the same at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us know what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its bonds in any sum not exceeding $75,000 for the purpose of constructing a schoolhouse in said town and equipping the same.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the town of Juneau, at which election the question whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Juneau. Thirty days' notice of any such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon the condition that a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of issuing said bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and shall not be sold for less than their par value with accrued interest and shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 10 years from date thereof: Provided, however, That the common council of said town of Juneau may reserve the right to pay off such bonds in their numerical order at the rate of $10,000 or less thereof per annum from and after the expiration of four years from their date. Principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Juneau, Alaska, or at such other place as may be designated by the common council of the town of Juneau; the place of payment to be mentioned in said bonds: And provided further, That each and every bond shall have the written signature of the mayor and clerk of said town of Juneau and also bear the seal of said town.

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than that specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed by the school board of said town under the limitations hereinbefore imposed and under the direction of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This is a bill to permit the town of Juneau, in Alaska, to borrow $75,000. The form of the bill is copied from a law which we passed some years ago, I believe, which permits some other towns in Alaska to borrow small sums of money. A bill of this nature would not receive favorable consideration by any State legislature in the Union, and I think not in any city council in the Union. The bill makes no provision whatever for a tax to pay for the bonds; it does not require any portion of the bonds to be paid off until they are all due, and it provides for an interest rate of 7 per cent. Seven per cent interest on a good municipal loan is rather high.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill carries only 5 per cent. The bill which the committee in the House reported carried 7 per cent. The bill we are now considering, the Senate bill, reduced that from 7 to 5 per cent. Not only that, but it does provide for the retirement of these bonds.

Mr. MANN. It does not require it, it only permits it.

Mr. WATKINS. Permits it.

Mr. MANN. I said it did not require it. It provides that the entire amount shall be paid off at the end of 10 years and permits the payment of $10,000 a year after the end of 4 years. It makes no provision for the raising of money with which to pay. I think all of the States which have laws upon this subject generally require that there shall be put into the legislation a provision for the raising of a tax sufficient to pay the interest and finally the principal, usually providing that a portion of the principal shall be paid each year. I do not object to the consideration of this bill, though it is in bad form, because it is for the erection of a schoolhouse at the town of Juneau. The old schoolhouse erected years ago is entirely inadequate for present conditions. However, if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] or gentlemen upon the Committee on Territories of the House want to pass any more bills of this nature, they ought to so frame the bill as to conform to modern provisions such as are found in the several States.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the Territorial Delegate who introduced this bill framed it and presented it in that form which he thought was proper to cover the situation in the Territory of Alaska. Another bill of a similar nature had gone through and had proved satisfactory, and he saw no reason why this bill in its present shape should not meet with the same fate.

There was no difficulty there in raising the revenue to meet the expenditures of constructing the school building in that instance, and he thought there would be none in this. We have taken the bill as the Delegate from Alaska presented it to the committee.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar bill (H. R. 10757) was ordered to lie on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Federal reserve amendment bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT). The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALE OF SUBURBAN LOTS AT PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 6561, on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6561) providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., at not less than the value at which they were reappraised under the act of May 2, 1906.

SEC. 2. That as to all suburban lots of said town site heretofore sold under the act of May 2, 1906, or previous acts, patents for the said lots shall be issued to each purchaser upon payment in full by said purchaser or claimant of the reappraised price of such lot or lots as returned under the act of May 2, 1906, irrespective of whether such purchaser shall have improved said lot to the value of $300, as required by said act of May 2, 1906.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts relating to said lots in conflict herewith, and particularly that part of the act of May 2, 1906, stipulating improvements to the value of $300 required to be made upon each such suburban lot prior to the issuance of patent, are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Is the gentleman from Washington satisfied that the purchasers of this land who have made improvements upon their lots will never bring any claim against the Government because we release the other purchasers from making improvements on their lots?

Mr. HADLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I am not advised upon that point so as to be able to give him any assurance in reference to that. I understand some 38 lots of 137 had been improved in accordance with the requirements of the department. Others have been improved in a way, but not satisfactory to the department.

Mr. MANN. The Government sold a number of lots with a provision that there should be $300 worth of improvements put upon each lot. This bill proposes to release that requirement.

Some of the purchasers have made improvements upon their lots. Now, does the gentleman think if we pass this bill we will be under any obligation to pay any claims to people who have made improvements on their lots on the ground that perhaps we have diminished the value of their property by not requiring others to put improvements on their lots?

Mr. HADLEY. In answer to the gentleman's question it seems to me the improvements that have been made upon the lots are not lost, but they are presumably for the benefit of the lots and to enhance their value. Whether claims might be made in respect to improvements made in case the patentees improve in accordance with the requirements, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does know whether he thinks such claims would be just or not, whether we ought to pay any claim of that kind.

Mr. HADLEY. Upon present consideration it does not seem to me it would be. That is my view of it without having investigated the subject thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks us now—having put a requirement in the sale, where we sold a hundred and fourteen lots, that each purchaser should make an improvement to the value of at least $300 before they obtained title to the property, and about one-third of the purchasers have made the improvements—the gentleman now asks us to relieve the other purchasers from making improvements, but has no assurance at all that there will not be claims made against the Government because we release this requirement. It seems to me that if the people living there say they want the requirement released so they can have the property taxed, that their representative ought to be willing to say that they will not bring any claim against the Government because we did the thing they are asking us to do.

Mr. HADLEY. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to say I would not advance such a claim on my own account. I have not consulted these patentees in regard to a claim, and therefore in good faith I could not give such warrant and assurance.

Mr. MANN. Of course I was trying to get the gentleman's judgment, and know what the facts in the case were, whether there would be any justice in such a claim, if made, in the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. HADLEY. I say frankly that my own judgment is, I think not.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HADLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 17235, which the Clerk has at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17235) granting the consent of Congress to W. H. Crosby, W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette, Daniel Good, Henry May, Robert C. Gaupp, Edward Kener, jr., William F. MacGlashan, and William A. Morgan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the present, I will object.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Illinois objected and then withdrew——

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall there was a similar authorization in the last Congress for a bridge across the Niagara, at which time there was some dispute between different Representatives as to whether it was simply granting a paper authorization——

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to withhold it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to state to the gentleman that that bridge was not in the locality of this at all. The bridge authorized two years ago was 5 miles below the falls.

This bridge is near or within the limits of the city of Buffalo, and there is only one bridge within twenty-odd miles of it. That bridge is inadequate for any purpose to connect the people of the two countries. The railroad business, which still tries to use the old single-track bridge, is badly congested. There is no highway connection at all. The railroad people, who were offered money by the people of Buffalo to add to the accommodations, say that the piers and substructure are insufficient to support the bridge, and on account of the financial conditions brought about by the war in Europe they are not prepared now to take up and finance the proposition to enlarge it. The people of Buffalo themselves selected this list of rich men who have the money in hand to build it. They do not have to borrow it.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia if this bridge is near Fort Erie, where the Michigan Central makes its short cut on the line to St. Thomas and Detroit?

Mr. ADAMSON. This bridge crosses over Squaw Island and is used and operated by the International Bridge Co., with headquarters in Canada.

Mr. STAFFORD. How far above the falls is the proposed location?

Mr. ADAMSON. Twenty miles. There is no accommodation there at all for the people of the two countries, and there are nearly a million people who need this accommodation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat acquainted with the neighborhood. When I interposed an objection I had the idea that it was another paper combination similar to that which was passed through the last Congress to provide a bridge in the neighborhood of the falls, but with the additional information received from the gentleman from Georgia I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to W. H. Crosby, W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette, Daniel Good, Henry May, Robert C. Gaupp, Edward Kener, jr., William F. MacGlashan, and William A. Morgan, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Niagara River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within or near the city limits of Buffalo, in the county of Erie, in the State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That subject to the provisions of this act the Secretary of War may permit the persons herein named to construct a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of the bridge herein authorized, in accordance with the foregoing act approved March 23, 1906, so far as the same may be applicable.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge or tunnels is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Navy, asking information relative to the Navy, and the Secretary's reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, just for information, is this practical information or political?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. It is practical.

Mr. MANN. It is not a political article?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. I did not know that the Secretary of the Navy prepared any other kind.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. It is practical information, which will be utilized.

Mr. MANN. I am glad of that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1916, at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

PAY OF COMPOSITORS AND BOOKBINDERS.

Mr. TAVENNER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is recognized.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report. Is this bill on the Speaker's table?

Mr. TAVENNER. It is on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act the pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 55 cents per hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana reserves an objection.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to say that this is the bill providing for an increase in the pay of the compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office. The Public Printer has recommended this increase in his annual reports for 1914 and 1915. The House Committee on Printing and the Senate Committee on Printing reported the bill favorably, and the Senate at this session passed the bill without a dissenting vote. I believe, since this has been considered so frequently by committees of Congress, that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this the proposition that passed the House favorably when the bill to codify the printing laws was before the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; it is the identical proposition.

Mr. MANN. That bill did not pass the House.

Mr. TAVENNER. This paragraph of the bill passed the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It did receive the sanction of the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; after considerable debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It puts the printers and bookbinders of the Government Printing Office on the same pay basis as many private printing offices throughout the United States, it being shown at the time the matter was discussed here that higher pay was accorded to printers in certain newspaper offices and elsewhere throughout the United States than was paid to the printers in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provision has practically passed both Houses?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I am for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is not a very pleasant job for me to object to these things, but it does impress me, Mr. Speaker, and it impresses me very seriously, with appropriations at this session of Congress amounting to the appalling sum of $1,680,000,000, one-half of the total expense of the great Civil War, that it is not a very appropriate time for the Democratic Party, responsible for legislation, to increase salaries to the extent of $75,000 per year, which this bill carries.

I have read this bill. I am not doing things blindly at all. I have read the report of the committee. What are the facts? This same class of men who are now seeking this increase of pay will entail a drain upon the Treasury of $75,000 per year are paid higher wages to-day than the same class of men in 22 cities, substantially the leading cities of the United States, as set forth in their report. They are paid a lower wage here than they are in only four cities of the United States. I have nothing against this class of men and nothing in the world to say against them. They get $4 per day for eight hours' work. They get their 30 days' annual leave with pay that these other employees in private institutions do not get at all. They get every Saturday evening off for three months in the year. In addition to that they get all the national holidays, and when the year's work is done they have performed about 247 days' labor for the Government. At this time I am compelled to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that will he yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can sympathize with the gentleman as to the expenditures authorized during this session of Congress. I think they will amount, as the gentleman says, to about $1,700,000,000 or thereabouts, but is it not a fact that that $1,700,000,000 includes such expenditures as $20,000,000 for a nitrate plant——

Mr. COX. For which the gentleman from Philadelphia voted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I did not.

Mr. COX. Did not the gentleman vote for the Army reorganization bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On a separate proposition I voted against the nitrate plant.

Mr. COX. Did not the gentleman finally vote for the Army reorganization bill when it passed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did. We had to keep the Government going.

Mr. COX. Then the gentleman voted for the nitrate appropriation of $20,000,000, which it carried.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When I had the opportunity, apart from the trick by which that appropriation was included in the Army bill, I voted against it.

Mr. COX. The difference which the gentleman seeks to make is the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum. The gentleman had a right to vote against the bill as a whole if he disapproved of anything in it, and he did not do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman if he did not vote for the Army reorganization bill?

Mr. COX. I did, and would vote for it again, and so did the gentleman, because this bill was embraced in the naval bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not the gentleman vote for the armor-plate plant?

Mr. COX. I did, and would vote for it again.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not the gentleman vote for all those extraneous Government-ownership propositions?

Mr. COX. I do not know what the gentleman means by "extraneous propositions." The record of my votes is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think I have not missed one roll call this whole session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman said one of these bills—the revenue bill—was the best ever presented to Congress.

Mr. COX. The tariff bill; and it was. If the gentleman had taken that view of it, he ought to have voted for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, the gentleman having voted for all these extravagances, does he not think he ought to allow the printers who work for the Government to get a higher wage?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT). The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys appropriated or available for Indian school purposes may be expended without restriction as to per capita expenditure for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any Indian school.

With the following committee amendment:

Add after the word "school" on page 1, line 6, the following proviso: "Provided, That in no event shall the per capita cost at any one school exceed the sum of $200."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I believe under the existing law the per capita expenditure in Indian schools can not exceed $167 per annum.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Except as it may be changed in the current appropriation act.

Mr. HASTINGS. And that has been changed for the past four years, practically in the terms of this bill. The limit has been taken off for that length of time.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill proposes to take off the limitation entirely, I suppose because the Senate considers that under a Democratic administration there has been a great reduction in the cost of living. The old law provided that the per capita expenditure should not exceed $167 per year. After we have had this reduction in the cost of living, caused by a Democratic administration, as promised in the platform, it is proposed now to take off the limit entirely. That is the Senate proposition. Now the House committee reports an amendment which makes the per capita cost not to exceed $200 per year.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I suppose if this bill passes the House the Senate will send it to conference, and there will be in conference a controversy to decide between $200 a year and maybe $2,000,000 a year. There is no limit on the other side.

Mr. HASTINGS. We hope to have the Senate concur in this House amendment.

Mr. MANN. I want some assurance that the Senate will do that before we pass this bill. I know that the Indian Office, influenced by some of the Indian schools, would not look with disfavor upon a very large per capita expenditure in some of the schools. In some of the Indian schools the per capita expenditure has run up to $400 a year where we have removed the limit of cost.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that this limit of $167 was placed in the act of 1908, and that this limit has been taken off by special provision in the Indian appropriation bill for the past four years, in substantially the same language as that of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. That has all been under a Democratic administration in this House.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; that was really begun under a Republican administration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I regret to say that in the last four years the administration of this House has been Democratic.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that will be continued 10 or 12 years more.

Mr. MANN. If it should be continued 10 or 12 years more, they will want to put the limit of cost, not at $200 but at $500 or $600 a year, because the cost of living is very rapidly increasing, while the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, owing largely to that fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman wants to deprive these Indian pupils of being properly educated, let him object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] ought himself to be endeavoring to protect the Treasury, but he appreciates the fact that the cost of living greatly increases under Democratic rule, and is willing to take the limit off entirely. I am not. This money is paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It is raised by taxation of the people. Let us know something about what it is going to cost.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman realize that extravagance when we are poor is a mere bagatelle when we are rich, as we get under Democratic administration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] may have greatly added to his wealth since he came to Congress; the rest us have not.

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. What is going to be done with this bill? I shall not let it pass until we know something about what is going to happen to it. I am not willing to absolutely remove the limit of cost.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I can not give positive assurance as to what will be done. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that this amendment should be concurred in when it shall go to the Senate. It is not my expectation, so far as I am able to speak, to have it go to conference. The Secretary of the Interior is very earnest in having this bill enacted, and the report shows that the Indian schools will be very greatly crippled if this legislation is not enacted. Special legislation has been enacted for the last four or five years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What provision is in the Indian appropriation bill for the present year?

Mr. HASTINGS. It is the act of 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What provision is in the current appropriation act?

Mr. HASTINGS. There is no provision, but there is general legislation in the act of 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Fixing the limit of cost?

Mr. HASTINGS. Fixing the limit of cost at $167. There is general appropriation for the maintenance of these schools in the present Indian appropriation bill, and without this legislation it would be limited to $167.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the gentleman to say that for the past four years the limit has been increased?

Mr. HASTINGS. There has been a special exemption, but it applied to that particular act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any exemption in the current law?

Mr. HASTINGS. There is no exemption in the current law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Unless we know something about what it is going to cost I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6914) to amend section 82 of chapter 231 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6914, with a Senate amendment thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CONNELLY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

JOHN ERICSSON.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HELVERING, may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of John Ericsson.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. HELVERING, be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of John Ericsson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 2.25 o'clock p. m. to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 2.25 o'clock p. m. to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 2.25 p. m. to-day.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session, and was called to order by the Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, next Monday the President of the United States is going to deliver an address in my district accepting the Lincoln farm in Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that his speech when made may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech that will be delivered by the President of the United States accepting the Lincoln farm in his district next Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, if it is so framed that the speech will go into the permanent RECORD in its proper place and not as of to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I want to insert it in the RECORD, of course, after it is made.

Mr. MANN. But when a Member obtains leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, in the permanent RECORD the Public Printer puts the speech in the place where the leave was granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My request will show that the speech is not made; but to avoid a quibble I will make the request that it go into the permanent RECORD after it is made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 2 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House the Chair appoints the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as a committee to wait on the President and escort him into the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On behalf of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

At 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I present to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 1340).

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Congress, I have come to you to seek your assistance in dealing with a very grave situation which has arisen out of the demand of the employees of the railroads engaged in freight train service that they be granted an eight-hour working day, safeguarded by payment for an hour and a half of service for every hour of work beyond the eight.

The matter has been agitated for more than a year. The public has been made familiar with the demands of the men and the arguments urged in favor of them, and even more familiar with the objections of the railroads and their counter demand that certain privileges now enjoyed by their men and certain bases of payment worked out through many years of contest be reconsidered, especially in their relation to the adoption of an eight-hour day. The matter came some three weeks ago to a final issue and resulted in a complete deadlock between the parties. The means provided by law for the mediation of the controversy failed and the means of arbitration for which the law provides were rejected. The representatives of the railway executives proposed that the demands of the men be submitted in their entirety to arbitration, along with certain questions of readjustment as to pay and conditions of employment which seemed to them to be either closely associated with the demands or to call for reconsideration on their own merits; the men absolutely declined arbitration, especially if any of their established privileges were by that means to be drawn again in question. The law in the matter put no compulsion upon them. The four hundred thousand men from whom the demands proceeded had voted to strike if their demands were refused; the strike was imminent; it has since been set for the fourth of September next. It affects the men who man the freight trains on practically every railway in the country. The freight service throughout the United States must stand still until their places are filled, if, indeed, it should prove possible to fill them at all. Cities will be cut off from their food supplies, the whole commerce of the nation will be paralyzed, men of every sort and occupation will be thrown out of employment, countless thousands will in all likelihood be brought, it may be, to the very point of starvation, and a tragical national calamity brought on, to be added to the other distresses of the time, because no basis of accommodation or settlement has been found.

Just so soon as it became evident that mediation under the existing law had failed and that arbitration had been rendered impossible by the attitude of the men, I considered it my duty to confer with the representatives of both the railways and the brotherhoods, and myself offer mediation, not as an arbitrator, but merely as spokesman of the nation, in the interest of justice, indeed, and as a friend of both parties, but not as judge, only as the representative of one hundred millions of men, women, and children who would pay the price, the incalculable price, of loss and suffering should these few men insist upon approaching and concluding the matters in controversy between them merely as employers and employees, rather than as patriotic citizens of the United States looking before and after and accepting the larger responsibility which the public would put upon them. [Applause.]

It seemed to me, in considering the subject-matter of the controversy, that the whole spirit of the time and the preponderant evidence of recent economic experience spoke for the eight-hour day. [Applause.] It has been adjudged by the thought and experience of recent years a thing upon which society is justified in insisting as in the interest of health, efficiency, contentment, and a general increase of economic vigor. The whole presumption of modern experience would, it seemed to me, be in its favor, whether there was arbitration or not, and the debatable points to settle were those which arose out of the acceptance of the eight-hour day rather than those which affected its establishment. I, therefore, proposed that the eight-hour day be adopted by the railway managements and put into practice for the present as a substitute for the existing ten-hour basis of pay and service; that I should appoint, with the permission of the Congress, a small commission to observe the results of the change, carefully studying the figures of the altered operating costs, not only, but also the conditions of labor under which the men worked and the operation of their existing agreements with the railroads, with instructions to report the facts as they found them to the Congress at the earliest possible day, but without recommendation; and that, after the facts had been thus disclosed, an adjustment should in some orderly manner be sought of all the matters now left unadjusted between the railroad managers and the men.

These proposals were exactly in line, it is interesting to note, with the position taken by the Supreme Court of the United States when appealed to to protect certain litigants from the financial losses which they confidently expected if they should submit to the regulation of their charges and of their methods of service by public legislation. The court has held that it would not undertake to form a judgment upon forecasts, but could base its action only upon actual experience; that it must be supplied with facts, not with calculations and opinions, however scientifically attempted. To undertake to arbitrate the question of the adoption of an eight-hour day in the light of results merely estimated and predicted would be to undertake an enterprise of conjecture. No wise man could undertake it, or, if he did undertake it, could feel assured of his conclusions.

I unhesitatingly offered the friendly services of the administration to the railway managers to see to it that justice was done the railroads in the outcome. I felt warranted in assuring them that no obstacle of law would be suffered to stand in the way of their increasing their revenues to meet the expenses resulting from the change so far as the development of their business and of their administrative efficiency did not prove adequate to meet them. The public and the representatives of the public, I felt justified in assuring them, were disposed to nothing but justice in such cases and were willing to serve those who served them.

The representatives of the brotherhoods accepted the plan; but the representatives of the railroads declined to accept it. In the face of what I cannot but regard as the practical certainty that they will be ultimately obliged to accept the eight-hour day by the concerted action of organized labor, backed by the favorable judgment of society [applause], the representatives of the railway management have felt justified in declining a peaceful settlement which would engage all the forces of justice, public and private, on their side to take care of the event. They fear the hostile influence of shippers, who would be opposed to an increase of freight rates (for which, however, of course, the public itself would pay); they apparently feel no confidence that the Interstate Commerce Commission could withstand the objections that would be made. They do not care to rely upon the friendly assurances of the Congress or the President. They have thought it best that they should be forced to yield, if they must yield, not by counsel, but by the suffering of the country. While my conferences with them were in progress, and when to all outward appearance those conferences had come to a standstill, the representatives of the brotherhoods suddenly acted and set the strike for the fourth of September.

The railway managers based their decision to reject my counsel in this matter upon their conviction that they must at any cost to themselves or to the country stand firm for the principle of arbitration which the men had rejected. I based my counsel upon the indisputable fact that there was no means of obtaining arbitration. The law supplied none; earnest efforts at mediation had failed to influence the men in the least. To stand firm for the principle of arbitration and yet not get arbitration seemed to me futile, and something more than futile, because it involved incalculable distress to the country and consequences in some respects worse than those of war, and that in the midst of peace.

I yield to no man in firm adherence, alike of conviction and of purpose, to the principle of arbitration in industrial disputes; but matters have come to a sudden crisis in this particular dispute and the country had been caught unprovided with any practicable means of enforcing that conviction in practice (by whose fault we will not now stop to inquire). A situation had to be met whose elements and fixed conditions were indisputable. The practical and patriotic course to pursue, as it seemed to me, was to secure immediate peace by conceding the one thing in the demands of the men which society itself and any arbitrators who represented public sentiment were most likely to approve, and immediately lay the foundations for securing arbitration with regard to everything else involved. The event has confirmed that judgment.

I was seeking to compose the present in order to safeguard the future; for I wished an atmosphere of peace and friendly cooperation in which to take counsel with the representatives of the nation with regard to the best means for providing, so far as it might prove possible to provide, against the recurrence of such unhappy situations in the future,—the best and most practicable means of securing calm and fair arbitration of all industrial disputes in the days to come. This is assuredly the best way of vindicating a principle, namely, having failed to make certain of its observance in the present, to make certain of its observance in the future. [Applause.]

But I could only propose. I could not govern the will of others who took an entirely different view of the circumstances of the case, who even refused to admit the circumstances to be what they have turned out to be.

Having failed to bring the parties to this critical controversy to an accommodation, therefore, I turn to you, deeming it clearly our duty as public servants to leave nothing undone that we can do to safeguard the life and interests of the nation. In the spirit of such a purpose, I earnestly recommend the following legislation:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now awaiting action by the Senate; in order that the Commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are with its present constitution and means of action practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation. [Applause.]

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the President of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads; its effects in the matter of operating costs, in the application of the existing practices and agreements to the new conditions, and in all other practical aspects, with the provision that the investigators shall report their conclusions to the Congress at the earliest possible date, but without recommendation as to legislative action; in order that the public may learn from an unprejudiced source just what actual developments have ensued.

Fourth, explicit approval by the Congress of the consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted. [Applause.]

And, sixth, the lodgement in the hands of the Executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes, with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use. [Applause.]

This last suggestion I make because we cannot in any circumstances suffer the nation to be hampered in the essential matter of national defense. At the present moment circumstances render this duty particularly obvious. Almost the entire military force of the nation is stationed upon the Mexican border to guard our territory against hostile raids. It must be supplied, and steadily supplied, with whatever it needs for its maintenance and efficiency. If it should be necessary for purposes of national defense to transfer any portion of it upon short notice to some other part of the country, for reasons now unforeseen, ample means of transportation must be available, and available without delay. The power conferred in this matter should be carefully and explicitly limited to cases of military necessity, but in all such cases it should be clear and ample.

There is one other thing we should do if we are true champions of arbitration. We should make all arbitral awards judgments by record of a court of law in order that their interpretation and enforcement may lie, not with one of the parties to the arbitration, but with an impartial and authoritative tribunal.

These things I urge upon you, not in haste or merely as a means of meeting a present emergency, but as permanent and necessary additions to the law of the land, suggested, indeed, by circumstances we had hoped never to see, but imperative as well as just, if such emergencies are to be prevented in the future. I feel that no extended argument is needed to commend them to your favorable consideration. They demonstrate themselves. The time and the occasion only give emphasis to their importance. We need them now and we shall continue to need them. [Applause.]

At 2 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President just delivered to the House will be printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY AND HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on Calendar Wednesday to-morrow be dispensed with and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I suppose the purpose of that is to take up the deficiency bill to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is probably nothing else to-morrow except the deficiency bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That will be sufficient for one day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15455, the shipping bill, with Senate amendments, with a view of moving to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the shipping bill, with Senate amendments, and the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title to the bill, as follows:

H. R. 15455. An act to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and five gentlemen present; not a quorum.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were ordered to be closed and the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Members.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 237 Members, a quorum, have answered present. [Applause.] The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, when the point of order was pending the other day the Senate amendments to this bill, most of them——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. What is before the House?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendments to this bill (H. R. 15455).

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, what is——

The SPEAKER. The Chair laid the bill before the House and the Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. MANN. That is another thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wanted the gentleman to stop a minute so as to get that remark in. [Applause.] The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 1:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "trade," insert "Provided, That a cargo boat, commonly called an ocean tramp, shall not be deemed 'common carrier by water in foreign commerce.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it the proper procedure to dispose of these amendments as reported?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. An amendment having been reported, is it not in order now to dispose of it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, if anybody——

Mr. MANN. If that is the proper procedure.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to concur in the amendment, and on that he moves the previous question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if there is to be any time for debate on any of these amendments?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered there can not be debate.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Then I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that; it has not been two minutes since the roll was called.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let us see for a moment. I think there are one or two amendments some gentlemen desire to move to concur in with an amendment. I have no desire for a separate vote on each amendment. Suppose we have all the amendments reported and then agree upon a time for debate.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If you are not going to give any time, if you are going to run it through as you did before and desire to do that again——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MANN. If we have an agreement for a time for debate and then with the understanding that any amendment where gentlemen move to concur with an amendment they may be excepted from the gentleman's general motion——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to any reasonable time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If the gentleman is attempting to put it through without any time at all, we might want considerable time to debate several of these amendments.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the amendments to section 9, which admit vessels built abroad to the constwise trade by striking out the word "not"—although all the amendments in that section stand somewhat together and might be voted on together—ought to be thoroughly debated. The House ought to understand before we adopt that. It seems also that the last amendment to the whole bill, which is an addition and which provides that every ship engaged in foreign or domestic trade must take goods if they are offered, ought perhaps to have some exceptions, if the vessel were endangered, or its voyage were endangered, by the offer of contraband goods or goods which might be said to be going to a belligerent, so that those goods would put the vessel in jeopardy.

Certainly both of those two sections ought to be thoroughly debated, and I would suggest that there ought to be two hours of debate on the coastwise-trade amendment.

The SPEAKER. What has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to say?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not yielded the floor. I am willing to consent to any reasonable debate before moving the previous question; but I am willing to make this agreement: That all the amendments be reported, and that debate shall be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], and at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and the amendments. The amendments to two or three sections I would be willing to except from the motion.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, if section 9 could be considered and the amendments voted on either separately or together, but considered separately from the rest? Because section 9 applies to an entirely different subject, to the admission of foreign-built vessels to the American coastwise trade.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand the vote could be had on any amendment.

The SPEAKER. What difference would that make?

Mr. MANN. Why not ask unanimous consent to have all reported except the amendments to section 9 and the last amendment? I am not selecting those from my own recollection, but from that of others. Then dispose of all the amendments except the ones I have named.

Mr. FORDNEY. From 15 to 19, inclusive?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Then would there be general debate desired on these bulky amendments in addition to section 9 and the last amendment?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There should be debate on these amendments numbered 15 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. That is under section 9. I have excepted that.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think there ought to be more than one hour's debate.

Mr. MANN. I think that we ought to agree to all the amendments except——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I object to amendment No. 1.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to be heard on it?

Mr GREENE of Massachusetts. I want an opportunity to be afforded, if people desire to be heard on it; I want half an hour. If we do not use the time, we will give it up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not want half an hour on those amendments.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. You do not, but some others may.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we have time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we have not.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from New York will remain here a while, I think.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York has not been here for several weeks. I have been here every day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not correct.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to have reported to the House all of the amendments except the amendment to section 9 and the last amendment, and then give half an hour each on these amendments and then two hours' debate on those amendments that are excepted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not two hours. Say an hour.

Mr. MANN. It is an important measure.

The SPEAKER. What request has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to make?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If the gentleman does not want to use any time, he need not.

Mr. MANN. If you give us the hour's time over here, all right.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman want to vote on these amendments en bloc?

Mr. MANN. The amendments to section 9 may be voted on en bloc, but they are different from the last amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all the amendments be reported to the House except the amendments to section 9 and the last Senate amendment. I believe it is Senate amendment No.——

Mr. MANN. No. 48. That is, section 36.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; Senate amendment No. 48, section 36.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen have said to me that they desire to debate amendment No. 1. I do not want to cut them off.

The SPEAKER. Let us get the request of the gentleman from Missouri before the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is this: That the debate on these amendments be limited to 30 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], and that at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be ordered on those amendments and that they be voted on en bloc; that the debate on amendments to section 9 and Senate amendment No. 48 be limited to an hour and a half, at the expiration of which time——

Mr. MANN. One hour to be controlled——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and 30 minutes to be controlled by myself, and at the expiration of that time the previous question to be considered as ordered on the amendments to sections 9 and 48 and that the vote on the amendments to section 9 be taken en bloc.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I object, Mr. Speaker. We should have them considered separately.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is that section 9 ought not to be mixed up with the last one in debate. There should be a separate time allowed for debate on section 9.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You can divide it as you please.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They ought not to be mixed up. One is the coastwise trade and the other is the blacklist question. There ought to be at least an hour on each—I should say two hours on the coastwise-trade question. That affects everybody—the gentleman from New York and everybody—tremendously. And I suggest that a fair time for debate should be allowed on section 9 and a fair time on the last section.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Two hours were asked for, and I have conceded one hour to that side and have only retained half an hour for myself.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I was speaking of section 9. I want section 9 debated and disposed of by itself.

Mr. ALEXANDER. How much time?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think we need the same amount of time—an hour and a half. The gentleman can probably get whatever time he desires.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I want to conclude by 6 o'clock.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I wish to reserve 10 minutes for myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that all of the amendments be reported, except the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48; that there shall be 30 minutes' debate, one-half to be controlled by himself——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Excluding amendment 48.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was trying to put the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am trying to listen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all these amendments be reported, and that there shall be 30 minutes' debate on them, excluding the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48, and that there shall be an hour and a half debate on the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48, one hour of that to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and 30 minutes of it by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]; that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on all those amendments——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I prefer what I stated before, that I am willing to accept an hour's time on section 9, and the gentleman from Missouri said he did not want more than 30 minutes, and I agreed to that, but I have not agreed to include amendment 48.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman asked for two hours on the two amendments, and I conceded one hour to him.

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, a parliamentary inquiry. This does not affect the right of any Member to call for a separate vote on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. It would. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to give an hour and a half, one hour on this side on section 9, and half an hour additional on amendment 48——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well; I concede that.

The SPEAKER. That on section 9 there shall be an hour and a half debate, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]. Now, does the gentleman mean by his request that all these amendments shall be voted on at one time, in one vote?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This was my proposition, that all the amendments be read except the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48; that the debate on those amendments, excepting the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48, be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts; that at the expiration of that time the previous question be ordered on those amendments, and that they be voted on en bloc; that the general debate on the amendments to section 9 be limited to one hour and a half, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and one-half hour by myself; that at the conclusion of that debate the previous question be considered as ordered; that when that is disposed of the general debate on amendment 48 be limited to one hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and 30 minutes by myself, at the expiration of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered——

Mr. MANN. Do not say anything about the previous question on that. That ends the debate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That ends debate. I understand there is an amendment to be offered to amendment 48.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that all these amendments be reported at once except the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48; that there shall be 30 minutes debate on them, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and one-half by himself; that at the end of that 30 minutes the previous question shall be considered as ordered on all the amendments except the amendments to section 9 and amendment 48, and the vote taken on those amendments en bloc; then that there shall be an hour and a half debate on the amendments to section 9, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and half an hour by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]; and that at the end of that debate the previous question be ordered and the vote taken on that; then that on amendment 48 there shall be an hour of debate, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, that does not prevent an amendment to section 48?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. Of course not. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments, except those to section 9 and amendment 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

The board shall have power, and it shall be its duty whenever complaint shall be made to it, to investigate the action of any foreign Government with respect to the privileges afforded and burdens imposed upon vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade whenever it shall appear that the laws, regulations, or practices of any foreign Government operate in such a manner that vessels of the United States are not accorded equal privileges in foreign trade with vessels of such foreign countries or vessels of other foreign countries, either in trade to or from the ports of such foreign country or in respect of the passage or transportation through such foreign country of passengers or goods intended for shipment or transportation in such vessels of the United States, either to or from ports of such foreign country or to or from ports of other foreign countries. It shall be the duty of the board to report the results of its investigation to the President with its recommendations and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to secure by diplomatic action equal privileges for vessels of the United States engaged in such foreign trade. And if by such diplomatic action the President shall be unable to secure such equal privileges, then the President shall advise Congress as to the facts and his conclusions by special message, if deemed important in the public interest, in order that proper action may be taken thereon."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the first Senate amendment provides—

That a cargo boat commonly called an ocean tramp shall not be deemed a "common carrier by water in foreign commerce."

The bill as drawn by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and as it passed the House excluded tramps from the provisions of the law. A tramp is a cargo vessel that ordinarily is a bailee for hire. For instance, if a party charters a vessel to carry a cargo of coal from New York to some port in South America, that vessel is not a common carrier within the meaning of the law, it is a bailee for hire and called a tramp.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a moment. It is only when a vessel engages in business as a common carrier that it comes within the provisions of this bill. Where a ship is let by charter party to a person who is to furnish a full cargo, the owners having no right to take goods for any other person, i is not a common carrier, but only a bailee to transport as a private carrier for hire.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not such service apply to the commerce on the Great Lakes as well as the high seas?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The same rule does apply to both.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment limits it to steamers on the high seas. That would not cover the lake carriers. I beg to say to the gentleman that the shipping people on the Great Lakes are protesting against that very condition because you do not exempt tramp shipper on the Great Lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will read amendments 2 and 3, he will note that they provide that—

The term "common carrier by water in interstate commerce" means a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property (2) on the high seas or the Great Lakes on regular routes from port to port between one State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States and any other State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or between places in the same Territory, District, or possession.

The term "common carrier by water" means a common carrier by water in foreign commerce or a common carrier by water in interstate commerce (3) on the high seas or the Great Lakes on regular routes from port to port.

Now, that language, "on regular routes from port to port," excludes the tramp vessel.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there not some ambiguity about that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the bill was clear as we passed it through the House, and I do not think the second and third amendments add anything to the clearness of the bill. The second and third amendments have the same effect as the first as far as excluding tramps is concerned, and the second and third cover the tramps on the Great Lakes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then a collier chartered for one special voyage from Cleveland to Milwaukee or Chicago would not come under the provisions of this law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it would be a bailee for hire.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be on a regular route from port to port under these amendments.

Mr. MANN. It would not have a regular route, and that I suppose is what it means.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; you would not call that a regular route any more than a vessel chartered to carry a cargo of coal from New York to South America.

Mr. MANN. There are three definitions, the first is defining a common carrier in the foreign commerce, and that excludes ocean tramp vessels. The second is a definition of a common carrier by water in interstate commerce, and that is limited so that it seems to me that it excludes tramp vessels on the Great Lakes. Of course, it excludes all vessels on the rivers. The third is a definition of a common carrier by water, which excludes everything not on a regular route. The regular route I should suppose was intended to mean the regular route of the boat and not a geographical line.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is my view of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope that view will be borne out, but the shipping interests did not have that view of it.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Can the gentleman tell me what per cent of the total water-borne commerce between American ports and foreign ports is now carried in what is commonly known as tramp steamers?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I can not accurately.

Mr. HULBERT. Does not the gentleman know that the greater number of vessels engaged in transporting commodities between this country and foreign countries are tramp steamers?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Does not the act tend to operate to affect vessels flying the American flag while it exempts the majority of all vessels engaged in foreign commerce in this country?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not. That is, it operates equitably as to vessels to which it applies. I do not suppose that the gentleman would have it apply to tramps.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say it was testified before the committee that 60 per cent of the foreign commerce was carried by tramp steamers.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; although my time is limited.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand, these provisions exclude tramp vessels from all the regulatory features of the law. Is not that true?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Sixty to seventy-five per cent of all the commerce of the United States both to our ports and from our ports would be outside of these features of the law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If they do not come within the provisions of the law.

Mr. TOWNER. If they were what is commonly known as tramp steamers.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; but I can not understand any objections gentlemen would have to the provision to exclude tramp steamers.

Now there are other amendments—amendments 7, 8, and 9. Seven and eight exclude the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce from the shipping board, and amendment 9 reduces the salary of the members of the board from $10,000 to $7,500.

The amendment excluding the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce from the board is not so objectionable to me personally that I would vote to nonconcur. I do think the Senate made a mistake in reducing the salary of the board from $10,000 to $7,500, and in that view I think the Committee on the Merchant Marine are practically a unit. But my view is that while some of the Senate amendments do not meet my approval or the approval of a majority of the members of the committee in every respect, yet we deem it best as it is now late in the session and we are anxious to pass the bill as soon as possible with a view of an early adjournment to accept all of the Senate amendments.

That is what prompted me to move to concur in the Senate amendments, and I hope the Members of the House will take that view. If the bill should go back to the Senate, it means further delay; just how long, no one can tell.

Amendment No. 10 to my mind was an unnecessary amendment. It provides that the employees of the board shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law. The language of the bill as it passed the House was approved by the Civil Service Commission and written into the bill by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries as they suggested; and the Senate amendment, to my mind, is altogether unnecessary, but it is harmless. Amendment No. 11 provides that the board may make necessary repairs on and alterations of such vessels—that is, the vessels that the board is authorized to purchase or which it causes to be built; and further, that neither the board nor any corporation formed under section 11 in which the United States is then a stockholder shall purchase, lease, or charter vessels engaged in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States unless such vessels are about to be withdrawn from that commerce without any intention on the part of the owner to return them thereto within a reasonable time. I think that amendment is well enough, although a board of discreet men carrying out a rational policy would not do that. It would add nothing to our tonnage in the foreign trade for the board to take over part of the tonnage already engaged in that trade. As much may be said with reference to subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) of amendment 11. They simply write into the law what I regard a sound policy, a policy that would have been pursued by the board in all probability in the absence of any such amendment.

Amendment No. 20 provides:

No vessel registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States, or owned by any person a citizen of the United States, except one which the board is prohibited from purchasing, shall be sold to any person not a citizen of the United States or transferred to a foreign registry or flag, unless such vessel is first tendered to the board at the price in good faith offered by others, or, if no such offer, at a fair price, to be determined in the manner provided in section 10.

There can be no reasonable objection to that amendment. It has my unqualified approval.

There are other amendments providing for certain investigations, one an amendment to section 13 of the original bill, that the board shall investigate the subject of marine insurance in this country and abroad, with a view to determining if ample provision is being made in the way of marine insurance to take care of our commerce under the American flag. The board has the power to make those investigations under the bill as it passed the House, and that amendment was unnecessary. The same is true of amendment No. 46, which is incorporated as section 26 in the bill. The board under the provisions of section 13 of the bill as it passed the House has the right to make every investigation provided for in the Senate amendments No. 11 and No. 46, and it is desirable that they should have that power, but the amendment is unobjectionable, except that it was unnecessary, and we do not object to concurring in it alone on that account.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAGE of North Carolina). The gentleman has consumed 14 minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this bill, because I do not believe there is a necessity at this time for the Government to buy foreign ships or to start competition with private shipowners. This is one of the Government ownership wedges that the present administration has driven into the United States Treasury. It may be one of those "distresses of the time" to which the President referred in the message which he delivered here from the Clerk's desk an hour ago. You will recall, and it is printed on page 1 of his address, that the President suggested that we were now, in view of the threatened railroad strike, at the "very point of starvation, and a tragical national calamity," which was to be "added to the other distresses of the time."

I end that quotation there. I cite it, because most of our friends advocating the passage of this $50,000,000 ship-purchase bill and of similar Government ownership bills, have been speaking of the "marvelous prosperity" brought on by the Democratic administration. Now, and this within the last hour, we have had it from the President of the United States, who comes here once in a while to tell us what to do, that we are up against a "calamity." Although the President says the situation has been known for one year, the year of the greatest "Democratic prosperity," still he says we are facing a "tragical national calamity," which is "added to the other distresses of the time."

Mr. Speaker, we have heard nothing in Democratic oratory during the last few months about these "other distresses of the time" What are these "other distresses of the time," to which the President called attention in his speech from the rostrum yonder? We have been told by our Democratic friends that we are now at the heyday of prosperity, brought on by the Wilson administration. We have been told that notwithstanding the most extraordinary extravagance of all time in the promotion of Government schemes of one kind and another, from the purchase of ships through the issue of Panama Canal bonds to the construction of nitrate plants——

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield for a question.

Mr. HARDY. It is an announcement that I wish to make. By agreement the arrangement by unanimous consent is modified to this effect, that instead of taking separate votes with the debate intervening, we each take the time allowed by this agreement a moment ago—that is, an hour and a quarter to this side and an hour and three-quarters to the other side—and then take the three votes one after the other.

Mr. MANN. What is the modification?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this should not come out of my time.

Mr. HARDY. Certainly not. It was deemed that it would be confusing to have a period of debate and then a vote, and then another period of debate and a vote, and another period of debate and then a vote, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and the chairman of the committee have agreed that the whole debate might be had and then the three votes taken, one following the other.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me that that is a very good arrangement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will indulge the Chair, that would require another unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HARDY. I was going to make the suggestion that that would expedite matters.

Mr. MANN. That would mean that we discuss a thing and forget about it, and after a while vote upon it. That sort of arrangement never appealed to me.

Mr. HARDY. I thought both sides were of the opinion that it would be more expeditious. I shall not insist upon it, and I withdraw the request.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will read the concluding words of that sentence I think it will clear up the situation and clarify the atmosphere. The President did not say anything about "times," but merely said that added to the distresses of the time produced by a strike which would paralyze all industry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is conceded that the railroad men are fairly well paid as mechanics, are they not?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Better now than ever, I think, in the history of the country, owing to Democratic prosperity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There it goes again. I am very glad the gentleman makes that statement, because it confirms what I said. If the railroad men of the four brotherhoods about which the President spoke to us a little while ago are enjoying the highest wages ever paid to them, due, as the gentleman from Arkansas says, to "Democratic prosperity," then the question is why does the President of the United States, who has had the information for one whole year, as he told us a little while ago—information that there was "a great calamity" impending—why does the President of the United States bring his calamity baby from the White House and lay it upon the doorstep of Congress when this wonderful national prosperity is prevailing? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is the gentleman in favor of a strike?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at all.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Would the gentleman avert it by legislation if he could?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would do all I could by legislation, but I think the President of the United States has picked up a foundling that was not even left upon his doorstep, but the cry of which he heard afar, and having been unable to properly nurse it he has brought it up and laid it on the doorstep of Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And just about the time I was bringing up the baby! [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Go ahead and nurse it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be better nursed by the Republican Party when it is in power again, as it will be. The Democrats have been boastful lately about what they have done for the country. We have heard a great deal about "Democratic prosperity." Some of you on the other side have even credited this up to the President's economic policies, despite the war in Europe, but now the President comes in his own person and admits that this trouble has been on his hands for a year, and that it means starvation if we do not take the baby off his hands. The President did not consult Congress, not until he discovered that a strike had been ordered for the 4th of September. This strike he tells us is in addition to "the other distresses of the times." Again I ask, What are these distresses in the midst of such wonderful Democratic prosperity? "A tragical national calamity" is what the President calls it.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, which gave ex-Gov. Colquitt, who opposed President Wilson, 102,000 votes in the present election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. EAGLE. Yet the voters of the State of Texas have apparently given twice as many votes to Senator CULBERSON, largely due, no doubt, to the fact that they have faith in President Wilson.

Mr. MOORE of Pensylvania. And most of whom, according to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], come from the great centers of population, the country voters—those out on the farm—being in favor of Gov. Colquitt as against President Wilson.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman misquotes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to both gentlemen from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. When two gentleman from Texas start at the same time it is a good deal like a couple of Kilkenny cats. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is hard to beat two gentlemen from Texas, but one or the other may be able to explain the 102,000 anti-Wilson votes from the great Democratic heart of the people of Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. I thought the gentleman was going to yield to me rather than to interrogate me. I have not taken sides in the Texas senatorial controversy, and will not now be drawn into that matter by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is wiser than most of his colleagues, because, not having taken sides, he came back. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. EAGLE. That is the only thing which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has uttered during the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses with which I have any measure of sympathy at all. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman [Mr. EAGLE] comes from a great State, ably represented, and he never showed wisdom more than he did in the Colquitt-Culberson fight. I want to ask the gentleman how it was Senator CULBERSON, being unable to go down and make the fight for himself, all these anti-Colquitt candidates got together? Was it in the hope that one of them would be picked for the place?

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, the people of Texas ever since the Declaration of Independence and the maintenance of that independence, in 1836, from the tyranny of Mexico, and ever since its admission into our Union in 1845, have manifested no disposition to invite or allow the people of Pennsylvania to dictate to them whom they select for anything. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And yet in spite of what the gentleman says with reference to the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which will assume its place at the head of the Republican column in November, there were 102,000 Democrats who voted against President Wilson and this shipping bill in the last primary election. Now I shall have to go on, because my time is pressing.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman having declined to allow me to make any inquiry, and having failed in his purpose to confuse me, must now be allowed to proceed to make the same sort of captious criticism with which the leader of his party, ex-Associate Justice Hughes, for the last two months has disgusted the country, instead of either himself or his leader having either the wisdom or courage to declare wisely and patriotically what they would do under the same conditions—statesmanship degenerated to demagogy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have given the gentleman an opportunity to make two speeches in my time, and during the whole of these two speeches he has been unable to tell us about those 102,000 antiadministration votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can I have one minute more?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes. Go ahead and use it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In addition to laying this railroad baby upon our doorstep, the President has been in the habit of unloading on us other things.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I would like to, but my time is exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Take Mexico! It will be recalled that the first thing Congress—this great body which is supposed to represent the people—knew about Vera Cruz was when the fleet was ordered down there. The President assumed the responsibility, taking all power to himself, and then walked in here and asked us to support him, and some of us did. It was so in the armed-merchantman controversy. We were called in only to share the responsibility and to be severely criticized for it. Then there was the President's attitude on the tariff. The tariff was an evil thing and was a burden on the people, but after the President took it off, after the Treasury balance was used up, and there was a deficit, the President walked in here and calmly told us he was about $290,000,000 short, and wanted us to go out and get the money. He took us into his confidence when the administration got into a hole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] four minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word.

Mr. BENNET. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House of Representatives I tried one whole afternoon to have the ferryboats and towboats and tugboats and other small craft excepted from the operations of the bill. I was voted down, but I congratulate the Congress upon the fact that the other body has had the good sense to except that kind of craft from the operations of this bill, and therefore the ferryboats and the towboats and the tugboats will not have to make those annual reports and will not be subject to all the provisions of this bill.

There is a very serious proposition, though, remaining in this bill, or rather it was superimposed on this bill by the other body, and that is in relation to tramp vessels. My colleague asked and was informed correctly that 60 per cent of the traffic of the United States is carried in tramp steamers.

What does that mean? It means that the lines like the American Line, out of New York and Philadelphia, the Red D Line, the Wilson Line of traders all come under section 15 of this bill and its provisions, and on the next dock to them, in New York and Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, and other seaport cities, there can tie up a cargo tramp and cut the price and make arrangements with railroads to do anything it pleases, and simply destroy the business of the man who runs a regular line. That is what amendment No. 1 means, on page 1:

Provided, That a cargo boat commonly called an ocean tramp shall not be deemed such "common carrier by water in foreign commerce."

In other words, that exempts it from the provisions of this bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin asked very pertinently why the rule was different on the Great Lakes. I do not know, but I do know that the regular lines on the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans are to be destroyed by this amendment No. 1.

Now, here is another amendment that ought to attract attention and have more than four minutes' debate, and that is the amendment on page 14, section 13, amendment No. 29, striking out the words "expenditure shall be made nor liability nor." That means that this shipping board can take $50,000,000 to start with, and then when they have bought ships and sold and leased them they can go on with the proceeds so long as they do not incur liability and simply do business on money and property. There is no limit at all in this bill upon the amount of shipping that the shipping board can buy and lease.

You are creating here to-day by law the greatest monopoly that has ever been contemplated. There is only one man in this House who has a legitimate right to be for this, and that is my colleague Mr. LONDON, from the twelfth district, because it is a step toward socialism. It is just another one of these governmental operation propositions to take everything away from the individual and hand it to the Government for operation. Yet we do that with what? With 15 minutes' debate on a side. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Under the agreement, the previous question is ordered on all the amendments to this bill except those of section 9 and the forty-eighth amendment, and they will be voted on en bloc.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULBERT. Is it not possible to secure a separate vote on the first amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, under that agreement. The question is on the adoption of these amendments named.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 29.

So the amendments described were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There is an hour and a half debate on the amendment to section 9, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

Before they begin, the Chair lays before the House a letter of resignation, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., August 26, 1916.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have sent to the governor of Virginia my resignation, to take effect September 30, 1916.

I take advantage of this opportunity to thank you for the many kindnesses and courtesies which I have received from you during our long service together, and to testify to the great help you have been to me in my capacity as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Your wise counsel and intelligent cooperation have made it possible to place on the statute books laws which insure for our country peace, preparedness, and prosperity.

Sincerely, your friend, JAMES HAY.

THE SHIPPING BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, a word of explanation of the Senate amendment of section 9 may not be amiss before the debate on the section proceeds. Section 9 of the bill as it passed the House provided:

That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels heretofore or hereafter admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under the act of August 18, 1914, or under this act, and vessels, owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder (except the Panama Railroad Co.), may not engage in the coastwise trade of the United States except that such vessels may engage in trade with Alaska, Hawaii, or Porto Rico, whether or not en route to or from a foreign port, if the board finds such trade is not being adequately served by a regular line or lines of vessels.

In other words, these foreign-built ships owned by American citizens admitted to American registry or enrollment under the provisions of this bill might not engage in the coastwise trade, except with Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and then only when that trade is not being adequately served.

As amended by the Senate the bill provides:

That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed, or both registered and enrolled and licensed, as a vessel of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act, and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

While the Senate amendment broadens the scope of the bill as regards the admission of foreign-built vessels to the coastwise trade, I wish to call attention to the fact that Senate amendment 16 strikes out the provision under which foreign-built ships admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, might in the contingency named engage in the coastwise trade. There have been something over 600,000 tons of vessels admitted to American registry under the ship-registry act of August 18, 1914, but they are excluded under the provisions of the Senate amendment from engaging in the coastwise trade. They could be admitted to the coastwise trade under the provisions of section 9 as it passed the House if that trade was not being adequately served. The Senate amendment to section 5 provides, as I have already pointed out, that no vessels belonging to countries at war may be purchased by the board.

It further provides that no vessels now engaged in our foreign trade, whether under the American or under a foreign flag, may be purchased by the board.

It further provides that other vessels, unless they are 75 per cent efficient, without reference to repairs or alterations, may not be purchased by the board. Hence if this bill is enacted into law, I do not know where this board could now go to purchase a foreign vessel if they were so inclined. While apparently the Senate amendment liberalizes the law, the limitations placed upon the power of the board to purchase are such that they could not purchase a foreign vessel unless it be a vessel hereafter to be built. Of course there may be vessels that might be purchased but I do not know where they could be found.

Now I have explained the Senate amendments to section 9. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am very much opposed to amendments in this bill, 15 to 19, inclusive, for the reason that for about 100 years past our constwise trade has been preserved to American ships. Of course the ships proposed to be purchased by the Government under the terms of this bill would be American-owned ships, but they would be owned by the Government. In other words, it would take away from our American ships engaged in the coastwise trade the right to transport our goods between American ports by private ownership. There is no lack of tonnage for the transportation of goods between American ports. In the past few years in many instances, on the Lakes and on the Pacific coast, many ships have been tied to the docks for the want of tonnage to carry.

The purpose of this bill is to purchase foreign-built ships, as I take it, although it provides that those ships may be built in American shipyards, and to bring those foreign ships under the American flag and engage in the foreign trade. Ninety-odd per cent of all the goods carried to and from this country to foreign ports are now carried in ships sailing under foreign flags. Consequently $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 a year paid out by the people of the United States for carrying freight going to and from this country from and to foreign countries are paid to foreign vessel owners. That money goes abroad to stay.

I do not believe this bill will accomplish the purpose for which it is intended. But I say that the trade between American ports should be preserved to our ships now under the American flag. As an illustration of whether or not we have sufficient tonnage to carry goods between American ports, while I was on the Pacific coast last fall, the freight on lumber from the Pacific coast to Atlantic coast ports, carried in American ships—and it could not be carried in any other than American ships—was $10 per thousand feet, at the same time there was a shortage of tonnage going to foreign ports, and the freight on lumber from the Pacific coast to England was $45 per thousand feet, while under ordinary or normal conditions the freight from the Pacific coast to England on lumber is practically the same as the freight from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast in our domestic trade. I make this statement to show you that there is a shortage of foreign tonnage and not in our coastwise trade. But amendments 15 to 19, inclusive, will permit foreign ships to be purchased out of this $50,000,000 appropriation, and to engage in our coastwise trade, that has been so jealously guarded, if I am correct, since the year 1814. Many amendments have been made to the first law in that respect. The principal amendment was made in 1898. I think it would be a great and serious mistake and a great injustice to people owning vessel property under the American flag, now engaged in our coastwise trade, to permit these foreign-purchased ships to engage in our coastwise trade.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the statement just made that the rates of freight between Pacific and Atlantic ports is the same between Pacific ports and European ports furnish a strong indictment against the monopoly?

Mr. FORDNEY. There is no monopoly on the coastwise trade.

Mr. GORDON. Nobody can engage in it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; the gentleman can engage in it if he puts his money into it. Try it; why do you not?

Mr. GORDON. But no ships but American ships can engage in it.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is a trade absolutely preserved for American citizens. You propose by this bill in your appropriation of $50,000,000 to bring ships under the American flag and put them in competition with American ships.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly. Will not that cut down the rates?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; except at a loss to the Government. American vessel property is not generally prosperous.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman spoke about foreign ships engaged in coastwise trade. The gentleman understands that these ships, while they may be purchased abroad, must be owned by American citizens.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; brought under the American flag; and you bring the ships under that provision in competition with American ships sailing the American flag operating under our marine laws. You do not come into competition with any other marine laws except the American marine laws. You propose to have these Government ships compete with our American ships only. Whereas if engaged in the foreign trade they come in competition with the German, the English, the Japanese, and all foreign ships where such ships, under foreign flags, can go into any country and employ labor at any price obtainable.

I have here a statement showing the cost of operating a Japanese ship and an American ship and a ship under the English flag, and the English ships employ Chinese and Japanese common labor at $8 per month. Our laws compel ships under the American flag to employ American citizens as officers, and an American officer on board ship will not work under the American flag with foreigners unless he is paid the American scale of wages. That is what makes it difficult for an American to engage in the foreign trade. It is the difference in the cost of operating the ships.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman says that under our law we are compelled to employ American citizens as seamen on our ships.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; officers only.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Pacific Mail Steamship Co. at this time and the China Ship Co. employ Chinese crews under the seamen's law.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not the entire crew; the officers of the ship must be American citizens under our marine laws, and I will furnish you proof of this if you will give me time. They, the officers, will not sail on those ships unless all sailors are paid the American scale of wages.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman know whether the officers of the English ships have to be English citizens?

Mr. FORDNEY. They did until 1853. England changed her laws, and now permits English owners to engage any of their officers and men from any country in the world, except on subsidized lines. Such officers do not now have to be English citizens. The law is shown on page 59 of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1909. It does not matter to you where you get your labor on American ships, because your officers will not work with foreigners unless they are paid the same wages that would be paid to American citizens. I have here a statement showing the cost of operating three ships—an English ship, a Japanese ship, and an American ship—on the Pacific Ocean, and the difference in cost of labor alone between a Japanese ship and an American ship is $29,700 a year, and $23,544 a year between an English ship and an American ship, as follows: The steamer Asama Maru (Japanese), $9,540; the steamer Robert Dollar (English), $15,696; and the steamer Algoa, $39,240. All ships of about equal horsepower.

Your bill proposes to go out on the high seas and engage in foreign trade in competition with the Japanese. Let me tell you first what is necessary in order to accomplish that purpose and succeed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. First, my friend, before we can engage in foreign trade to compete with Japanese or English ships, we must permit the American citizen to go into the open markets of the world and purchase ships wherever he can purchase the cheapest. Again, you must permit him to go into any country in the world and employ his entire crew at such prices as other people under foreign flags can procure their crew. And in addition thereto you must pay the owner of the vessel such subsidy as is received by other foreign vessels from their respective Governments, and until you can do that and place our citizens on a level plane with the foreigner you never can successfully own foreign ships on the high seas under an American flag.

As an illustration I have in my possession here a scale of the wages paid to the mechanics in the Japanese shipyards, made up within the last 90 days. Owing to the shortage or great demand for that class of labor in Japan, and the activities of their shipyards, mechanics there recently have received an advance in wages of 10 per cent, and now receive 70 sen per day. Seventy sen in our money is 34.9 cents. That is what the mechanics receive in Japan.

I received the other day from one of our shipbuilding companies the average wages paid to mechanics in our shipyards, and the average wage is $17.97 per week, and at piecework these same mechanics receive $21.57 per week, as against $2.09 per week for Japanese labor. In the construction of a ship 90 per cent of the cost is labor. Remember that. When a ship in this country costs $1,000,000, $900,000 of that cost is labor, and in Japan it is about 10 per cent of our cost, or $90,000. Therefore you and I to-day could build a ship in Japan for $190,000 that would cost us, constructed in American shipyards, $1,000,000. Then you expect us to go out on the high seas and compete with the Japanese, with that difference in cost of construction, with that difference in the cost of labor; and, in addition, the Japanese Government pays a subsidy to her ships and our Governments pays none. Until you permit the American citizen to be brought on a plane with these conditions, no matter how much you appropriate to purchase or build ships, we never can successfully establish a merchant marine upon the high seas. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, for a very long period, practically from the beginning of the history of our Nation, we have restricted the vessels used in the coastwise trade to those constructed in American yards. For at least 60 years past all vessels constructed in American yards could have been constructed more cheaply in foreign yards. To-day you can build a vessel so much more cheaply in Japan and in other places in the world, that not a single vessel to be acquired under this act can possibly be constructed in American yards. So that we are passing now an act not to expend $50,000,000 in the building of American ships in American yards with American labor, but to be expended in the building of ships for Americans in foreign yards, and with foreign labor. During all of this period we have encouraged people engaged in the coastwise trade to believe that any person entering that trade must come in under the same conditions, must buy his vessel built in American yards, or build it in an American yard. You wish to take away from the men who are engaged in that trade, who have gone honestly into it, by a single act of this Congress, a large part of the money which they have invested in their business. It is not just, it is not fair that the Congress of the United States should rob its own citizens. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There is another and very important thing in connection with this. If during the past 50 years we had permitted the people engaged in the coastwise trade to purchase their vessels abroad, there would not have been at the opening of this war a single shipyard on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We would have been absolutely helpless. As it is we were placed at a great disadvantage owing to the fact that our foreign commerce was very largely carried in foreign bottoms, but we would have been infinitely worse off if in addition to that we had not had a shipyard on the Atlantic and Pacific coast in which to build a vessel. Just think of it. Owing to this policy, which we have carried on for more than a hundred years, we were so equipped that within a period of two years we could be engaged in the construction of ships in our yards to the extent of more than six times as many tons as at any time in our history, and with six times as many men as have heretofore been employed. We are entering upon a policy, if we pass this amendment submitted by the Senate, which in a very short period, say 15 years, will make us helpless, absolutely helpless, so far as the construction of merchant vessels is concerned. I beg of you to support the policy which has been the policy of our Nation for so long a period and vote against this Senate amendment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. How has this operated for the American shipping of which the gentleman is bragging?

Mr. ROWE. I have just answered the question.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no, the gentleman has not—it has driven it off the sea.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as it is now nearly 5 o'clock, I suggest that the House adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suggest we continue until 5.30 and then adjourn.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is so near I think we had better adjourn now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thought that was the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is to proceed with the discussion.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thought that was the understanding at the time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment until I make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand now? How much time has been consumed by each side.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion and yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent to insert some of the references that I make in extension of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to insert as an extension of his remarks certain references which he will make during the progress of such remarks. If there is no objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this amendment to section 9, as has been just pointed out, might be well called a provision to destroy every shipyard in the United States. The shipping bill as it went to the Senate did not contain any provision to admit foreign-built vessels to the coastwise trade except that it said that if trade with Alaska and trade with the Philippines and trade with Porto Rico was not sufficiently supplied with vessels that then the board might order that vessels acquired from foreign nations under previous acts and under this act might be so used in that special trade, but the bill expressly provided with that exception that those vessels may not engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

The section as passed by the House read as follows:

SEC. 9. That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels heretofore or hereafter admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under the act of August 18, 1914, or under this act, and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, except the Panama Railroad Co., may not engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, except that such vessels may engage in trade with Alaska, Hawaii, or Porto Rico, whether or not en route to or from a foreign port, if the board finds such trade is not being adequately served by a regular line or lines of vessels.

The Senate amendment strikes out the "not" and strikes out the exception, and states that vessels acquired under the provisions of this act may be used in the coastwise trade of the United States, without exception and without qualification.

The section as amended by the Senate reads:

SEC. 9. That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed, or both registered and enrolled and licensed, as a vessel of the United States, and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act, and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

The gentleman in charge of this bill said that there is no danger of any vessels being acquired that could be so used. This bill provides that $50,000,000 shall be at the disposal of the board, or of a corporation formed by the board, and be furnished by bonds issued by the United States. With that $50,000,000 they are empowered to buy, lease, or charter vessels in the United States or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to the United States, and that means that if vessels can be bought, chartered, or leased abroad cheaper than here they will not give preference to the United States, but will buy there.

SEC. 5. That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards, or to purchase, lease, or charter vessels, etc.

They can then lease, charter, or sell to American citizens at the same price or at a higher or lower price and those American citizens can then use those foreign vessels in the coastwise trade. This bill extends for five years——

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. When I complete this sentence—after the termination of the present war and during these five years there will be any number of ships to be bought. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DILLON. Under the terms of this Senate amendment could not the board invest the entire sum of $50,000,000 in coastwise trade vessels and exclude the foreign trade entirely.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They can, and I was going to say that is what they would do. It is no new thing to sell foreign ships to be admitted to American register for foreign trade. In the last three or four years we have had two statutes that allowed that to be done. (Panama Canal act, Aug. 24, 1912; war emergency act, Aug. 18, 1914.) But this has not been done. Vessels could be bought cheaper abroad, but we could not run them as cheaply as foreigners. As has been pointed out by my friend of the Committee on Ways and Means, American ships have to employ American seamen and they have to pay American wages and prices in repairs and they are subject to all sorts of statutes which make it more expensive to run the ships, and the result has been that, until this war broke out, we had but one line of steamers running abroad which was an American line of steamers, they having been purchased abroad.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sure the gentleman wants to be accurate. He does not mean that we are compelled to employ American seamen on our vessels?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think there is some provision about how many shall be American seamen. There used to be.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The officers must be American citizens.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Provision should be made for the employment of American seamen. But what I want to say is that, according to speeches that have been made in the Senate, it has been shown that the expense is 50 per cent more on an American ship than on a foreign ship.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman says these seamen ought to be American citizens?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the gentleman one of those who fought the seamen's bill because we required that 75 per cent of the crew should understand the officers' language?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am sorry to say that I was not here when that bill was debated.

Mr. HARDY. I understand that the gentleman is one of those who all over the country fought that provision of the bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have always been in favor of giving advantages by subsidies or discriminating duties to American ships which would enable them to employ American seamen, who could be used as recruits for our Navy in time of war.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is the gentleman in favor of requiring American citizens in crews on American ships?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes. But I do not favor it unless you can give advantages to the American ships, so that they can afford to ply the seas.

However, that is a digression. We are getting away from this business of the coastwise trade. I say that although during the past several years we were able to use foreign vessels and give them American registry, we could give it only for use in foreign trade, and the result was that such ships were not bought and were not used, because it costs anywhere from 30 per cent to 70 per cent more to run an American ship than it does to run a foreign ship, and Americans would not buy ships because they could not use them. That was so until this time of war.

Now, take the case of vessels to be bought with this $50,000,000. They could not be used in time of peace in foreign trade, because other nations could run their ships cheaper than we could. But this amendment says, "Buy ships abroad and use them, if you please, in the coastwise trade." And while that coastwise trade is run by Americans it would be an advantage to buy ships abroad and get them cheaper. The coastwise trade would be run as before, but the vessels would be furnished by foreign shipyards, and the result would be that there would not be a shipyard in America building ships. I speak without hesitation. Our ships were driven off the seas in foreign trade where we had to pay American wages in competition with foreign wages. In building ships we would be driven out of the shipbuilding business if we allowed foreign ships to be brought in without duty, without protection of any kind to take the place of American ships in our coastwise trade.

That coastwise trade is no small thing. If I remember the figures right, there are 6,000,000 tons engaged in the coastwise trade out of the 45,000,000 tons which make up the world's commerce. Our foreign trade was nothing. Our coastwise trade made us the second maritime Nation. The 6,000,000 tons used in our coastwise trade would be gradually replaced by ships built abroad.

Somehow I do not feel that the Senate could have realized what it was doing by this amendment. It is not now defended by the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge. His only answer is that this board with $50,000,000 capital could not buy ships. Of course, they can not do it now, but they could do it the moment the war was over, and they have five years from that time in which to do it. Will our shipyards go on building ships with that threat hanging over them? Will Americans continue to have ships built here with that threat hanging over them?

Every shipbuilder in the United States is told that as soon as this war comes to an end, be it in one month or in one year or in two years, his yard will be valueless, because a corporation with $50,000,000 will buy ships wherever it can get them and will put them in the coastwise trade. That is the only place where the shipbuilder had a market for his ships thus far, and in which he was protected. This amendment is an absolute change in the whole policy of the United States up to this time.

I say, as I said before, that it is not defended. But it ought not to be agreed to by this House. Under the section as it passed the House it was dangerous enough to allow a political board to say whether foreign-built ships should ply between ports in the United States and ports in Alaska and Porto Rico under the suggestion that the trade was not adequately served. That was dangerous enough, but through that little opening there has come along a Senate amendment which simply strikes out all protective provision for our coastwise trade and opens it entirely and completely from one end to the other to foreign-built ships.

Now, I shall try, if I can find it, to insert here at the conclusion of my remarks a statement of Thomas Jefferson, made when he was Secretary of State, before he became President, to the effect that shipyards should be encouraged, because they train artisans and form the basis of a kind of enterprise and business which is essential to this country both in peace and in war. It is upon that ground that I oppose this amendment of the Senate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Jefferson said, December 16, 1793:

Our navigation involves still higher considerations. As a branch of industry it is valuable, but as a resource of defense essential. * * * The position and circumstances of the United States leave them nothing to fear on their land board and nothing to desire beyond their present rights. But on their seaboard they are open to injury, and they have there, too, a commerce that must be protected. This can only be done by possessing a respectable body of citizen seamen and of artists and establishments in readiness for shipbuilding. * * *

In 1794 he says:

To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards, is to form magazines, to multiply useful hands, to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war. * * * For a navigating people to purchase its marine afloat would be a strange speculation, as the marine would always be dependent on the merchants furnishing them. Placing as a reserve with a foreign nation or in a foreign shipyard the carpenters, blacksmiths, calkers, sailmakers, and the vessels of a nation would be a singular commercial combination. We must, therefore, build them for ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and at the expiration of that time I shall move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, the shipping of this country, as I have had occasion to say here before, is the least understood of all public questions by the general masses of our people. We are the only Nation on earth that absolutely puts a ban upon its citizens buying a ship anywhere else except from its own shipbuilders. According to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] if this Senate amendment goes into effect Japan will build all the ships bought by the United States under this bill. And according to their argument, because Japan has the cheapest wages on earth, Japan ought to build all the ships for all the nations of the world that permit their citizens to buy ships abroad.

Now, the truth is that of all the great nations of the earth England perhaps has the highest wage scale of any nation except the United States. Yet England builds ships for every nation of the earth that will permit her citizens to buy from England. The argument of these gentlemen therefore must be wrong, since England permits and has permitted her citizens for over 50 years to buy ships anywhere they please and use them in all her trade, and yet neither Germany, France, Spain, Italy, Japan, nor any other cheaper-labor nations has ever built ships to any considerable extent for the British merchant marine.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HARDY. Very briefly.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Would not that be possible because England had been in the business so long that she had established a standard of workmanship which we have not?

Mr. HARDY. I shall try to answer that very question. England does it because by the magnitude of her business and by her enterprise and the ingenuity of her people she excels the world in the manufacture of ships and the material that goes into them.

Now, we have gradually caught up with and passed England in the manufacture of shipbuilding materials, and with our high wage scale to-day we produce the cheapest and best steel and iron in the world; and every piece of material that goes into the building of a ship—wood, iron, or steel—is furnished cheaper here to-day than anywhere else on earth; and under the processes and stimulus of the new building that will come on, with the Deisel engine and the utilization of oil as fuel and the standardizing of ships in our great steel plants, which can manufacture wholesale all the parts to be assembled in our shipyards, the United States can build cargo vessels more cheaply than England can. We are building high hopes of entering the markets of the world in open competition in foreign lands with our machinery, our steel, our iron products; in fact, with all the products of our factories, as well as of our mines and fields—why not enter the market with our ships and build ships for the world? One thing is certain—that is, we will never build cheap ships so long as we put a premium on ships built here by excluding all ships built elsewhere from our coastwise trade, the greatest of all coastwise trades.

The shipyards of America to-day are crowded with orders both for our own people and for shipowners from abroad, who desire to buy from us. We are building in competition with the world to-day, and if we but put behind our shipbuilders the spur of necessity, the knowledge that they must compete for their salvation, there is absolutely no question that in this new evolution in ships and shipping that is at hand when the old coal burners which use a great deal of their space for coal bunkers will be replaced by oil-burning ships, whose crews will be reduced from 40 to 60 per cent, on which fuel oil will be carried as ballast where water ballast was carried before, our shipbuilders, if they have it to do, will standardize their ships and beat the world, as they once did in the glorious days gone by, in the building of efficient and economical ships.

Now, why should we cling, as the gentleman from New York [Mr ROWE] says, to a custom and a habit and a law that has forbidden Americans to go abroad and buy ships in competition with American builders? The result of that policy has been that, from year to year and from decade to decade, the American flag has vanished more and more completely from the seas.

But this bill does not go to the extent of allowing the American citizen to buy his ship where he can get it cheapest. It only permits the Government to do it. It permits the $50,000,000 worth of ships that are to be bought by the Government under this bill to be bought where the Government sees proper to buy them. And why? If it were known to-morrow that the Government had $50,000,000 to put in ships and our shipbuilders were told that the Government must buy from them or else buy ships that would not have the privileges of the American flag, what would it mean? It would mean that the American shipbuilder, knowing that his ship is more valuable than the ship just like it built abroad, would put up the price of his ship. Even if you had two shipyards in America and the ships of one of them could engage in our coastwise trade while the ships of the other could not, would not the ships of the one sell for more than those of the other? What does that mean? That means that the Government of the United States, if it buys ships built here, without this Senate amendment, must necessarily pay more for them than it would if it bought abroad, not because the home ship cost more but because it had more privileges. If to-morrow you were going to buy one of two ships, and one of them had the privilege of engaging in our coastwise trade and the other had not the privilege of engaging in it, you would buy the ship that had that privilege if you had to pay 10, 15, 20, or 50 per cent more. And do you not think that the seller of those ships knows where he has you? If he had two ships to sell, one of which had the privilege of our coastwise trade and the other had not, would he not ask more for the one with the privilege than the one without it?

All that is plain common sense. By our law as it stands to-day we force the price of American-built ships up above the price of foreign-built ships. By the Senate amendment under discussion the Government is permitted to buy $50,000,000 worth of ships without paying an artificially raised price.

What does the law we have to-day mean except that every ship that flies the American flag, with the privilege of engaging in American trade, coastwise, must cost from 40 to 50 per cent more than the same kind of ship without that privilege.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if I am to understand that he believes in spending the $50,000,000 that will come out of the sale of the Panama bonds in having ships built abroad by foreign labor in foreign yards?

Mr. HARDY. I believe this, Mr. Speaker, that to-day the American shipbuilders can build and are building the cheapest ships in the world, and I believe that if the American Government starts out with an open field asking the shipbuilders of the world to build $50,000,000 worth of vessels, every ship would go to American shipyards. We built cheaper and better ships than England before 1860; we can do it now.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. But, I ask the gentleman, how in this bill, if it is not given——

Mr. HARDY. I can not yield any further. I would like to, but I have not the time. This is my contention, and it is the contention of experts. They say that the result of this bill will be to cause our builders to standardize our shipbuilding and give us the advantage of building a vast number of ships that England has enjoyed during the last half century. They say England has built cheaper ships because she standardized. We will standardize; we will build ships in the great steel works; build all the pieces there and assemble them on the coast or at the shipyards, where they are to be used. The testimony of Secretary Redfield and others, given in the report on this bill by the House committee on this question is most interesting and convincing.

That is not all. I want to call attention to the fact that most gentlemen on that side seem to think that we have a free-ship law on our statute books, which does not induce foreign ships to come under our flag, because we have to employ American seamen against Asiatic seamen of other nations. Now, the same law applies here to seamen that applies in England.

Our shipowners can employ every member of the crew Asiatic except the officers, and I am not sure, but I am almost sure, that the English law requires English officers on English ships. But whether it is the law or not, the fact is that on the English ships they have English officers, and they have a great many English in their crews. There is nothing to prevent the American shipowner shipping Asiatic crews or crews of any other nationality, just as the English shipowner may.

What does this bill do? The amendment simply says that we will no longer give the shipbuilders a club which they may hold over the head of the American Government to compel it to buy American-built ships at a premium of 25 or 50 per cent over its value. Now, it is "stand and deliver—if you do not buy my ship, you can't carry goods from one part of this country to the other." Take away that club and the American Government will buy these ships where they please and the American shipbuilders will build the ships, because they will build them the cheapest.

Now, as to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, I want to answer one suggestion. He says that for us to engage in the foreign trade there must be three things. He said we must get ships as cheap as they are obtained elsewhere. That is true. He says we must have as cheap labor as elsewhere, and that is true. Then he says that we must pay the same subsidy that our competitor nations pay. I want to tell him that the greatest maritime nation on earth, Great Britain, has not for 50 years given a subsidy of any kind to cargo vessels. She carries the freight of the world and carries it without subsidy or subvention or aid. [Applause.]

Now, I will incorporate in my remarks, or some remarks that I may make later, an extract from a book recently written by Mr. Platt, who is an official of the Government, who simply gives the facts, and he says that England has never yet subsidized her cargo ships. And yet we are asked to subsidize cargo vessels and meet the subsidies of other nations. How will we meet the unsubsidized ships of Great Britain? We can only meet Great Britain by having as good or better and as cheap or cheaper ships. What we want to do in so far as this bill is concerned, in so far as these ships are concerned, is to give the United States, which taxes the people in order to procure the money to buy ships, the right to buy the best ships possible for the money.

We can not buy ships now under the flag of any nation at war. The vessels we buy will have to be built; they will be built in the United States shipyards rather than elsewhere, because our shipyards are now building ships to sell abroad.

We propose to buy $50,000,000 worth of them at present prices, less than 500,000 tons, and England has about 30,000,000 tons and we have in the coastwise about 6,000,000 tons. We may buy under this bill one-twelfth of our coastwise tonnage, and yet the great fear is expressed that the American Government by doing this will destroy our shipbuilding. The only foreign-built ships that are given the privilege of our coastwise trade under this bill are the ships bought by this American Government with the taxes of the people. The great fear is that some of these ships may be built abroad and engage in the coastwise trade. Would it not be a shame for a great ship, owned by the Government of the United States, leaving the port of New York empty for the port of Galveston, where she expected to reload for the port of Liverpool, to be proscribed from carrying our own freight to our own people? Would it not be a shame that our own carrying vehicle must go empty or in ballast at an expense, whereas if we let it carry our own freight, from our own port to our own port, she can earn something, and not only earn something, but help reduce the freight rates to the great consuming public of this country. It seems to me that the whole question hinges on that one thing. Shall the Government of the United States buy ships where she pleases and then let her own ships carry the products of her own people from one of her own ports to another of her own ports, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman believe that this bill will do more to build up the shipbuilding industry in the United States than any measure that has been passed in a decade?

Mr. HARDY. I do. If the United States is to have a great and a prosperous shipbuilding industry, that shipbuilding industry must be like the other great manufacturing plants of the United States.

It must have the ability to take its life in its hands and fight its way through competition with similar industries all over the world. If you make the shipbuilding industry of the United States under this bill compete for the building of these vessels, they will build them as cheaply as they can be built elsewhere, and they will standardize their construction of ships, they will begin, or rather continue, to build vessels for the world, and under such skill and enterprise as that which conducts the Steel Trust, under such enterprise as has sent our shoes from Massachusetts all over the world—under that same kind of enterprise, with the cheapest material, with the most skilled labor, with the best organized industry, our ships will be built, to be sold to the nations of the earth, and our flag will float on every sea. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The time must come when our ships will sail the seas, and that time will never come through the narrow, provincial policy of restricting our ship purchasers to the buying in a closed market of the ships with which they must compete for the trade of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, a new era is dawning. Economists talk of preparing now to meet the commercial warfare that will mark the efforts of the nations of Europe to regain their footing in trade. We talk of opening up new avenues of trade and capturing the trade of this and that country, of bettering our banking facilities, and adapting our goods to the wants of the nations we trade with; but the shortsighted, yea, the blind, adherents of the old shipbuilders' exclusive privilege, ignore the fact that one of the great essentials to the successful expansion of our commerce is that our merchants and manufacturers must have as cheap transportation as their competitors, and they can not have that without free ships. This bill will not give them to us in any great number, but it will teach us how to get them.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a certain article.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 26 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Missouri 10 minutes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a typographical error which should be corrected on page 36, line 1. The word "of" where it occurs the second time in the line before the word "employment" should be "or." I ask that that correction be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to without objection. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, line 23, after the word "thereof," the committee proposes to insert a semicolon and the following words:

Not containing such sweet wines, three-fourths of 1 cent on each pint or fraction thereof.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this matter came up just before the recess last night. I desire to state in a sentence my objection to the amendment.

It refers to cordials which are made out of alcohol beverages, which are taxed $1.10 per gallon. We have grape brandy, and so forth, which is taxed under the bill at 55 cents a gallon. This tax of three-fourths of 1 cent on each half pint or fraction thereof is a supertax over and above the $1.10 a gallon.

My thought is that so long as we have some of these liquors taxed below $1.10 it is hardly a fair proposition to tax others by this supertax who are now already taxed $1.10.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not know what action the committee is going to take on the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio, but I beg to submit that the Democratic caucus approved of the measure as reported, and the Senator from Ohio is endeavoring without an appeal to the caucus to change the phraseology of the bill in a vital matter.

I am new to the deliberations of the Senate. Yesterday I made an argument by which I endeavored to show that the action of the caucus was wrong, and whereas in the caucus or so-called conference I had the assurance of the support of nine Senators who were polite enough after the vote was taken yesterday to inform me that they could not support their own views in view of the fact that they had attended the caucus.

As for myself, I understood that I was released because the caucus never undertakes to bind a Senator who is pledged to his own constituents. Therefore, I had no compunction; but it pains me to believe as a new Member of this body that Senators will admit that a certain contention is right but that they can not support it because they are overborne by the action of a mere majority of a majority—a mere fraction of the whole Senate.

If it is not revealing the secrets of my prison house, however, I desire to say that when the Senator from New Jersey proposed in the caucus an agreement to the report of the committee it was lost. There was a tie vote, and therefore the recommendation of the Finance Committee was disallowed. Instead of accepting that as the action of the caucus, the gentlemen served notice that there was no quorum present, and it went over to another evening when a mere quorum was present and an agreement was made with the recommendation of the committee under forced draft.

Now, I merely desire to say this for the RECORD by way of a protest, that nothing so undemocratic could possibly occur as the composition of a body by which the voice of the majority is suppressed by the influence of the minority. A mere majority of a minority under a caucus rule is enabled to control the deliberations, and I might be able to say in this case that the decision of that body was effected by the determination of only two men in the ultimate analysis.

A California satirist of the first class, Ambrose Bierce, once said:

> The caucus meets—the devil's own device
> For purchasing two souls at one soul's price.

But what I protest against is that Senators should come to me in an apologetic way and say that I am right and that they deliberately voted wrong.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. I refuse to be interrupted until I finish my speech. I will conclude immediately.

Mr. REED. All right.

Mr. PHELAN. I can not see how they can reconcile themselves to their conscience. I can not see how they can, in a matter which involves no party policy, but a mere matter of dollars and cents and revenue, consider themselves bound to vote against their convictions. It was an American poet—and a good American he—who said:

> They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak,
> They are slaves who will not choose
> Hatred, scoffing, and abuse
> Rather than in silence shrink
> From the truth they needs must think,
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three.

And two or three seemed to represent the minority vote when the roll was called on yesterday afternoon.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the Senator from California seems to be surprised at the light vote which his propositions received yesterday, and I was somewhat surprised at it myself. I advised one or two Members on this side of the House to vote with the Senator so that he might have some comfort. If the Senator wants an explanation of the reason why it received such a light vote I will give it to him, as far as my judgment is concerned. It was because of the unfair manner in which he conducted his fight for the amendment, because he persistently, over and over again and with full knowledge, read a letter to this body stating that that letter was directed against an amendment which was then pending before the Senate when he was informed on the floor of this body that the letter was directed to an entirely different amendment. In my opinion, if the Senator wants my opinion, it was because of the unfairness of the method he pursued yesterday that his proposition received the light vote it did.

Mr. PHELAN. I am glad to have the Senator's explanation, which does not go to the point I make. However, I still reaffirm that the Agricultural Department is in favor——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HUGHES. I have not yielded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HUGHES. I decline to yield.

Mr. PHELAN. I will seek an opportunity in my own time immediately to make my statement.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not the slightest doubt of that. Now, Mr. President, I will ask if there is any motion pending with reference to this paragraph?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The pending amendment is on page 95, in the clause beginning in line 18.

Mr. HUGHES. The committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask for a vote on the committee amendment.

I will state, however, that the difference between the one-and-a-half cent tax and the three-fourths of 1 cent tax is necessitated by the difference in the tax on grape brandy and grain alcohol. Grape brandy, under the law at present and under the proposed law, will pay a tax of but 55 cents per gallon. Some liqueurs and cordials are made from or fortified with grape brandy; others are made from grain alcohol. The committee thought it was only fair to those manufacturers who made their cordials from grain alcohol and paid a tax of $1.10 a gallon that the supertax laid upon their packages should be as much lower as the difference between the tax laid upon the grape brandy and the grain alcohol would justify. For that reason a tax of 1½ cents on one-half pints or fraction thereof is laid upon liqueurs or cordials made from grape brandy and a tax of three-fourths of a cent on liqueurs or cordials made from grain alcohol.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand that the Senator from New Jersey has accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]?

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Ohio has offered no amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has offered no amendment. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I read in this morning's Washington Post an editorial, which is so apropos and forcible and, in my opinion, convincing, that I ask leave to insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there is objection to my doing so, of course I shall read it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object. I have no particular objection to this particular editorial, but I do object to encumbering the RECORD with utterances of this kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will read it. I wanted to have it inserted without reading, because it would save the time of the Senate, but I can read it just as well.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator from Mississippi can very readily save the time of the Senate by allowing the consideration of the pending bill to proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, of course, but I am saving the time in this way, too.

The article is headed "A radical program to compel industrial peace," and is as follows:

A RADICAL PROGRAM TO COMPEL INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

The legislative action proposed by President Wilson to meet the industrial crisis is so radical that it caused astonishment, if not [illegible] when its outlines were first disclosed.

That neither the railroads nor their employees will relish this dose is a foregone conclusion. If only those parties to the dispute were concerned, Mr. Wilson's proposal would be regarded as a grave political mistake, as both sides are likely to antagonize his program.

But the third party to this great dispute—the public—will soon agree that desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and the people will uphold the President and Congress in enacting legislation that will put an end to the menace of country-wide strikes.

The issue may as well be faced now as later. It was bound to confront the American people. No halfway measures will serve. They have been tried and found wanting.

The railroads are a mighty force, and so are the brotherhoods. But neither can be permitted to dictate to the people. Neither can determine for itself when there shall be war in the industrial world. Both of them must submit to laws framed for the peace and safety of the people.

When an eight-hour day is established by law the railroad workers will have no possible excuse for refusing to submit their demands to arbitration, whatever these demands may be. It is proper and necessary that the United States should now provide that railroad wage disputes shall be submitted to investigation and that strikes or lockouts pending such investigation shall be made unlawful.

It is necessary that the question of rates should be investigated, to the end that justice should be done to the railroads. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be enlarged, if necessary, to enable it to make this investigation promptly and thoroughly.

It is inevitable that the executive power of the United States should be authorized to take over the railroads in times of national peril. No nation on earth can escape such action when its safety or its existence is endangered. The nations now at war are using their railroad facilities for military purposes as a matter of course. Even if Congress should refuse to adopt this portion of the President's program at this time, it would necessarily adopt it in case of civil or foreign war. As a measure of national defense, the law should be enacted now, when it can be calmly considered.

Railroads, unions, and shippers may be expected to object to particular portions of the President's suggestions. But the more they are studied the more they are likely to commend themselves to the people. They constitute a rounded-out, thoroughgoing, effective plan that insures fair treatment of employees and justice to the railroads and prevents them both from paralyzing the country.

Unless Congress is willing that the country should be plunged into industrial war it will adopt the program outlined, with such changes as the wisdom of the lawmakers may suggest. The President has shown his moral courage by facing the issue bravely and daring the resentment of powerful capital and labor interests for the sake of preventing disaster to the public. He has given Congress a splendid example of political courage. The public welfare is now in the hands of Congress. If it acts with the courage that President Wilson has displayed, all will be well. The Nation will have asserted its resolute purpose to do justice in labor quarrels and to lay its heavy hand upon disputants who in passion and for self-interest would sacrifice the public.

That is all I have to say, Mr. President.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has undertaken to explain the few votes which were cast on the amendment submitted by me on yesterday on the ground that I had misrepresented what was contained in a communication from the Agricultural Department. I still persist in saying that the Agricultural Department is in favor of the amendment which I submitted and is not in favor of the amendment which was adopted, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from New Jersey that he on yesterday visited the department and had assurances of their support. I learn over the telephone that Dr. Emerson, whom the Senator quoted, did not give that assurance. In the absence of the Secretary, Mr. Houston, the subordinates have undertaken, if at all, certainly without authority, to make representations contrary to the views of the Secretary of Agriculture; but even then they disavow having given any approval to the measure proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. Therefore I desire to acquit myself, if the Senator does not acquit me of making any misrepresentation to the Senate. I consider that a very grievous charge. I should think there should be some means within the power of the Senate to discipline a Member who would make misrepresentations on this floor. I still persist in the belief that so just is the proposition which was advanced yesterday that it will be remedied in the conference, which is the court of last appeal.

There is, however, another reason why there were so few votes cast in favor of the amendment which I proposed on yesterday, and that is because it is distasteful to what has come to be known as the "Whisky Trust," one of the most powerful trusts in this country, which has its agents infesting the halls of Congress trying to influence legislation in order to make a more extensive market for its wares. It has alcohol for sale, and it does not want alcohol to enter in any quantity for fortification into the sweet wines of California without paying the full commercial brandy tax. It does not want the wines of the country to be of that standard of perfection that will drive, as ultimately they may drive, John Barleycorn out of the market. They enter into every State in this country fighting the movement for temperance. In my State they are busy to-day. It is only because of the enormous investment in the wine industry in California that prohibition has not been imposed upon that Commonwealth.

But I venture to predict that if the wine industry is destroyed prohibition will prevail in California. If there is no way of dissociating wine from whisky, then whisky and wine shall fall together; but if we may dissociate wine from whisky we will promote the cause of temperance by giving the people an opportunity to indulge in a beverage at once wholesome and exhilarating.

Mr. Hilliard E. Welch, banker and grape grower, of Lodi, Cal., came here as the representative of the California Viticultural Commission, a body established by law to look after the legitimate interests of the wine growers, and I beg to say with pain that this man, with credentials—which I published in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings—from the California commission, although I made application in his behalf, was denied a hearing by the Committee on Finance. The members of that committee said that they had had sufficient hearings, but that he might file a brief if he were so disposed. As that was the only means of reaching the committee, the brief was filed, but I submit that the difference between a filed brief and an oral hearing is very great, because there is no assurance that a brief is ever read; and it was practically a denial of justice.

This gentleman, who is of the highest repute, made a statement to me that the attorney of the Whisky Trust came to him with a view of making a trade or a bargain by which it would appear to the Senate that there was practical unanimity of action on the part of both the wine men and the whisky men. You can see, Mr. President, the cunning device of tying up the wine interests and the whisky interests together. I asked Mr. Welch if he was prepared to make an affidavit to that effect, and here is the affidavit, which I will read, as it is brief:

Hilliard E. Welch, of Lodi, Cal., being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

"On the afternoon of August 1 1916, in response to a telegram from Mr. E. M. Sheehan, secretary of the California Viticultural Commission, I called on Mr Levi Cook, an attorney, at his office in room 623, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C., and talked with him concerning an amendment to the revenue bill (H. R. 16763) which he had advocated before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, which amendment levied a tax of 24 cents a gallon on 'liqueurs, cordials, compounds, or preparations containing wines fortified under this act.'

"On the morning of August 2, 1916, in company with Mr. F. Albertz, of Cloverdale, Cal., I again called on Mr. Cook and explained to him that those manufacturers who under the emergency revenue act had been accorded the privilege of using wines in the manufacture of cordials, liqueurs, and compounds without paying the stamp tax were insistent that the same privilege be extended in the pending bill; that I had written each one of these complainants that I could see no good reason, should the Government contemplate a tax on cordials, why a cordial made from wine should be exempted from any tax. I called his attention to the fact that his amendment would impose a tax of 24 cents a gallon where wine was used as the base, eliminating from the same tax those preparations having a base of distilled spirits; that his request and the request of the manufacturers using wine as a base were in direct opposition, and suggested to him that he should call the opposing factions of cordial makers together and have them settle their differences without bringing me into it; that I was interested in the tax on wines alone, and would not take either side of this controversy.

He then stated to me that he was the attorney for the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association; that his people were, in strict compliance with Federal laws, contributing to the campaign against prohibition in California; that should I refuse to go with him to Senator THOMAS in support of his amendment, those contributions might be stopped, and the wine men might get a tax of $1.10 on brandy used in the fortification of sweet wine when the bill was reported to the Senate. I refused to go with him to Senator THOMAS as he requested.

HILLIARD E. WELCH.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

F. Albertz, of Cloverdale, Cal., being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

"I was present with Mr. Hilliard E. Welch, of Lodi, Cal., the maker of the above affidavit, in the office of Mr. Levi Cook on the morning of August 2, 1916, and heard the conversation between them, and know that the statements by Mr. Welch in his above affidavit are true, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

"F. ALBERTZ."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Personally appeared before me, M. W. Pickering, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, Hilliard E. Welch, of Lodi, Cal., and F. Albertz, of Cloverdale, Cal., who, being first duly sworn, testified that the above statements are true to the best of their knowledge and belief. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of August, 1916.

[SEAL.] M. W. PICKERING,
Notary Public.

My commission expires September 10, 1919.

I have had this affidavit for many days in my possession, but I did not desire to introduce the subject on the floor of the Senate. It was sufficient for me to know that the Whisky Trust was working against the wine interests, and I was curious to see what the outcome would be.

Now, I am told that the reason why the amendment failed on yesterday was because of misrepresentations concerning the innocent letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. I feel, therefore, justified in saying that I believe one of the elements which entered into the result of yesterday was the influence of the Whisky Trust; and I think that this evidence is quite sufficient. I know that great interests have a right to be heard, and possibly from their point of view they may justify themselves; but I beg to submit that in my advocacy of the amendment I had only one thing in view and that was the public interest.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 96, line 11, after the word "stamps," to strike out "nor to medicinal compounds prepared by retail druggists on physician's prescription, where the quantity of such compound does not exceed one-half pint," so as to make the clause read:

The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to wines, liqueurs, or cordials on which the tax imposed by the act approved October 22, 1914, entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," and the joint resolution approved December 17, 1915, entitled "Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes,' approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916," has been paid by stamp.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 21, after the word "section," to insert:

Provided, That the collection of the tax herein prescribed on imported still wines, including vermouth, and sparkling wines, including champagne and on imported liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds, may be made within the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by assessment instead of by stamps.

So as to make the clause read:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to have prepared suitable revenue stamps denoting the payment of the taxes imposed by this section; and all provisions of law relating to internal-revenue stamps, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to the taxes imposed by this section: Provided, That the collection of the tax herein prescribed on imported still wines, including vermouth, and sparkling wines, including champagne, and on imported liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds, may be made within the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by assessment instead of by stamps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 10, after the word "cordials," to strike out "preparations"; in the same line, before the word "compounds," to insert "similar"; in line 14, before the word "spirits" to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "spirits," to insert "liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds"; and in line 16, after the words "United States," to insert:

But the provisions of this subdivision of this section and the provision of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, relating to rectification, or other internal-revenue laws of the United States, shall not be held to apply to or prohibit the mixing or blending of wines subject to tax under the provisions of this section with each other or with other wines for the sole purpose of perfecting such wines according to commercial standards: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting the use of tax-paid grain or other ethyl alcohol in the fortification of sweet wines as defined in section 53 of this act.

So as to make the clause read:

(f) That any person who shall evade or attempt to evade the tax imposed by this section, or any requirement of this section or regulation issued pursuant thereof, or who shall, otherwise than provided in this section, recover or attempt to recover any spirits from domestic or imported wine, or who shall rectify, mix, or compound with distilled spirits any domestic wines, other than in the manufacture of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds taxable under the provisions of this section, shall, on conviction, be punished for each such offense by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, and all wines, spirits, liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds as to which such violation occurs shall be forfeited to the United States. But the provision of this subdivision of this section and the provision of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, relating to rectification, or other internal-revenue laws of the United States, shall not be held to apply to or prohibit the mixing or blending of wines subject to tax under the provisions of this section with each other or with other wines for the sole purpose of perfecting such wines according to commercial standards: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting the use of tax-paid grain or other ethyl alcohol in the fortification of sweet wines as defined in section 53 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 4, on page 99.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer, to be known as subdivision "(i)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the bill, on page 99, after line 4, subdivision "(i)," to read as follows:

That the second paragraph of section 3264, Revised Statutes of the United States of America, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879, and as further amended by the act of Congress approved June 22, 1910, be amended so as to read as follows:

"In all surveys 45 gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than 1 bushel of grain, and 7 gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from molasses shall represent not less than 1 gallon of molasses, except in distilleries operated on the sour-mash principle, in which distilleries 60 gallons of beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than 1 bushel of grain, and except that in distilleries where the filtration-aeration process is used, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that is, where the mash after it leaves the mash tub is passed through a filtering machine before it is run into the fermenting tub, and only the filtered liquor passes into the fermenting tub, there shall hereafter be no limitation upon the number of gallons of water which may be used in the process of mashing or filtration for fermentation; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to protect the revenue, shall be authorized to prescribe by regulation, to be made by him, such character of survey as he may find suitable for distilleries using such filtration-aeration process. The provisions hereof relating to filtration-aeration process shall apply only to sweet-mash distilleries."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Beckham	Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Husting	Norris	Smith, Md.
Bryan	James	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones	Overman	Smoot
Chilton	Kenyon	Penrose	Sterling
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Phelan	Stone
Culberson	Lane	Pittman	Thomas
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thompson
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Underwood
Dillingham	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman
Fletcher	McCumber	Robinson	Wadsworth
Gallinger	McLean	Shafroth	Weeks
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Williams

Mr. KERN. I desire again to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART], who is detained on account of important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PROPOSED RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the subject which I have announced, it might be inferred that I have risen to discuss the message of the President of the United States delivered yesterday to the two Houses of Congress. It is not so. The notes I have before me were prepared a week or more ago, and have no relation whatever to the views expressed by the Chief Executive, save that they touch the same general subject.

During the last two months I have received a great many letters and telegrams relating to the threatened strike of certain railway employees, all of them based upon the assumption that something practical and effectual should be done by Congress to prevent the disaster which a general suspension of traffic throughout the United States would inevitably inflict upon a vast number of people who have no direct interest in the controversy, and who are absolutely powerless to avert the catastrophe.

During the same period I have read many editorials published in the newspapers, which day after day sit in judgment upon Congress, and which, with a fine sense of irresponsibility, express opinions upon this subject, as upon many others, without knowledge and render judgment without even the pretense of inquiry.

I am not so much concerned about the utterances of individual newspaper writers, but I am deeply anxious about the views held by millions of honest men who want their Government to be both just and efficient, and who rely upon it for protection against forces over which they have no control except through the Constitution and laws of the land.

My purpose in the task I am about to perform is not to advocate any policy, nor to defend the course proposed by either party to the present dispute between railway managers and railway operatives. The real issue between them is fundamental, and touches the very foundation of organized society. My object is to turn the thought of the people, and possibly of Members of Congress as well, from abstract into concrete channels. I desire to point out some of the things which Congress can do which may have some effect upon like situations in the future, and to refer to some of the things which have been suggested, but which Congress can not do, in order that the thinking men of America may study and reflect upon the specific legislation within the power of Congress; all to the end that they may reach a definite conclusion, and that Congress may know whether these people really desire it to take the action which is necessary if the dangers incident to a strike are to be averted. They ought clearly to apprehend the consequences of such further legislation and to know whether the concert of workingmen for the betterment of the conditions under which they labor—a concert which alone makes a serious strike possible—should be prohibited or qualified.

Upon this voyage in search of legislation there are, as upon nearly every other of importance, a Scylla and a Charybdis, and it will be interesting to consider how far we can steer away from the one without encountering the perils of the other.

There is one preliminary observation which I feel compelled to make:

I do not underestimate the effect of the general strike, which seems to be imminent. The losses, hardships, and suffering which it will entail can not be exaggerated, and no man can look forward to them without shrinking from the dire consequences which must ensue. My discussion has no especial application to the immediate situation, for I shall deal with all such interruptions of transportation and my suggestions will, in the main, be pertinent to all like disturbances affecting commerce among the States, although I shall look at the question from the standpoint of transportation by common carriers.

It is well known that aside from incidental regulations which are possible under the power of Congress to tax, and to establish post offices and post roads, the laws of the United States which affect transportation of both passengers and property are and must be founded upon the authority of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, and it is this clause of the Constitution which I shall have in mind in the development of the subject.

The right of Congress, judged by practice, to merely investigate is substantially without limit. The right is often abused, for there is no true basis for investigation unless it is believed that legislation can follow inquiry, and ordinarily examination is worse than useless unless it can be followed by action. However that may be, it must be understood that I am not reviewing the authority of Congress to make any investigations which it may seem wise to initiate. I invite attention: First, to the widespread feeling that Congress should long ago have in some way provided, and having failed to do so should now provide, for the compulsory arbitration of disputes between employers and employees. These words are so commonly used that it may be rather startling when I say that in the full sense of the term there is no such thing as compulsory arbitration—never has been and never will be.

I am speaking now, of course, of a free country and free men. It may be that men can be coerced by indirect methods into an agreement for arbitration or may be deprived of the power to resist successfully the judgment of a Government tribunal; but compulsory arbitration, which, of course, includes the execution of the award, is impossible in any country whose organic law contains such declarations as are found in the fifth and the thirteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

I do not doubt that Congress could create a tribunal, giving it any name that might seem desirable—court of arbitration, commerce court, industrial commission—and confer upon it jurisdiction to seize upon a controversy between a collective body of railway operatives, such, for instance, as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and the railway company which employs the engineers, call the parties in dispute before it, take evidence, and render judgment. If this procedure is what the people have in mind when they speak of compulsory arbitration, the plan is, I believe, well within the constitutional authority of Congress, assuming, of course, that the dispute affects commerce with foreign nations or among the States.

If, however, I understand the thought in the minds of men who speak or write of compulsory arbitration, it means vastly more than the proceeding I have described. It further means that the tribunal which renders the judgment must be clothed with power to enforce it, and if the judgment is to be always heeded there must be a method of enforcement. To enforce it in the instance I have suggested, without mentioning the railway company, it would be necessary to compel the members of the brotherhood to work for the wages and under the conditions prescribed in the judgment. Otherwise there might come the strike, the disturbance, and the disaster which we now confront.

Here is the obstacle that can not be overcome. The attempt to make men work against their will is involuntary servitude, forbidden not only by the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution but by the natural instinct of free men in a free country. Compulsory arbitration, in the complete sense, is a myth, a mere idle dream, for in the end the voluntary action of the men involved is absolutely necessary. It is only possible under pure socialism in which all the relations of the human being are determined by the State, or in a pure monarchy in which industrial workers are subjects to the same laws which we apply to our military establishments, to those who are confined for crime, and formerly applied to sailors. If we are ready to treat the man who refuses to work, or leaves his work because he is dissatisfied with compensation and conditions, as we treat the deserting soldier and the criminal, compulsory arbitration may become possible. Until that time comes, and I pray that it may be a long time coming, we may as well dismiss the suggestion of so-called compulsory arbitration in labor controversies.

Mr. President I am well aware that these suggestions are trite and well known to the Members of the Senate. I am trying, if I can, to correct what I believe to be a false opinion throughout the country held by many good people who have not carefully examined the subject.

I know it will be said that the experiment has been tried. It is quite true that there are statutes in some of the States which have been termed compulsory arbitration laws, but there is no State in the Union which undertakes to compel a free workingman to labor, much less to labor for any given compensation or under prescribed conditions. If I dared to take the time, I would be glad to review some of these laws, but I forbear to do more than to invite a study of their provisions.

The acts of Great Britain and of the Dominion of Canada respecting the disputes between employers and employees have sometimes been cited as instances of wise legislation upon this subject. I pause only long enough to assert that, while these laws may be more effective in composing labor disputes than the Erdman Act was, or the Newlands Act is, and while in the Canadian law there is more compulsion than in our statute, it falls far short of establishing a compulsory arbitration which will in and of itself prevent strikes.

A brief consideration of the Canadian procedure is worth while.

The Canadian act is most frequently mentioned in this country, and I submit a very brief statement with regard to its general scope. To understand the legislation of the Dominion completely it must be remembered that there are two acts, one known as an act respecting conciliation and labor and the other known as the industrial disputes and investigation act. The former embraces controversies between railway companies and their employees; the latter covers all other industrial disputes.

The administration of the railway act is initiated by application to the minister of labor and provides for the creation of a board of conciliation and also, if conciliation fails, a board of arbitration; but there is no method of enforcing the award of the arbitrators, so far as I have been able to learn, except as the proceeding of the railway board may be merged into the proceeding under the industrial disputes and investigation act. The latter provides for the creation, under proper application, of a board of conciliation and investigation, and if the dispute can not be adjusted, then the board proceeds to render a judgment or award; and it may be remarked that the board acting under the conciliation and labor act may refer certain railway disputes to the board of conciliation and investigation.

The board makes a report indicating what, in its opinion, the respective parties to the controversy ought to do or ought not to do.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? Is there any provision in either of the acts to which the Senator is now referring where the party would agree that any award when it is arrived at or any recommendation shall be made a rule of any court?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not in the Canadian act, as I understand it.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, there was in the Erdman Act that provision exactly.

Mr. CUMMINS. There was, in the Erdman Act. I am speaking of the Canadian act. There is just such a provision in the act of New Zealand. I will not say positively, but it may be there is some provision of that sort in the Canadian act; but if there is, I have not been able to find it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my understanding of the Canadian act is that they depend entirely upon public opinion to enforce the award, or whatever you call it; that they make no effort whatever to enforce it through any act of a court or through any act of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Idaho is right about that. I am quite sure that he is. I am just from rather a close examination of both statutes, and so far as I recall them there is no provision for the enforcement of the report or award or judgment, as I may call it. It is only operative until the report is made. The very moment the report is made that is the end of the governmental authority, and the men involved are at complete liberty to move according to their desire; and the way they are restrained until the report is filed is through a criminal penalty.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course there is a vast difference between establishing a court and clothing that court with power to compel men to work for certain prescribed wages, and the voluntary submission by both parties to a board of arbitration and an agreement on the part of both parties that the award, whatever it may be, shall be made a rule of court and be enforced. That might be done for the protection of either side to the controversy.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am speaking of involuntary arbitration, so termed. I am not speaking of voluntary arbitration. Of course if the parties agree to arbitrate a dispute, and the arbitrators reach an award, the laws of nearly every State in the Union provide for filing the award in a court, and thereafter it is enforced just as a judgment of a court would be enforced.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there not a further provision in the Canadian law that if the parties agree that the board shall pass upon their controversy, then the finding of the board is enforced as a voluntary action is enforced by criminal procedure? There is such a provision, I am sure.

Mr. CUMMINS. Whether they agree or not, as I understand the Canadian statute, that is true. The very moment that the Government takes jurisdiction of a dispute the right of men to strike or the right of the employer to lock out is suspended, and it remains suspended until the report of the board is made. When made, as the Senator from Idaho says, it is assumed that public opinion will coerce the parties to the dispute into obedience; but if public opinion fails to do that the parties are at full liberty to proceed just as if there had been no conciliation, no mediation, no arbitration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is this further provision, if the Senator will allow me. If the parties agree pending the investigation to submit to the investigation, then after the finding is made the right to lock out or to strike does not exist, but is punished as a crime just as it would be punished pending an investigation.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. I am referring only to an involuntary proceeding—to what is called compulsory arbitration. I am not reviewing either the statutes of Canada nor of the States with respect to voluntary arbitration.

So far as compulsion in the enforcement of awards is concerned—I am now still speaking of the Canadian statute—it is found in a section which I quote:

SEC. 56. It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on a strike.

I ought to interpose here the suggestion that the strike is defined in the statutes, and it does not mean an individual ceasing work; it means what we understand in this country as a union strike, a strike through concert and arrangement.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I have been very much interested in his argument. I wish to suggest to the Senator that while involuntary servitude or enforced labor may not be had in this country under our constitutional provision, yet has not Congress power to make it unlawful for two or more individuals to combine or conspire to impede the operation of the great interests of interstate commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to that. I hope the Senator will not anticipate that phase of it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I withdraw the question if the Senator is going to discuss that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I quote section 56:

It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on strike, on account of any dispute prior to or during a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation under the provisions of this act, or prior to or during a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the conciliation and labor act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit the suspension or discontinuance of any industry or of the working of any persons therein for any cause not constituting a lockout or strike: Provided also, That, except where the parties have entered into an agreement under section 62 of this act—

That being the section to which the Senator from Georgia referred—nothing in this act shall be held to restrain any employer from declaring a lockout or any employee from going on strike in respect of any dispute which has been duly referred to a board and which has been dealt with under section 24 or 25 of this act, or in respect of any dispute which has been the subject of a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the conciliation and labor act.

These sections relate to the findings of the board and the report of the board to the public authority.

What I have just read means that the moment the report is filed or the work of the so-called arbitrators or board of conciliation is completed there is no penalty imposed upon employees, whether singly or in concert, if they thereafter leave the employment in which they had been engaged.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if it will not interrupt him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all.

Mr. THOMAS. The provisions of the Canadian act, to which the Senator refers, have recently been characterized as so unjust and restrictive as to amount practically to an act of slavery. The Senator has evidently examined the law with much care, and doubtless has also made an investigation into the actual workings of that act. I therefore should like to ask if he thinks, from the practical operation of that law, there have been such consequences as would justify such a criticism?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there have been such consequences. I am not familiar with the details of the various proceedings under the law to which the Senator from Colorado refers, but even in Canada—a little country of seven or eight millions of people—the act which I am now reviewing can be so manipulated and so used that the reports of these boards of conciliation pending which the men are restrained from the exercise of their liberty of striking might be delayed over a period of a dozen years. I do not say that that has happened in Canada to that extent, but such an application of the law is possible. If all the railroads were united in a single controversy and all the employees of all the railroads were uniting in that same controversy, there would need be but one investigation and one report; but if the roads disintegrate and if the unions disintegrate, and there must be boards of conciliation and boards of arbitration for each employer and each system of employees, the effect of the Canadian statute would be practically to indefinitely limit the right of union men to strike.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. Applied to our country, with its hundred million of people and with its hundreds of railway companies, the result would be still more disastrous, so far as delay is concerned. I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I merely want to ask a question. The Senator may have answered it during his discussion, but, I think, not quite definitely. I ask whether, as to the employees who, under the penalties provided by the Canadian statute, remain at work pending negotiations or pending action on the part of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation or on the part of the board of arbitration, the work done is not involuntary servitude, and whether it is the Senator's belief that it is an involuntary servitude?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to consider that in a few moments. I have a definite opinion about it, but I will reach it at a little later time.

A penalty of not less than $10 nor more than $50 a day is imposed upon any employee who strikes contrary to the provisions of the act; and an employer who declares or causes a lockout contrary to the provisions of the law is fined not less than $100 nor more than a thousand dollars for each day of the lockout.

I departed a moment ago from the path that I intended to follow, namely, to discuss this matter somewhat upon its merits. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the wisdom of the Canadian act; that is, of expressing my full opinion as to its merits or demerits.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me one moment, when I used the term "involuntary servitude" I meant involuntary servitude within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; I understand that.

New Zealand and some of the Australasian States have gone further than either Europe or America toward control through the power of the Government. I will examine alone the experiment of New Zealand, for it is the only one of its kind which has even measurably survived. I mean by that that the New Zealand law, which was adopted by some of the States of Australia, was found so irksome and so impossible, if you please, of operation and administration that the law has been modified in many of those States, and in most of them where it was enacted has been practically abandoned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa pardon an interruption?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. In Australia, I understand, the Government enforces the decrees.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Australian law is practically the same as the New Zealand law.

Mr. BORAH. I am not so familiar with that; but does the New Zealand law provide for the enforcement of the decree through the operation of the Government?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does.

Mr. BORAH. The Australian law does that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

It will be first remarked that the Government of New Zealand approaches State socialism. It is not necessary to either approve or disapprove this view of government, but it is not to be questioned that New Zealand has adopted many laws which the United States could not enact under the Constitution as well as many laws which the present temper of the people of the United States would not tolerate for an instant.

The underlying purpose of the New Zealand industrial arbitration law is to compel both employers and employees to unionize. New Zealand establishes her system upon the hypothesis that all occupations, all kinds of business, should be cooperative or should be bound together in some form of combination. Its application is confined, so far as employees are concerned—now mark this—not alone to labor unions, but to labor unions which have registered under the act. In the registration the union surrenders the freedom of a voluntary organization and agrees to abide the judgment of the arbitration board. If a labor union prefers to exist as a voluntary organization, it may do so either by refusing to register or by canceling its registration. In such cases it is just as free to strike and as little bound as are similar bodies of laboring men in this country

The law creates, first, councils of conciliation, and, second, a court of arbitration. Mark you, there is no shrinking in New Zealand from the real question. The body which finally decides the dispute between employers and employees is a court, and is clothed with all the powers of a court.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the able Senator if he has not inadvertently fallen into error—an error of expression rather than of understanding—or may I ask him if I am in error? Is not the provision in the New Zealand law like unto that we have put into the Federal Trade Commission act in the United States, to wit, that if the body authorized to investigate finds an infraction or finds necessary an enforcement it sends its decision to a court, which court then reduces it to the form of a judgment of the court, to be enforced then by the court processes?

Mr. CUMMINS. There are some instances in which that can be done, but, if the Senator will wait a moment, he will see that I am absolutely accurate in the statement that I have made.

Mr. LEWIS. I will be very glad to hear the Senator through.

Mr. CUMMINS. The court of arbitration is composed of two members, nominated or appointed by the respective parties to the dispute, and a judge of the supreme court. Practically speaking, and historically speaking as well, the final decree, judgment, or award is that of a single man. It has been often asserted that the court of arbitration, to which I have referred, can compel absolute obedience in all cases.

This conclusion is not at all clear, although it may very well be contended from the language of the act that the court can enforce obedience. I am now speaking of the court of arbitration, and not of the board of conciliation or mediation, which refers the controversy to the court of arbitration. I am inclined to doubt some of the powers which are imputed to the court of arbitration, but they are broad enough in any event. As I interpret the law, the most that can be said of it is that if a man works he must work under the terms and conditions provided in the award, or if an employer continues his business he must continue it as prescribed by the court of arbitration.

I have endeavored to ascertain whether there is any record of these courts in existence in which the court of arbitration has ordered a man to work against his will. I do not find any such instances, although they may exist. There are plenty of instances in which employees have been fined for not working in the way in which the court has declared the work should be carried on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. So far as the Australian law goes and the power of the Government to enforce the decrees, there are instances noted in which parties were punished for violating the decree; that is, for refusing to work they were fined, and in this way compelled to continue at their work.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are instances of that kind in New Zealand. What I had in mind was something in the nature of an injunction, that brought one who disobeyed it into contempt of the court, with a punishment which might continue until the process of the court was obeyed.

For a complete understanding of the New Zealand act it is necessary to inquire into the jurisdiction of the court of arbitration and how it acquires jurisdiction. The board of conciliation, which can only proceed, first, where an industrial agreement provides for the reference of disputes to it; second, where an individual employer or several employers in combination, or an industrial union, trade-union, or association of workers, all of which must be registered, request a reference to the board.

However compulsory the law of New Zealand may be in the execution of the finding or judgment, it is not at all compulsory so far as the jurisdiction of either the board of conciliation or the court of arbitration is concerned. Any organization of labor, any organization of employers, may escape the jurisdiction of the particular board. I am not now including railways.

I have mentioned these provisions of the law because, with one exception, the court of arbitration acquires its jurisdiction solely through a reference by a board of conciliation. The exception relates to the Government-owned railways, and with respect to them it is provided that either the railway commissioners or the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants may refer industrial controversies arising between them to the court of arbitration. It is compulsory in jurisdiction, therefore, so far as railway employees are concerned.

It will be observed that as to what may be called private industrial disputes the court of arbitration obtains jurisdiction by the voluntary act of one or both of the parties interested and that as to railway disputes it obtains jurisdiction upon the request of the official bureau known as the railway commissioners or upon the request of the Union of Railway Operatives. The judgment or award of the court of arbitration is enforced in the main through a system of penalties imposed, not only upon the union but, in proper cases, upon the members themselves.

It is quite clear that once the court of arbitration secures jurisdiction and makes its finding or renders its judgment, it can coerce, through penalties, and impose obedience to whatever the finding may be.

The act is very elaborate, and I have given simply its prominent features, so far as they pertain to the subject I am discussing. The law does not bring within its operation all industrial controversies, and it is a matter of recent history that strikes have occurred in New Zealand, which could not be controlled through either the boards of conciliation or the court of arbitration. So far as railways are concerned, its compulsion is practically complete.

Without expressing my personal opinion as to the policy of such legislation, it seems to be clear that it could not be adopted in the United States, in view of the constitutional limitation which Congress must respect.

In order that the whole subject may be conveniently studied, I append to my remarks a copy of two good examples of State legislation, namely, Wisconsin and Massachusetts, and also the Federal statute, ordinarily known as the Newlands law; also the Canadian act and the New Zealand act, to which I have just referred.

I am not unfamiliar with the expressions of the Supreme Court of the United States indicating how far the Federal Government or the government of a State may go in curtailing freedom of contract and of personal action, when the public welfare requires it, in such cases as Robertson v. Baldwin (165 U. S., 275), Patterson v. Bark Eudora (190 U. S., 169, 175), Bailey v. Alabama (219 U. S., 219, 244), Noble Bank v. Haskell (219 U. S., 104, 111), Shallenberger v. First State Bank (219 U. S., 114), Schmidinger v. Chicago (226 U. S., 578), Crowley v. Christiansen (137 U. S., 86, 89), Lawton v. Steele (152 U. S., 133, 136), McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316, 415).

Nor have I overlooked the decisions in inferior courts, such as Southern California Ry. Co. v. Rutherford (62 Fed., 796), Ann Arbor Ry. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. (54 Fed., 746, 756), United States v. Debs (64 Fed., 724, 759); but giving the utmost liberality to the application of the principles which have been fairly well established in these and other decisions, it is exceedingly doubtful whether Congress could go to the length of the Canadian law, and it is quite clear that it could not, under the Constitution, enact the restrictions of the New Zealand law.

Nothing that I have said is to be construed as indicating any opposition upon my part to the arbitration of labor disputes. On the contrary, I am not only strongly in favor of the tendency toward arbitration, but I am profoundly convinced that we have made great progress in that direction and that the laws we have, not only in the States but in the Nation, have accomplished great good. They have been productive of the most gratifying results—results which I would be glad to lay before the Senate and the country if it were possible to do so within the limits of the discussion I have proposed.

The Erdman Act, and its amendment, the Newlands Act, have fully justified their existence, for, while there is nothing in them which coerces either employers or employees, the mediation which they authorize and the opportunity for profound and considerate judgment which they present have brought about agreements and arbitration in many controversies which would otherwise have terminated in disastrous disturbance.

The point which I desire to emphasize is that direct compulsory arbitration—that is, a law which not only gives some Government tribunal the authority to take the dispute against the will of either or both the parties to it and decide it, and then to directly enforce the judgment by compelling the employers to retain the men involved under the prescribed conditions, or to compel the men then working to continue to work for the compensation and under the conditions imposed—is forbidden by the Constitution, is repugnant to the enlightened sense of human liberty, would destroy the entire fabric of organized society, and may be at once dismissed as a solution of the problem before us.

Without advocating it or expressing any opinion upon the justice or wisdom of it—and I now come to the point suggested by the Senator from South Dakota—there is, however, a way in which the effect of compulsory arbitration can be secured.

It is obvious that the individual strike is of no great consequence. There can be no effectual strike without the intervention of a union or an association among the employees. It is the concert of action among them which makes the strike formidable. If workingmen were unorganized and could not move together as a body, while individuals might cease work, there would be no strike problem. The chief object of a union is to combine the strength of all its members. The strike through which the whole membership ceases to work at a given time is the modern weapon with which laborers fight for more wages and better conditions. It is the weapon with which workingmen in modern times have emancipated themselves from the slavery of former years. Without it in some form they would be speedily reduced to their ancient subjection, unless the Government undertakes to enforce their just demands.

It is my deliberate judgment that there is no method for the prevention of strikes by force of law except to deny to workingmen the right of striking in union or in concert; that is to say, to make it unlawful to enter into an agreement or understanding that they will cease to work at a prescribed time and in a body, unless—and, mark you, I emphasize this as I emphasized the former—unless the Government undertakes to enforce their just demands. To do this, which I believe to be within the constitutional authority of Congress, without providing an efficient substitute, is to practically prohibit unions; for while the unions have other and notable functions, if they are deprived of their right to quit work in a body as the outcome of an understanding or agreement, they will be shorn of their real power, and will rapidly become mere benevolent societies.

I for one am unalterably opposed to any such legislation, unless it is accompanied with sure relief from injustice.

The industrial peace which might be attained by taking away from the workingman the only weapon with which he can fight, would, in the end, inflict graver consequences upon the country than we ever have experienced or ever will experience through any strike, however general or however perilous.

I can not believe, therefore, that Congress will ever broadly and absolutly make it a crime for union men to strike in concert. There are some misinformed people who believe, apparently, that it was the act of 1915, generally known as the Clayton law, which permits members of labor unions to strike in pursuance of an understanding or agreement, but this is not so, for the Supreme Court of the United States had theretofore repeatedly held that a union strike, peacefully begun and peacefully carried out, was not an offense against the antitrust law.

I have said that while constitutional, Congress would never make it a crime for workingmen to strike in concert through prearrangement under any and all circumstances. There is, however, another phase of the subject which is well within our power and which deserves consideration. It is contended that a modified or partial restriction of the right to strike in a combined way would make for industrial peace, and at the same time would not unduly infringe upon personal liberty. It has been frequently urged that with or without the consent of employers and employees the Government should assume jurisdiction through a proper tribunal of disputes between organized employees acting through representatives and employers; that the tribunal should proceed, after due notice and hearing, to determine what each side ought to do; that until the award or judgment, and for a reasonable time thereafter, it should be unlawful for the members of the union to combine in order to bring about a strike or for the employers to establish what is called a lockout in order to bring the employees to terms.

The theory of those who advocate a law of this character is that the investigation and decree of an impartial tribunal would, in a great majority of instances, enforce itself through popular sympathy and public opinion. They think that if all combination looking toward the strike or lockout can be prevented until there is a full inquiry and an unprejudiced decision, a subsequent combination for a strike or a subsequent lockout will rarely occur.

This is the general basis for the Canadian act. While we could not reach the end in the way in which the Dominion of Canada has reached it, and answering the question of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], I have little doubt that it is within our power to make unlawful a combination of employees looking to a strike in concert. We could not simply make it unlawful to strike. All that we could possibly make unlawful would be the combination or the conspiracy to strike. I assert no unqualified opinion upon that point; but if we can approach the Canadian procedure, that is the way in my judgment in which we must approach it.

There are other students of the subject who insist that when the Government has undertaken to settle the rights of parties to such a dispute, and does settle them through an involuntary proceeding such as I have described, that it ought to be made unlawful to combine, either before or after the judgment is pronounced.

Their reasoning is something like this: If it is fair to withdraw or take away from union men the right to strike in concert for a limited period while an investigation is in progress—an investigation and report that are intended to influence public opinion, and which it may be assumed will declare the very right of the matter—why should it not be unlawful to combine or conspire together to strike after the Government has ascertained the justice of the controversy and published it and provides for carrying it into effect?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Purely as a constitutional question, if we could pass a law upon the basis of the Canadian law, making it an offense to strike during the pendency of the investigation, upon what constitutional principle would we be inhibited from passing a law making it an offense to strike during the life of the judgment or decree which was rendered?

Mr. CUMMINS. None whatever. It is quite as constitutional to make it unlawful to combine for the purposes of a strike after the award is made as it would be constitutional to prohibit it before, of course. I think myself it would be much more logical. However, that is treading upon ground that is very controversial and which I did not intend to consider at this time.

Mr. BORAH. It is controversial, and I do not desire to break the continuity of the Senator's argument; but it does seem to me that it is a question which we will have to meet in this situation. That is to say, if we have the constitutional power in one instance, certainly we have it in the other, and the wisdom of exercising it in one instance is just as great, in my judgment, as in the other. That is, if we are going to exercise it at all, it should be exercised effectively. Personally, I do not think it exists at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator, if we have this power to prevent a strike, would it not equally exist to bring a strike to an end—to prohibit the continuation of a strike?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not the same confidence in public opinion and its effect upon parties to a controversy that many people seem to have. I have never seen anything like a consolidated or unanimous public opinion upon a subject of this kind. After the board has investigated and reported what should be done, there will be just as much difference of opinion respecting the real justice and right of the matter as there was before. There will be partisans who will insist upon the prejudice or ignorance of the board; there will be partisans who will reason in a different way upon the facts which the board or court shall develop. My own judgment is that if we had the power and if we thought it wise to adopt the Canadian act, word for word, instead of composing labor disputes, and instead of preventing strikes, the whole tendency would be to inflame the people of the country who are directly interested, and to promote just such strikes as we are now endeavoring to avert.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator understood my question. My question was this: If the power to prevent a strike exists, then, even though a strike had been inaugurated, would not the power equally exist to pass legislation which would compel a desistence of the strike?

Mr. CUMMINS. That presents an entirely different question. I do not think the two things are the same at all. If we can handle the question at all, we must approach it through the combination. We can not interfere with the right of the individual to quit work—to dispose of his time and his energy as he sees fit. The utmost we could do would be to declare certain combinations unlawful. Now, if the combinations have taken place before they are made unlawful, of course we could not reach them through an ex post facto statute.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the whole matter does not come back to the question of public interest, and to the question whether any man or any combination of men have a right to do that which will be detrimental to the public interest? And if either a strike or a lockout pending negotiations for a settlement or during arbitration proceedings seriously embarrasses or affects the public interest, then may there not be the restraint of the law?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss with any degree of fullness the constitutionality of these provisions. My effort has been rather to make the question or questions concrete in the minds of Senators and of the public. There will develop, as this matter proceeds, I suspect, the widest difference of opinion as to the constitutionality of any law that may be proposed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator's contribution to this subject this morning is very valuable. I was compelled to leave the Chamber, being called out during the last few minutes of the Senator's remarks, and if he has covered the question I am about to ask I shall not ask him to answer it. But what remedy or what method has the Senator to suggest? Has he discussed that subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not entered upon that subject at all, nor do I intend to do so at this time. We have before our committee now under consideration various proposals, and I do not intend either to preclude my own mind in advance as to them nor to attempt to forestall the judgment of any Senator with respect to them.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me, then, to trench so far upon his time as to make a very short statement, and then suggest a matter?

The railroad companies have for many years followed the practice, whenever they are in financial difficulty with their bondholders, or whenever they are in difficulty with creditors holding floating debts of the company, of going into the courts and asking that receivers be appointed. Generally these suits are brought by some bondholder who alleges that he has a debt, a contract, which results in a financial obligation; that the road is being mismanaged, or that the road is about to be seized by creditors, to the detriment and injury of the property; that the public has large interests and the property must be kept going, and so forth—the usual allegations with which we are all familiar. Thereupon sometimes in friendly suits, sometimes in actions that are really adversary, a receiver is appointed. The court takes the property and proceeds to manage it. After a time, when the difficulties have been passed, it turns the property back. It sometimes sells the property to satisfy obligations. As the basis of all this circumstance lies the idea that there is a contractual obligation between the road and somebody that is being interfered with.

Now, the Government has contracts with substantially every railroad in the United States to carry its mails. It also employs the railroads in the shipment of large supplies to its Army, to its Navy, and to all those points where the business of the Government makes it necessary to move freights. It also has a lively interest in the transportation of troops. Those matters at least in part rest upon contracts which are now existing. In addition to that, there is of course the great interest of the public, and I might almost say the question of the preservation of the peace is involved.

Why has not Congress the right to pass a statute providing that whenever the Attorney General of the United States shall file in a court of proper jurisdiction a petition alleging that the Government has these contracts with the railroad companies; that they are about to permit their violation by failing to operate their trains; that this is a voluntary act on the part of the companies from which they can escape by the mere expenditure of an additional sum of money; that the entire business of the country is dependent upon these lines of transportation, and so forth, bottoming the case upon our contracts, and the willful violation by the proprietors of the roads, followed with the further allegation that our damage and injury is irremediable, that it can not be compensated in money judgment, and, under those circumstances and those facts being made to appear, the court can appoint a receiver or receivers for one or more of the roads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, however sound and well worthy of consideration, is not within the scope of the argument I am endeavoring to make. My purpose was to review as well as I could the subject of compulsory arbitration, so called, or the power of the Government to deal with the men who are involved in a union strike. All such plans may be within our constitutional authority, and at this time I express neither approval nor disapproval of their wisdom or policy. To do so would involve me in an argument in which I do not intend to indulge under the circumstances which surround the Senate, for there is much to be said both for and against regulation along the line of the above suggestions. One thought, however, should be constantly borne in mind: Industrial peace is exceedingly desirable, just as peace between nations is the ideal condition of mankind. Notwithstanding our devotion to peace, we all recognize that it may cost too much. The doctrine of peace at any price is as fatal in commerce and industry as it is in the relations of the Governments of the earth.

It is apparent that these disputes which so vitally affect the whole body of the people should be settled, if possible, by an impartial tribunal, and I do not think of it as an arbitration; I think of it as a court, composed of men of the highest character and greatest attainments; a court composed wholly of members who have no possible interest in the controversy, and who have the same sense of high responsibility which we expect of men chosen to exercise the judicial office. It must be composed of men in whom the entire country has confidence, of humanitarians who are looking constantly for the true pathway to a better civilization. If we can secure such a court, the strike, in concert or combination, may, for a time and in a degree, be subordinated to its judgments.

The most imperative task of the present time is to search our consciences and ascertain whether we are willing to establish such a tribunal. If we are ready for this duty, further legislation may be wise. If we are not ready for it, we must endure the hardships and sufferings which fall upon us until we are prepared.

The whole heart of the great controversy is in the immense difficulty we encounter in creating a tribunal which will do justice between the men who operate railways and the men who own railways. We have never so far as I know been able to even suggest the composition of any tribunal in whom the people, and especially those who are vitally interested, would have that implicit confidence necessary to make their awards binding in conscience as well as in the law.

Looking at the present situation we might just as well face it with courage and resolution. We might just as well understand that unless we are able to create a court or a tribunal of whom it will be true that it will judge fairly, honestly, humanely between employers and employees, there can be no legislation which will have even a tendency to avert strikes in concert.

If you will examine, if you will search and probe the question you will finally come to that one high vital necessity. Do you know how a tribunal of that kind can be composed? I am not suggesting that it is impossible to do it; I believe it is possible to do it; but, Senators, have you reflected upon the subject sufficiently to be willing to suggest a plan for the creation of such a tribunal? There will be no peace, there can be no peace, until that problem finds its solution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be inhuman, it would be intolerable to take away, if we can, the right of men to strike in concert in order to sustain their demands for higher wages and better conditions unless we can offer these men a tribunal for the settlement of their controversies which will command the same confidence that the courts of the United States command among those who must resort to them for arbitrament. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. In response to the able Senator's suggestion whether any Senator has a remedy, I suggest to the Senator I have tendered a measure enlarging the scope of the Interstate Commerce Commission and vesting in the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to hear any disputes or any grievances concerning the wages of employees and disputes with employers to the same extent that they have jurisdiction to settle the matter of freight rates between shippers and carriers and dividing the Interstate Commerce Commission into sections so that they may be nearer to the people. I ask the able Senator does he not think that forum one as potent to execute judgment and justice between employers and carriers as it is to-day in the rates of shipment between shippers and carriers, and that that is a method which is adaptable for both parties to the controversy?

Mr. CUMMINS. I find myself differing evidently with the Senator from Illinois, for while I hold the Interstate Commerce Commision in the highest regard, I think of all the bodies we have created by law or could create by law the Interstate Commerce Commission is the most unavailable body to pass on the question I have been discussing. In the first place, its duties as between railways and those who employ the service of railways are radically unlike the duties suggested by the Senator from Illinois. Moreover, a body of men that is to pass upon the disputes between laborers and employers ought not to be permanent; it ought to be created for the particular controversy. There may be some difference of judgment about that. Such is my opinion, however, for the qualities of mind, the training of mind, the experience and knowledge which might be imperatively required in one case might not qualify in another, and a board composed for the settlement of this railway dispute might be not at all adequate for the settlement of some other dispute which may arise between employers and employees.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho first. I think he rose first.

Mr. BORAH. Any board or tribunal organized for the purpose of settling labor disputes would have to have one safeguard thrown around it which the Interstate Commerce Commission has not. I do not suggest here and now how it should be done, but it would certainly have to be achieved in some way, and that is to prevent the pressure of political influence upon the body at the time it was dealing with a particular hearing. The last remarkable exhibition of that kind toward the Interstate Commerce Commission, with reference to the 5 per cent rate case, disclosed beyond question that even as great a tribunal as that yields to such pressure and influence, and it even founded its opinion upon propositions not founded in the statute. It is a mistake to leave any body of men discharging a quasi judicial duty open to such shameless influence as was exerted in the 5 per cent case.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has any doubt about the constitutional right of Congress to give to the tribunal he has been describing the right to fix the wages and regulate the hours of employment not only of the employees but of the officials of the various interstate railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have very grave doubt about it.

I must be permitted to express one further thought, lest it may be said that I tolerate the disorder which sometimes attends the strike.

When men quit work in a body, they ought to recognize that every employer has the right to fill their places and proceed with his business, whatever it may be, in peace and quiet. Just as I believe that until we can substitute something fair and efficient for the strike that men have an inalienable right to strike in union, so I believe that the employer has the right to hire others for the work he is pursuing, without the least interference on the part of those who have abandoned the employment. This applies with increased emphasis to the functions of the Government, such as the transmission of mails and the like.

Passing from the subject of compulsory arbitration, I turn my attention for a moment to other legislation within the authority of Congress, which might have a tendency to prevent union strikes.

Undoubtedly Congress could prescribe maximum hours of work upon railways engaged in interstate commerce. It is clear, however, that if this were done there would still be wide opportunity for disputes between employers and employees.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is now discussing the question somewhat, and I wish to ask him if he doubts that Congress would have the constitutional right to fix the compensation as well as the hours?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to that.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Unquestionably Congress has authority to prescribe both minimum and maximum wages to be paid by such railway companies. It is true that regulation of this character might sometimes be overthrown in the courts if challenged as unreasonable or arbitrary, because there is no well-established standard for compensation in the various occupations of life.

Now, I answer the former question of the Senator from Nebraska. It is to be doubted whether Congress could confer upon a commission or tribunal of any kind the power to fix wages, for the reason just given. It would be found well-nigh impossible to give to a commission or tribunal a rule of sufficient certainty to bring the delegation of the power within the accepted principles of the law.

Our civilization has so far advanced that we have definite ideas with respect to hours of labor. We have already legislated upon the subject, but the maximum time of continuous service is so great that the regulation is of little value.

I have no doubt that Congress will speedily turn its attention to the matter and that a provision better adapted to secure safety in railway operation and the well-being of railway operatives will be enacted. It may be that it would be wise to establish minimum wages, but when the variety of employment and the difference in ability and skill required to perform the several tasks of railway operation are considered, the immense difficulty of the undertaking is at once apparent. When we advance toward the establishment of maximum compensation these difficulties are infinitely multiplied, and I look upon any attempt to restrict the freedom of contract in this respect—that is, maximum compensation—as doomed to complete and immediate failure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think there is any greater constitutional authority conferred upon such a tribunal as he has been describing to fix, not necessarily the maximum and minimum, but the absolute compensation of various kinds of employees than there is conferred upon the same tribunal the right to fix a rate that shall be charged, of which the salaries of all the employees and officials must be one of the component parts?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a little difference in the constitutional authority. From time immemorial the standard which is applied to test the validity of a rate imposed by a common carrier has been known theoretically at least. When we created the Interstate Commerce Commission we gave to that commission the standard which had been for centuries the law with regard to the transportation of persons and property by common carriers, and the courts have held that that is a sufficiently definite standard to warrant the delegation of power which the interstate-commerce law involves.

Now, mark you, I am not speaking of Congress; but when Congress would attempt to delegate the power to fix wages, what is the standard, what is the rule? What is to determine whether a man ought to be paid $2 a day or $5 a day or $10 a day? I do not know of any standard at all.

Mr. BORAH. Would the phrase "a fair and reasonable wage" be any more definite or less definite than "unfair competition" or "a reasonable rate?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would be very much less definite. Both unfair competition and reasonable rates for the carriage of persons or property have become fairly well established. But it is not necessary for me to argue the matter. If the power exists, it is to be exercised through regulation and is not involved in the subject I am discussing. You can not compel a man to work for any wage that the commission may fix.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede the point the Senator has made. It was not the object of my question to contest that, but I was wondering if the board or tribunal, or whatever it is the Senator has been describing, has the authority to fix a rate and a part of that rate is made up of the salaries that the president of a road draws and the brakemen draw, that being a part of the rate that it is considered they have the constitutional right to fix, and we have the constitutional right to provide, if we define it as we did in the power to fix the rate, that the salaries of all the employees and officials should be reasonable, that being a part of the rate, why could they not fix those rates; and when they were fixed would they not partake much of the same as a governmental position, and a strike would probably be unknown in regard to it if they controlled the entire situation?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Nebraska will reflect, he will, I think, agree with me that there are two senses in which the power to fix wages may be delegated; that is, there are two standards or tests that will be applied to determine the validity of any such legislation. But what I have said is that I do not believe we could delegate to a commission the authority to fix a wage and prosecute a man who refused to work for it or prosecute a railway company if it refused to pay it. But we can create a commission or a tribunal, a court, that will have jurisdiction to determine all disputes between railway companies and employees, and I think all things that pertain to the management and conduct of the railways, and provide that the right to strike in concert shall be suspended until that award or that report is made. I have connected those two things together, and, as the Senator from Nebraska will observe——

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator makes one mistake in his last statement in regard to any such tribunal having power to fix the salary of an official when he says that we could not compel anybody to work for it and we could not compel the railroad companies to pay it. We bear a different relation, as I understand it, under the Constitution to the railroad company than we do to the employee. We can regulate them to a greater extent than we can the man who is working.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think possibly I have misapprehended the view of the Senator from Nebraska. I supposed that he was addressing his question to me with reference to something that could be done to avert a strike. That is the subject I am discussing.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the object of my inquiry, and I was seeking information only. I am not asking my question in any critical sense.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know it, and I do not——

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me if we did what I have suggested we would practically place all these positions on the same basis as Government positions, so far as men working for the Government are concerned. We could not prohibit the man, neither would I want to prohibit the man, from quitting if he wanted to quit at any time, but I do not believe the Senator doubts that if Congress desired it could pass a law which would provide, for instance, that any of these interstate railroads should not pay a salary to the president nor to a conductor above a certain amount mentioned—that an official should get a certain salary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not prepared to assert that. I am very sure that if they pay exorbitant salaries Congress has power to declare that they shall not be reflected in the charge for service.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a part of the rate. Nobody contests that, whether it is a brakeman's salary or the president's salary.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Nebraska is talking about the system of regulating railways. I am talking about industrial disputes which arise between employers and employees.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think if such a system were enacted as a law the danger of strikes would at once disappear?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; I think that the railway men have much more concern about what they themselves get than what the president of the company gets.

Mr. NORRIS. But I am including what the railroad men get as well as the president. I am only putting them together because they are both employees of the road. If we can control one we can control the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would have some effect in composing the situation, but that has nothing to do with disputes which arise between railway employees and their employers, and my remarks were limited entirely to controversies of that sort.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has indicated in his remarks the grave difficulty in securing a board in which the public itself would have confidence and in which the railway officials would have confidence as well as the labor unions. The Senator has also indicated that several bills are now before the committee. So far the Senator has discussed only two parties to this controversy, the railway companies and the employees. There is a third party, the public, which is vitally interested in the wages paid to employees and also vitally interested in the charges that are made for carriage of passengers and freight. The Senator will recall that some years ago we had an arbitration of the coal strike. That matter was settled and it was settled in an increase of wages. I am not saying that the wages should not have been increased, but immediately 75 cents more a ton for coal was loaded upon the public.

I am not prepared to say that that was just. I simply suggest it as indicating that the public are deeply interested, and any board, it seems to me, if we are to have confidence in it, should represent the public interest as well as the interest of the contestants.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota is wholly right. The public is really the principal party in interest; and any adjustment that a governmental tribunal may make with regard to the relations of employers and employees must and ought to take into consideration the paramount right of the public, for in the end the increase in the expenses of the operation of railways will be reflected in the charges which the railway companies make for the service they render; and it would be in the last degree unjust and intolerable for the railway operatives to receive more than fair compensation and then allow the railway companies to pass that burden to those who must ultimately "pay the freight." These men have as deep an interest in the controversy as any others who may be involved in it.

Mr. McCUMBER. And therefore the Senator would agree that under any system of arbitration the interest of the people generally ought to be subserved in the appointment of some one who would look after their interests?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not reached a settled conclusion with regard to the best way of creating a tribunal of that sort; but, to say the very least, it ought to be composed of men, all of whom are disinterested, who are public servants in just the sense that the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are public servants. It ought to be composed of members, I think, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, so that there will be some certainty that the tribunal will not only be qualified for the task that it undertakes, but that it will also command the respect and confidence of all the people.

APPENDIX.

EXHIBIT V.

WISCONSIN ARBITRATION LAW, AS AMENDED 1897.

CHAPTER 364.

An act to provide for a State board of arbitration and conciliation for the settlement of differences between employers and their employees.

The people of the State of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The governor of the State shall within 60 days after the passage and publication of this act appoint three competent persons in the manner hereinafter provided to serve as a State board of arbitration and conciliation. One of such board shall be an employer, or selected from some association representing employers of labor; one shall be selected from some labor organization and not an employer of labor; and the third shall be appointed upon the recommendation of the other two: Provided, however, That if the two appointed by the governor as herein provided do not agree upon the third member of such board at the expiration of 30 days, the governor shall appoint such third member. The members of said board shall hold office for the term of two years and until their successors are appointed. If a vacancy occurs at any time the governor shall appoint a member of such board to serve out the unexpired term, and he may remove any member of said board. Each member of such board shall before entering upon the duties of his office be sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, the constitution of the State of Wisconsin, and to faithfully discharge the duties of his office. Said board shall at once organize by the choice of one of their number as chairman and another as secretary. All requests and communications intended for said board may be addressed to the governor at Madison, who shall at once refer the same to the said board for their action.

SEC. 2. Said board shall as soon as possible after its organization establish such rules of procedure as shall be approved by the governor and attorney general.

SEC. 3. Whenever any controversy or difference not the subject of litigation in the courts of this State exists between an employer, whether an individual, copartnership or corporation, and his employees, if at the time he employs not less than 25 persons in the same general line of business in any city, village, or town of this State, said board may, without any application therefor, and upon application as hereinafter provided, and as soon as practicable thereafter, shall visit the locality of the dispute and make careful inquiry into the cause thereof, hear all persons interested therein who may come before them, advise the respective parties what, if anything, should be done or submitted to by either or both to adjust said dispute, and make a written decision thereof. This decision shall at once be made public, shall be published in two or more newspapers published in the locality of such dispute, shall be recorded upon proper books of record to be kept by the secretary of said board, and a succinct statement thereof published in the annual report hereinafter provided for, and said board shall cause a copy of such decision to be filed with the clerk of the city, village, or town where said business is carried on.

SEC. 4. Said application shall be signed by said employer, or by a majority of his employees in the department of the business in which the controversy or difference exists, or their duly authorized agent, or by both parties, and shall contain a concise statement of the grievances complained of and a promise and agreement to continue in business or at work without any lockout or strike until the decision of said board: Provided, however, That said board shall render its decision within 30 days after the date of filing such application. As soon as may be after the receipt of said application the secretary of said board shall cause public notice to be given of the time and place for the hearing thereof; but public notice need not be given when both parties to the controversy join in the application and request in writing that no public notice be given. When notice has been given as aforesaid the board may in its discretion appoint two expert assistants to the board, one to be nominated by each of the parties to the controversy: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the board from appointing such other additional expert assistants as they may deem necessary. Such expert assistants shall be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duty, such oath to be administered by any member of the board. Should the petitioner, or petitioners, fail to perform the promise and agreement made in said application, the board shall proceed no further thereupon without the written consent of the adverse party. The board shall have power to subpœna as witnesses any operative in the departments of business affected by the matter in controversy, and any person who keeps the records of wages earned in such departments, and to examine them under oath, and to require the production of books containing the record of wages paid. Subpœnas may be signed and oaths administered by any member of the board.

SEC. 5. The decision of the board herein provided for shall be open to public inspection, shall be published in a biennial report to be made to the governor of the State with such recommendations as the board may deem proper, and shall be printed and distributed according to the provisions governing the printing and distribution of other State reports.

SEC. 6. Said decision shall be binding upon the parties who join in said application for six months, or until either party has given the other notice in writing of his intention not to be bound by such decision from and after the expiration of 60 days from the date of said notice. Said notice may be given by serving the same upon the employers or his representative, and by serving the same upon the employees by posting the same in three conspicuous places in the shop, factory, yard, or upon the premises where they work.

SEC. 7. The parties to any controversy or difference as described in section 3 of this act may submit the matters in dispute in writing to a local board of arbitration and conciliation; said board may either be mutually agreed upon or the employer may designate one of such arbitrators, the employers or their duly authorized agent another, and the two arbitrators so designated may choose a third, who shall be chairman of such local board; such board shall in respect to the matters referred to it have and exercise all the powers which the State board might have and exercise, and its decision shall have such binding effect as may be agreed upon by the parties to the controversy in the written submission. The jurisdiction of such local board shall be exclusive in respect to the matters submitted to it, but it may ask and receive the advice and assistance of the State board. Such local board shall render its decision in writing within 10 days after the close of any hearing held by it, and shall file a copy thereof with the secretary of the State board. Each of such local arbitrators shall be entitled to receive from the treasurer of the city, village, or town in which the controversy or difference that is the subject of arbitration exists, if such payment is approved in writing by the mayor of such city, the board of trustees of such village or the town board of such town the sum of $3 for each day of actual service not exceeding 10 days for any one arbitration.

SEC. 8. Whenever it is made to appear to the mayor of a city, the village board of a village, or the town board of a town, that a strike or a lockout such as is described in section 9 of this act is seriously threatened or actually occurs, the mayor of such city, or the village board of such village, or the town board of such town, shall at once notify the State board of such facts, together with such information as may be available.

SEC. 9. Whenever it shall come to the knowledge of the State board by notice as herein provided, or otherwise, that a strike or lockout is seriously threatened, or has actually occurred, which threats to or does involve the business interests of any city, village, or town of this State, it shall be the duty of the State board to investigate the same as soon as may be and endeavor by mediation to effect an amicable settlement between the employer and employees, and to endeavor to persuade them, provided a strike or lockout has not actually occurred or is not then continuing, to submit the matters in dispute to a local board of arbitration and conciliation as herein provided for, or to the State board. Said State board may, if it deems it advisable, investigate the cause or causes of such controversy, ascertain which party thereto is mainly responsible or blameworthy for the existence or continuance of the same and may make and publish a report finding such cause or causes and assigning such responsibility or blame.

SEC. 10. Witnesses subpœnaed by the State board shall be allowed for their attendance and travel the same fees as are allowed to witnesses in the circuit courts of this State. Each witness shall certify in writing the amount of his travel and attendance, and the amount due him upon approval by the board shall be paid out of the State treasury.

SEC. 11. The members of the State board shall receive the actual and necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties under this act, and the further sum of $5 a day each for the number of days actually and necessarily spent by them, the same to be paid out of the State treasury.

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication.

Approved April 17, 1897.

ARBITRATION LAWS.

State boards of mediation and arbitration were established in New York and Massachusetts in 1886; those States being the first to try official mediation and arbitration as a means of adjusting disputes between employers and employees. Since then similar boards have been established in California, Connecticut, Illinois, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, and Ohio. An act of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, approved July 3, 1889, authorized the governor of that State to appoint a State board of mediation and arbitration, but the law is inoperative because the governor has failed to exercise such authority. The constitution of Utah, which was admitted to the Union as a sovereign State on January 4, 1896, directs the legislature to provide by law for a board of labor, conciliation, and arbitration. The law creating the bureau of labor statistics of the State of Colorado provides that when differences arise between employer and employees, threatening to result or resulting in a strike or lockout, it shall be the duty of the commissioner to mediate between the parties to the controversy, if either party request his intervention. Similar powers are conferred upon the commissioners of labor statistics of the States of Missouri and Nebraska, and they are also authorized, under certain circumstances, to form local boards of arbitration. The laws of Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, and Pennsylvania simply authorize the courts to appoint tribunals of voluntary arbitration when the parties to labor disputes petition for or consent to their appointment; the jurisdiction of such tribunals being limited to the county or portion of the State in which the dispute may arise. The parties to such controversies have seldom, if ever, availed themselves of the provisions of such laws, in States in which there are no regularly constituted boards of arbitration.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1902.

An act to establish an industrial court for the administration of industrial justice between corporations and their employees.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

INDUSTRIAL COURT ESTABLISHED.

SECTION 1. A court to be called the industrial court is hereby established to administer industrial justice between corporations doing business in the Commonwealth, whether foreign or domestic corporations, and their employees, whether resident or nonresident in the Commonwealth.

The industrial court shall be composed of a chief justice, whose salary shall be ——— dollars per year, and two associate judges whose salary shall be ——— dollars per year each; all of whom shall be appointed, and any vacancies filled, in the manner provided by the constitution.

The industrial court shall be a court of record, and shall cause to be made a seal, and to be sealed therewith all orders, processes, and papers made by or proceeding from the court and requiring a seal. All notices, orders, and processes of said court may run into any county and be returnable as the court may direct. Citations, orders of notice, and all other processes issuing from the court shall bear test of the chief justice and be under the seal of the court and signed by the clerk.

The industrial court may appoint a clerk, a stenographer, and such other assistants, and upon such salaries, as may be approved by the governor and council.

The industrial court shall hold its sittings in Boston, but may adjourn from time to time to such other places as the public service may require. In the county of Suffolk the board of aldermen of the city of Boston, and in other counties the county commissioners, shall provide suitable rooms for the sittings of the court, and shall provide all necessary books and such printed blanks and stationery as may be ordered by the court.

Upon the request of the industrial court, or of any justice thereof, the sheriff of any county shall assign one or more deputies to attend the sittings of the court in that county.

INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS.

SEC. 2. A corporation and 10 or more of its employees may enter into an industrial agreement under this act for a term not less than six months, nor more than 2 years, fixing wages and other terms of employment not contrary to law, which industrial agreement may be filed in the principal office of the industrial court at Boston at any time after execution; and, if it be approved by the industrial court, it shall be recorded and indexed in a book kept by the clerk for that purpose.

No party to an industrial agreement which has been approved by the industrial court shall, while the agreement remains in force, petition the industrial court under the other sections of this act, with respect to the opposite party or parties.

If the industrial agreement be signed by a corporation, and by three-quarters at least of its employees in the Commonwealth, and be approved by the industrial court, no subsequent petition by the employees under the other sections of this act shall be entertained or decided by the industrial court so long as the agreement remains in force and is signed by said number of employees. Two or more agreements between the same corporation and its employees may be filed and approved, and the total number of employees who are parties to all the agreements shall be counted in deciding whether or not three-quarters of the employees have signed the agreement; but no individual shall be counted more than once.

The industrial court may approve or disapprove an industrial agreement, and may suggest such changes and alterations therein as it deems proper.

Before approving an industrial agreement the industrial court shall investigate the facts, and may enter and view the premises of the corporation in question and interrogate any of the officers, agents, or employees of said corporation.

In determining whether or not the wages and hours stated in the industrial agreement are fair, reasonable, and proper, the industrial court shall be controlled by the tests, matters, and considerations prescribed in section 5 of this act.

Disputes and controversies relating to the meaning or construction of the industrial agreement for the future action or conduct of the parties shall be heard and finally decided by the industrial court in such manner as it may determine by rules and regulations approved by the supreme judicial court or a justice thereof.

Disputes and controversies arising out of the past action or conduct of the parties under an industrial agreement shall be heard and decided by the superior court, with a right of appeal to the supreme judicial court for the Commonwealth.

JURISDICTION AND POWERS.

SEC. 3. The industrial court shall have jurisdiction throughout the Commonwealth, and, when an industrial dispute exists between a corporation and 10 or more of its employees whose sole or principal work is hand labor and who are engaged in the same kind or class or grade of work, the industrial court shall have the power—

First. To decide what shall be the minimum wage for the work performed by the employees before the court, and to enjoin the corporation before the court from paying a lower wage to any of its employees doing work of the same kind, quantity, and quality as the work performed by the employees before the court for a reasonable time in the future not exceeding two years;

Second. To decide what shall be the maximum workday for the employees before the court, and to enjoin the corporation before the court from requiring a longer workday from any of its employees doing work of the same kind, quantity, and quality as the work performed by the employees before the court for a reasonable time in the future not exceeding two years, except in cases where the legislature has fixed a maximum work time;

Third. To recommend the adoption by the parties before the court of other matters pertaining to employment, such as the services of union or nonunion workers, the time of beginning and ending work, the time and mode of payment, and the like, except where the legislature has regulated the matter.

OTHER POWERS OF INDUSTRIAL COURT.

SEC. 4. The industrial court shall also have the power—

First. To make general rules and forms for procedure from time to time, to take effect upon the approval of the supreme judicial court or a justice thereof.

Second. To issue citations, subpœnas, orders of notice, and all other processes necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Third. To hear the parties to the dispute; to compel the attendance of witnesses; to issue commissions for taking testimony; to order the production of books, papers, and documents relevant to the questions before the court; to administer oaths and affirmations.

Fourth. To cause its decisions and recommendations, together with its reasons therefor, to be published in one or more newspapers having a general circulation in the vicinity of the dispute.

Fifth. To grant rehearings and bills of review; and in general the industrial court may do any and every thing or matter necessary to give full effect to the terms and provisions of this act, in accordance with the law and practice of superior courts of record, unless otherwise provided by this act.

TESTS OF FAIR WAGES AND FAIR HOURS.

SEC. 5. In determining the minimum wage the industrial court shall, as far as practicable, regard the capital and labor employed in the corporate business as a partnership, in which each partner shall be entitled to share in the joint product in proportion to the industrial value contributed by that partner toward the whole value of the product, and shall endeavor to preserve the American standard of living, and to secure to labor its fair participation in the increasing productivity of labor rendered possible by the advance of science and invention and machinery.

The industrial court may also consider the past and present business and future prospects for business of the corporation in question; the existence or nonexistence of foreign competition; the increasing or decreasing purchasing power of the dollar; the cost of living in the locality according to the American standard of living, and any other matters tending to show what wages are fair, just, and reasonable.

In determining the maximum workday the industrial court shall take into consideration the effect upon the health, welfare, or safety of the employees caused by working under the conditions of employment furnished by the corporation in question, and any other matters tending to show how many hours of labor are best adapted to the existing conditions.

PROHIBITED POWERS.

SEC. 6. The industrial court shall not have the power to compel employees to work, nor to punish them for refusing to work for any cause, or for working for any person or corporation, or at such wages or hours as they prefer, nor to issue injunctions against workmen.

The industrial court shall not have the power to compel corporations or capitalists or individuals to carry on business or works of any kind, nor to punish them for refusing to do so for any cause, or for employing such workers as are willing to work for them, nor to issue injunctions against them, except as provided in section 3 of this act.

THE PETITION.

SEC. 7. The proceedings shall be instituted by petition addressed to the industrial court, and shall be filed in the principal office of the industrial court at Boston within three months after a strike or lockout arises, or other industrial disturbance or dispute occurs.

The petition shall be brought by or on behalf of—

First. Ten or more employees of the same corporation whose sole or principal work is hand labor, and 10 of whom at least are engaged in the same kind or class or grade of work; or by

Second. The corporate employer, acting through its president or board of directors; or by Third. The governor of the Commonwealth or the mayor of the city or the selectmen of the town in which the industrial dispute exists.

If the aggrieved employees are members of any labor union or association duly organized under the laws of the Commonwealth, the names of such employees need not be disclosed in the petition, nor until the hearing of the dispute, if the president or secretary of such labor union or association certifies under oath that 10 or more members of such labor union or association have authorized him in writing to act on their behalf, in which case the president or secretary may sign the petition on their behalf, stating his official character and the number of employees that he represents, and the kind or class or grade of work performed by each employee, and such certificate shall be filed with the petition.

The jurisdiction of the industrial court shall not be ousted or defeated by the discharge or lockout of the employees after the industrial dispute arises, if the petition be brought within four weeks after the discharge or lockout occurs.

The petition shall state the names and post-office addresses of all the parties, so far as known, and shall state the cause or causes of the dispute, and the kind of work performed by each employee, and other matters, in accordance with the rules and forms adopted by the industrial court.

As soon as may be after the filing of said petition the clerk of the industrial court shall give notice in writing to all the parties by mail or by publication in a newspaper, appointing a time and place for a hearing before the industrial court, and the clerk's certificate that he has given notice by mail or by publication, as directed by the court, shall be filed in the case before the hearing, and shall be conclusive proof of the facts stated therein.

In addition to notice by mail or by publication, the petitioners shall cause a citation from the court to be served upon each respondent named in the petition by an officer qualified by law to serve legal process three days at least before the day set for the hearing.

When the petition is brought by the governor or other public officer named above the citation need not be served upon more than 10 of the employees, and shall be served upon the president, secretary, or other officer of each corporate employer named in the petition.

No petition, however, shall be dismissed on account of insufficient or defective notice or service, but may be continued, and further notice or service made as directed by the industrial court.

If the respondents accept service or notice, or appear at the hearing, or enter an appearance in the proceedings, this shall be sufficient, if the clerk has given notice by mail or by publication as above directed, and no citation need be served upon said respondents.

New parties, either as petitioners or as respondents, may be joined or added to the petition at any time before the final hearing.

The industrial court is hereby authorized in its discretion to decline to hear or to decide and to continue or dismiss a petition brought by employees, if satisfied that the petitioners, or any of them, within three months before the filing of the petition, or during the pendency of the petition, have, first, taken part in a strike; or, second, committed acts of violence; or, third, broken an industrial agreement then in force between the parties.

METHODS OF ENFORCING THE ACT.

SEC. 8. The superior court is hereby given jurisdiction and power to try corporations charged with violating the decisions or the injunctions of the industrial court by paying less than the minimum wage, or by requiring work for a longer time than the maximum workday, established by the industrial court.

The charge shall be made by indictment found, or by information in the name of the attorney general, or by complaint filed in the superior court within and for the county in which the offense is committed, or in which the corporation does business, within three months after the alleged offense is committed.

The accused corporation shall be entitled to a trial by jury in the superior court, and to take an appeal or exceptions on questions of law to the supreme judicial court for the Commonwealth in accordance with the law and practice in criminal cases.

If the corporation be found guilty, the superior court shall impose a fine of not more than $100, if it be the first conviction under this act; of not less than $50 nor more than $500, if it be the second conviction under this act; of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, if it be the third or subsequent conviction under this act; and if there be repeated or serious or willful violations of the decisions of the industrial court, the superior court may appoint a receiver to take charge of the business, or may prohibit the corporation from doing business in the Commonwealth for a reasonable time not exceeding one year, and for disregarding the orders, judgments, or decrees of the superior court, the superior court may commit the guilty person for contempt, and may impose appropriate fines upon the corporation.

If an industrial agreement be violated by the corporate employer and by a majority of the employees, parties thereto, the industrial court, after a hearing thereon, is hereby authorized to cancel the industrial agreement and to declare that it shall not be binding any longer upon any party; but such action and cancellation by order of the industrial court shall not affect the rights, remedies, or liabilities of any person for breaches of the industrial agreement which occurred before such action or cancellation.

If an industrial agreement be violated by any party or parties thereto, the opposite party or parties, if damaged thereby, may apply to the industrial court to be discharged from further liability to the party or parties alleged to have committed the breach of the industrial agreement, and after a hearing on this matter the industrial court is hereby authorized to discharge or relieve the innocent parties from further liability to the guilty parties; but such action of the industrial court shall not affect the rights, remedies, or liabilities of the parties for breaches of the industrial agreement which occurred before the parties are discharged or relieved of further liability by order of the industrial court.

In all other matters over which the industrial court is given jurisdiction by this act the industrial court may enforce its orders or decisions in the same manner as decrees are enforced in equity in the superior court; but no court shall have power to enforce the recommendations of the industrial court, nor to punish any person or corporation for refusing or neglecting to adopt said recommendations.

APPEALS.

SEC. 9. No appeal from or review of the decisions of the industrial court relating to questions of the reasonableness of the wages or hours fixed by the court shall be allowed, and the decisions of the industrial court upon these questions of fact shall be final and conclusive in all other courts

Questions of law arising in the industrial court may be taken to the supreme judicial court for the Commonwealth in the manner provided by law for suits in equity in the superior court.

CONTRACTS.

SEC. 10. No contract made in good faith and binding on both sides before the passage of this act shall be subject to the terms or provisions of this act, but all contracts made after the passage of this act shall be subject to its terms and provisions.

All contracts made for the purpose of evading, defeating, or impairing the jurisdiction, powers, or duties of the industrial court, or for waiving or relinquishing the benefit of this act, shall be null and void, and shall be disregarded by the industrial court.

COSTS.

SEC. 11. Costs in the industrial court shall be allowed in the discretion of the industrial court and shall be taxed as in the superior court sitting in equity; but the taxable costs shall not exceed $100 for either side, and no employee shall be liable to pay, nor entitled to receive, more than $10 as costs.

If the petition be brought by the governor of the Commonwealth, or by the mayor of a city, or by the selectmen of a town, no costs shall be allowed.

WITNESSES AND EXPERTS.

SEC. 12. Witnesses before the industrial court shall be summoned in the same way and shall be entitled to the same fees, and shall be subject to the same liabilities and penalties, and in all other respects shall stand upon the same footing as witnesses before the superior court in civil cases.

No witness shall be excused from testifying or from producing books, papers, or documents in his custody, possession, or control upon the ground that his testimony or the contents of said books, papers, or documents would tend to criminate himself; but any witness who, after he has stated said objection to the industrial court, is ordered by the industrial court to answer the questions, and does answer said questions, or to produce such books, papers, or documents, and does produce them, shall be free from subsequent prosecution for the crime or offense committed by said witness and evidenced by his testimony or by said books, papers, or documents, and this act shall constitute a complete and absolute bar and defense to any such prosecution.

When the industrial court considers it advisable it may appoint one or more persons skilled in the business or trade involved in the dispute before the court as experts to assist the court with their technical knowledge.

The fees of said experts shall be fixed by the industrial court, subject to the approval of the governor and council, and shall be paid by the county in which the industrial dispute arises.

Whoever knowingly swears falsely to any statement required to be made under oath by this act shall be guilty of perjury, and liable to the statutory penalties for perjury

LIMITATIONS OF THE ACT.

SEC. 13. This act shall not apply to charitable or benevolent corporations and their employees, nor to the Commonwealth and its employees, nor to the United States and their employees.

When a receiver, trustee, or other public officer is in charge of the business or affairs of a corporation, the terms of this act shall apply to such officer and his employees.

Any person who or corporation which purchases or leases or takes possession of the property or business or franchise of a corporation with notice of, or with reasonable cause to believe that, an industrial dispute exists between said corporation and its employees, shall be subject to the terms and penalties of this act.

SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 14. This act may be cited for all purposes as the industrial court act of 1902.

THE NEW ZEALAND INDUSTRIAL CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION ACT OF AUGUST 31, 1894, WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE AMENDING ACTS OF OCTOBER 18, 1895, OCTOBER 17, 1896, AND NOVEMBER 5, 1898, INCORPORATED.

An act to facilitate the settlement of industrial disputes by conciliation and arbitration. August 31, 1894. (The words "to encourage the formation of industrial unions and associations and" appearing immediately after the word "act" in the principal act were suppressed by the amendment act, 1898.)

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of New Zealand in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. The short title of this act is "The industrial conciliation and arbitration act, 1894." It shall come into force on the 1st day of January, 1895.

2. In this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

"Association" means an industrial association registered pursuant to this act.

"Board" means a board of conciliation for an industrial district constituted under this act, and includes a special board of conciliation.

"Court" means the court of arbitration constituted under this act.

"Employer" includes persons, firms, companies, and corporations employing workers. (The principal act uses the word "workmen." The amendment act, 1895, provides that the word "workers" shall be substituted for "workmen" throughout the act.)

"Industrial dispute" means any dispute arising between one or more employers or industrial unions, trade-unions, or associations of employers and one or more industrial unions, trade-unions, or associations of workers in relation to industrial matters as herein defined.

"Industrial matters" means all matters or things affecting or relating to work done or to be done, or the privileges, rights, or duties of employers or workers in any industry, and not involving questions which are or may be the subject of proceedings for an indictable offense, and, without limiting the general nature of the above definition, includes all or any matters relating to—

(a) The wages allowances, or remuneration of any persons employed in any industry, or the prices paid or to be paid therein in respect of such employment.

(b) The hours of employment, sex, age, qualification, or status of workers, and the mode, terms, and conditions of employment.

(c) The employment of children or young persons, or of any person or persons or class of persons in any industry, or the dismissal of or refusal to employ any particular person or persons or class of persons therein.

(d) Any established custom or usage of any industry, either generally or in the particular district affected.

(e) Any claim arising under an industrial agreement.

"Industrial union" means an industrial union registered and incorporated under this act.

"Industry" means any business, trade, manufacture, undertaking, calling, or employment of an industrial character.

"Officer" of a trade-union, industrial union, or association of workers means only the president, vice president, secretary, or treasurer of such body.

"Prescribed manner" means the manner prescribed by regulations made pursuant to this act.

"Registrar" means the registrar of friendly societies.

"Supreme court office" means the office of the supreme court in the district constituted under "The supreme court act, 1882," wherein any matter arises to which such expression relates; and where there are two such offices in any such district, it means that one of such offices which is nearest to the place or locality wherein any such matter arises.

"Trade-union" means any trade-union registered under "The trade-union act, 1878."

Words in this act referring to any clerk, person, officer, office, place, locality, union, association, or other matter or thing shall be construed distributively as referring to each clerk, person, officer, office, place, locality, union, association, or matter or thing to whom or to which the provision is applicable.

PART I.

REGISTRATION OF INDUSTRIAL UNIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

(1) Industrial unions.

3. A society consisting of any number of persons, not being less than five (changed from seven in the principal act to five by the amendment act, 1895), residing within the colony, lawfully associated for the purpose of protecting or furthering the interests of employers or workers in or in connection with any industry in the colony, and whether formed before or after the passing of this act, may be registered as an industrial union pursuant to this act on compliance with the following provisions:

(1) An application for registration, stating the name of the proposed industrial union, shall be made to the registrar, signed by two or more officers of the society.

(2) Such application shall be accompanied by (a) a list of the members and officers of the society; (b) two copies of the rules of the society; (c) a copy of a resolution passed by a majority of the members present at a general meeting of the society specially called in accordance with the rules for that purpose only, and desiring registration as an industrial union.

(3) Such rules shall specify the purposes for which the society is formed, and shall provide for—

(a) The appointment of a committee of management, a chairman, secretary, and any other necessary officers, or, if thought fit, of a trustee or trustees; and for supplying any vacancy occurring through any cause prescribed by the rules, or by death or resignation.

(b) The powers, duties, and removal of the committee, and of any chairman, secretary, or other officer or trustee of the society, and the control of the committee by general or special meetings.

(c) The manner of calling general or special meetings, the quorum thereat, and the manner of voting thereat.

(d) The mode in which industrial agreements and any other instruments shall be made, and by whom executed on behalf of the society, and in what manner the society shall be represented in any proceedings before a board or the court.

(e) The custody and use of the seal, including power to alter or renew the same.

(f) The control of the property of the society, and the investment of the funds thereof, and for an annual or other periodical audit of the accounts.

(g) The inspection of the books and the names of members of the society by every person having an interest in the funds thereof.

(h) A register of members, and the mode in which and the terms on which persons shall become or cease to be members, and so that no member shall discontinue his membership without giving at least three months' previous written notice to the secretary of intention so to do, nor until such member has paid all fees or other dues payable by him to the union under its rules, and which fees or dues, in so far as they are owing for any period of membership subsequent to the registration of the society under this act, may be sued for and recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction by any person or authority empowered to do so by law or by such rules.

(i) The conduct of the business of the society at some convenient address, to be specified, and to be called the registered office of the society.

4. (1) The rules may also provide for any other matters not contrary to law, and for their amendment, repeal, or alteration, but so that the requisites of subsection 3 of the last preceding section shall always be provided for.

(2) Copies of all amendments or alterations of any rules shall, after being verified by the secretary or some other officer of the society, be sent to the registrar, who shall record the same.

(3) A printed copy of the rules of the society shall be delivered by the society to any person requiring the same on payment of a sum not exceeding 1s (24 cents).

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 3 of the principal act, it is hereby enacted as follows: Where a copartnership firm is a member of any such society, each individual partner residing in New Zealand shall be deemed an individual member of the society, and also of the industrial union when such society is registered as a union; any incorporated or registered company may be registered as an industrial union of employers. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895. The clause making five the minimum membership of an industrial union is not reproduced, as the change has already been noted.)

Each industrial union shall be deemed to be in the industrial district wherein its registered office is situate, and shall exercise its right of voting at the election of the board of that district accordingly, or in any industrial district in which such industrial union shall carry on its business, or any branch or part of its business; and for such purpose any such union may also be registered in any or every of such industrial district or districts. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment acts of 1895 and 1896, the latter amending the former by adding the part beginning with "or in any industrial district," etc.)

In the case of any incorporated or registered company, the directors shall sufficiently represent the members for the purpose of the application to register as an industrial union of employers, and the resolution prescribed by subsection 1 of section 3 of the principal act may accordingly be a resolution of the directors. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

5. On being satisfied that the provisions of section 3 in relation to an application for registration have been complied with, the registrar shall register the society, without fee, as an industrial union pursuant to the application, and shall issue a certificate of registry and incorporation, which, unless proved to have been canceled, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact of such registration and incorporation and of the validity thereof.

6. Upon receiving such certificate every such industrial union shall become a body corporate, by the registered name, having perpetual succession until dissolved or the registration thereof is canceled as hereinafter provided and shall have a common seal. There shall be inserted in the registered name of every industrial union the word "employers" or "workers," according to whether such union shall be a union of employers or workers, as thus: The Bootmakers' Industrial Union of Workers.

7. Any industrial union may purchase or take on lease, in the name of the union or of trustees for such union, any house or building, and any land, and may sell, mortgage, exchange, or let the same, or any part thereof; and no purchaser, assignee, mortgagee, or tenant shall be bound to inquire whether the union or the trustees have authority for such sale, mortgage, exchange, or letting; and the receipt of such trustees shall be a discharge for the money arising therefrom.

8. Any trade-union registered under "The trade-union act, 1878," may be registered by the same name (with the insertion of such additional words as aforesaid) under this act by making application to the registrar for the purpose; and the registrar shall register such trade-union as an industrial union accordingly, and issue a certificate of registration and incorporation as hereinbefore provided.

For the purposes of this act every branch of a trade-union shall be considered as a distinct union, and may be separately registered as an industrial union under this act; and the rules for the time being of any trade-union, with such addition or modification as may be necessary to give effect to this act, shall be deemed to be the rules of the industrial union when registered under this enactment: Provided, That the registrar shall not refuse to register a trade-union the rules of which contain such addition or modification as aforesaid unless such rules are distinctly contrary to some express provision of this act.

9. No industrial union shall be registered under a name identical with that by which any other industrial union has been registered under this act, or by which any other trade-union has been registered under "the trade-union act, 1878," or so near resembling any such name as to be likely to deceive the members or the public.

10. The effect of registration shall be to render the industrial union, and all persons who may be members of any society or trade-union registered as an industrial union at the time of registration, or who after such registration may become members of any society or trade-union so registered, subject to the jurisdiction by this act given to a board and the court, respectively, and liable to all the provisions of this act, and all such persons shall be bound by the rules of the industrial union during the continuance of the membership.

11. Any industrial union may at any time apply to the registrar in the prescribed manner for a cancellation of the registration thereof, and the registrar, after giving six weeks' public notice of his intention so to do, may cancel such registration; but no registration shall be canceled during the progress of any conciliation or arbitration affecting such union until the board or court has given its decision or made its award, nor in any case unless the registrar shall be satisfied that the cancellation is desired by a majority of the members of the union; and no cancellation of any registration shall relieve any industrial union, or any member thereof from the obligation of any industrial agreement or award of the court.

(2) Industrial associations.

12. Any council or other body, however designated, representing any number of industrial unions established within the colony may be registered as an industrial association pursuant to this act.

All the provisions of this act hereinbefore contained in sections 3 to 11, inclusive, shall, mutatis mutandis, extend and apply to an industrial association, and shall be read and construed accordingly, so far as applicable.

(3) General.

13. In the months of January and July in every year there shall be forwarded to the registrar by every association a list of the unions constituting such association; and in the same months in every year there shall be forwarded to the registrar by every industrial union a list of the members of such union. Each such list shall be verified by the statutory declaration of the president or chairman of each such association and union, and such statutory declaration shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein set forth.

Each such list shall specify the names of all the officers (including trustees) of each such association or union. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895.)

14. Every association or industrial union making default in forwarding to the registrar any list required to be forwarded by the last preceding section shall be guilty of an offense against this act, punishable by a penalty not exceeding £2 [$9.73] for every week during which such default continues; and every member of the council of any such association or committee of any such union who willfully permits such default shall be guilty of a similar offense, punishable by a penalty not exceeding 5s. [$1.22] for every week during which he willfully permits such default.

15. Every association or industrial union may sue or be sued for the purposes of this act by the name by which it is registered, and service of any process, notice, or document of any kind may be effected by delivering the same to the chairman or secretary of such union or association, or by leaving the same at the registered office of such union or association.

16. All deeds and instruments of any kind which the union or association is required to execute for the purposes of this act, or any regulations in force thereunder, may be made and executed under the seal of such union or association and signed by the chairman and secretary thereof, or in such other manner as may be provided in the rules of the union or association.

PART II.

INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS.

17. The parties to industrial agreements may be (1) trade-unions, (2) industrial unions, (3) industrial associations, (4) employers; and any such agreement may provide for any matter or thing affecting any industrial matter, or in relation thereto, or for the prevention or settlement of an industrial dispute.

18. Every industrial agreement may be varied, renewed, or canceled by any subsequent industrial agreement made by and between the parties thereto, or any additional parties, but so that no person shall be deprived of the benefit of any industrial agreement to which he is a party by any subsequent industrial agreement to which he is not a party.

19. Every industrial agreement shall be for a term to be specified therein not exceeding three years from the date of the making thereof, and shall commence as follows: "This agreement, made in pursuance of 'the industrial conciliation and arbitration act, 1894,' this — day of ———, between ———," and then set out the matters agreed upon; and the date of the making of such agreement shall be the date when such agreement shall be first signed or executed by any party thereto; and such date, and the names of all industrial unions, trade-unions, associations, or employers parties to such agreement shall be truly stated therein.

20. A duplicate of every industrial agreement shall be filed in the supreme court office within 30 days of the making thereof, and a fee of 5s. [$1.22] shall be paid in respect of every agreement so filed.

21. Every industrial agreement duly made and executed shall be binding on the parties thereto and on every person who at any time during the term of such agreement is a member of any industrial union, trade-union, or association party thereto, and on every employer who shall in the prescribed manner signify to the registrar of the supreme court where such agreement is filed concurrence therein, and every such employer shall be entitled to the benefit thereof and be deemed to be a party thereto.

22. (1) For the purpose of enforcing industrial agreements, whether made before or after the coming into operation of this act, the provisions of the last preceding section hereof [see secs. 75–81] shall, mutatis mutandis, apply in like manner in all respects as if an industrial agreement were an award of the court, and the court shall accordingly have full and exclusive jurisdiction to deal therewith. (The provisions of this paragraph are in substitution of the provisions of subsection (1) of sec. 22 and sec. 23 of the principal act, according to the amendment act, 1898.)

(2) Any industrial agreement may fix and determine what shall constitute a breach of an agreement within the meaning of this act.

(3) Nothing herein contained shall deprive any person who may be damnified of his right of action for redress or compensation in respect of any breach of an agreement.

23. [Repealed by the amendment act, 1898. See footnote to sec. 22.]

PART III.

CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION.

(1) Preliminary.

24. (1) The governor may from time to time divide New Zealand, or any portion thereof, into such districts as he shall think fit, to be called "industrial districts," and notice of the constitution of every such district shall be given in the Gazette as occasion requires.

(2) If any such district is constituted by reference to or be included within the limits or boundaries of any other portion of the colony defined or created under any act, then, in case of the alteration of the boundaries of such portion of the colony, such alteration shall take effect in respect of the district constituted under this section without any further proceeding, unless the governor shall otherwise determine.

25. In and for every industrial district the governor shall appoint a clerk of awards (hereinafter referred to as "the clerk"), who shall be attached to the office of the registrar, and shall be subject to the control and direction of that officer, and shall in the prescribed manner report to the registrar all proceedings taken or done by or before him.

The office of clerk may be held either separately or in conjunction with any other office in the public service, as the governor may determine, and he shall be paid such salary or other remuneration as the governor thinks fit.

26. It shall be the duty of the clerk—

(1) To receive, register, and deal with all applications within his district lodged for reference of any industrial dispute to the board for the district or to the court.

(2) To convene the board or court for the purpose of dealing with any such dispute.

(3) To keep a register, in which shall be entered the particulars of all references and settlements of industrial disputes made to and by the board, and of all references and awards made to and by the court.

(4) To issue all summonses to witnesses to give evidence before the board or court, and to issue all notices and perform all other acts in connection with the sittings of the board or court in the prescribed manner.

(5) Generally to do all such things and to take all such proceedings as may be required in the performance of his duties by this act or in the prescribed manner, or, in the absence of regulations, with the directions of the registrar.

27. Any board and the court, and, being authorized in writing by the board or court, any member of such board or court, respectively, or any officer or such board or court, without any other warrant than this act, at any time between sunrise and sunset—

(1) May enter upon any manufactory, building, workshop, factory, mine, mine workings, ship or vessel, shed, place, or premises of any kind whatsoever, wherein or in respect of which any industry is carried on or any work is being or has been done or commenced, or any matter or thing is taking or has taken place, which has been made the subject of a reference to such board or court.

(2) May inspect and view any work, material, machinery, appliances, article, matter, or thing whatsoever being in such manufactory, building, workshop, factory, mine, mine workings, ship or vessel, shed, place, or premises as aforesaid.

(3) May interrogate any person or persons who may be in or upon any such manufactory, building, workshop, factory, mine, mine workings, ship or vessel, shed, place, or premises, as aforesaid, in respect of or in relation to any matter or thing hereinbefore mentioned.

And any person who shall hinder or obstruct the board or court, or any member or officer thereof, respectively, in the exercise of any power conferred by this section, or who shall refuse to the board or court, or any member or officer thereof, respectively, duly authorized as aforesaid, entrance during any such time as aforesaid to any such manufactory, building, workshop, factory, mine, mine workings, ship or vessel, shed, place, or premises, or shall refuse to answer any question put to him as aforesaid, shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty not exceeding £50 [$243.33].

28. The following persons shall be disqualified from being appointed or elected or from holding office as chairman or as a member of any board, or as president or a member of the court, and if so elected or appointed shall be incapable of continuing to be such member, president, or chairman:

(1) A bankrupt who has not obtained his final order of discharge;

(2) Any person convicted of any crime for which the punishment is death or imprisonment with hard labor for a term of three years or upwards; or

(3) Any person of unsound mind.

No person whilst holding a seat on one board shall hereafter be eligible for nomination or election to a seat on any other board, and if he is so elected his election shall be void. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

If any person allows himself to be nominated for election as member of more boards than one, both nominations shall be void. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

In the event of any person's election becoming void under this section, the governor shall fill the vacancy by appointment, in the same manner as if the prescribed number of members had not been elected, anything in section 36 of the principal act to the contrary notwithstanding. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

This section shall apply both to boards of conciliation and to special boards of conciliators inter se, but shall not otherwise affect the operation of section 41 of the principal act, nor shall it in any way affect any election held before the coming into operation of this act. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

29. Whenever an industrial dispute shall be referred to a board or the court as hereinafter provided, no industrial union or association, trade-union, or society, whether of employers or workers, and no employer who may be a party to the proceedings before the board or court, shall, on account of such industrial dispute, do any act or thing in the nature of a strike or lockout, or suspend or discontinue employment or work in any industry affected by such proceedings, but each party shall continue to employ or be employed, as the case may be, until the board or court shall have come to a final decision in accordance with this act. But nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any suspension or discontinuance of any industry, or from working therein, for any other good cause.

No industrial dispute shall be referred for settlement to a board by an industrial association, industrial union, or trade-union, and no application shall be made to the court for the enforcement of any award, except in pursuance of a resolution passed by a majority of the members present at a meeting specially summoned by notice being posted to each member, stating the nature of the proposal to be submitted to the meeting. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

(2) Boards of conciliation.

30. In and for every industrial district there shall be established a board of conciliation, to have jurisdiction for the settlement of industrial disputes occurring in such district which may be referred to it by one or more of the parties to an industrial dispute or by industrial agreement.

31. The governor may determine the number of persons who (together with the chairman) shall compose the board of such district, subject, however, to the express provisions of this act, and such number shall be stated in the notice of the constitution of the district.

32. With respect to the first and subsequent elections of boards, the following provisions shall have effect:

(1) Every board shall consist of such equal number of persons as the governor may determine, being not more than six nor less than four persons, who shall be chosen by the industrial unions of employers and of workers in the industrial district, respectively, such unions voting separately and electing an equal number of such members.

(2) The chairman of such board shall be in addition to the number of members before mentioned, and be elected as hereinafter provided.

(3) Every board shall be elected in the following manner:

(a) The clerk shall act as returning officer and do the acts and things hereinafter mentioned.

(b) First elections of a board shall be held within 30 days after the constitution of the district, and the returning officer shall give 14 days' notice in one or more newspapers circulating in the district of the day and place of election, which shall be so arranged that the industrial unions of employers shall vote at one time and the industrial unions of workers at another time on the day fixed: Provided, That the governor may from time to time extend the period within which any elections shall be held for such time as he thinks fit.

(c) Persons shall be nominated for election in such manner as the rules of the industrial union may prescribe, or, if there be no such rule, nominations shall be made in writing by the chairman of the union, and lodged with the returning officer at least three days before the date of election. Each nomination shall be accompanied by the written consent of the person nominated, and forms of nomination shall be provided by the returning officer on application to him for that purpose.

(d) When all the nominations have been received the returning officer shall give notice of the names of persons nominated by affixing a list thereof on the door of his office at least one clear day before the day of election.

(e) If it shall appear that no greater number of persons are nominated than required to be elected, the returning officer shall at once declare such persons elected.

If the number of persons so nominated exceeds the number required to be elected, then votes shall be taken as hereinafter provided.

(f) The returning officer shall preside at the election by each division of industrial unions entitled to vote, and the vote of each such union shall be signified in writing in the prescribed manner, and on being tendered by the chairman of the union, or by some person appointed by the union for that purpose in accordance with its rules, the returning officer shall record the vote in such manner as he thinks fit.

(g) Each industrial union shall have as many votes as there are persons to be elected by its division, and the persons having the highest aggregate number of votes in such division, not exceeding the number to be elected, shall be deemed elected.

(h) If it shall happen that two or more candidates have an equal number of votes, the returning officer, in order to complete the election, shall give such votes to one or more of such candidates as he thinks fit: Provided, That any candidate may in any such case agree to withdraw from the election.

(i) As soon as possible after the votes of each division of industrial unions have been recorded the returning officer shall ascertain what persons have been elected as before provided, and shall state the result in writing, and forthwith post the same in some public place at the place of election.

(j) In case of any dispute touching the sufficiency of the nomination, the mode of election, or the result thereof, or any matter incidentally arising in or in respect of such election, the same shall be decided by the returning officer, whose decision shall be final.

(k) In case any election is not completed for any cause on the day appointed, the returning officer may adjourn the election, or the completion thereof, to the next or any subsequent day, and may then proceed with the election.

(l) The whole of the voting papers shall be securely kept by the returning officer during the election, and thereafter shall be put in a packet and kept for one month, when he shall cause the whole of them to be effectually destroyed.

(m) Neither the returning officer nor any person employed by him shall (except in discharge of his duty) disclose for whom any vote has been given or tendered, either before or after the election is completed, or retain possession of or exhibit any voting paper used at the election, or give any information to any person as to all or any of the matters herein mentioned; and if any person shall commit a breach of this provision, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £20 [$97.33].

But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to forbid the disclosure of any fact or the doing of any act hereby prohibited if the same be required in obedience to the process of any court of law.

(4) The clerk shall, after the completion of the election, appoint a day for the first meeting of the members elected, and shall give at least three days' notice in writing to each member. At such meeting the members shall elect some impartial person, not being one of their number and willing to act, to be chairman of the board.

33. As soon as may be after the election of the chairman the clerk shall transmit to the governor a list of the names of the respective persons elected as members and as chairman of the board, and the governor shall cause notice thereof to be published in the Gazette, and the date on which such notice is so published shall be deemed to be the date of election, and such notice shall be final and conclusive for all purposes.

34. The members of the board and the chairman shall hold office for the period of three years from the date of the publication of such notice in the Gazette, and until their successors are elected.

35. On the expiration of every third year after the first election of members of a board or a chairman thereof a new election shall be held, on such day as the governor may appoint, and new members and a chairman shall be elected in the manner hereinbefore provided in respect of first elections. Any retiring member or chairman shall be eligible for reelection, and all proceedings in and about such new election may be had and taken accordingly.

36. If the chairman or any member of a board shall die, resign, or be disqualified or incapable to act, his office shall be vacant, and the vacancy shall be supplied in the same manner as the original election was made, and the person so elected shall hold office in the board only for the residue of the term of his predecessor therein. Members shall resign office by letter addressed to the chairman, and the chairman by letter to the board.

37. Upon any casual vacancy being reported to the clerk in the office of a member of a board, he shall take all such proceedings as may be necessary to have an election by the class of industrial union entitled to vote in the election of such member, and the provisions as to general elections shall apply accordingly, as far as applicable. In the case of a casual vacancy in the office of chairman, the board shall meet on such day and time as they may appoint and elect a chairman to supply such vacancy.

38. (1) The presence of the chairman and of not less than one-half in number of the other members of a board shall be necessary to constitute a quorum.

(2) But in case of the illness or absence of a chairman the members may elect one of their own number to be chairman during such illness or absence.

(3) In all matters coming before any board the decision of the board shall be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present, exclusive of the chairman, except in the case of an equality of such votes, in which case only the chairman shall vote, and his vote shall decide the question.

39. If at any time the industrial unions entitled to vote shall neglect or refuse to vote at the election of a member of the board, whether in respect of a general election or a casual vacancy, or if the members of a board shall neglect or refuse to elect a chairman, the governor may in any such case appoint such fitting persons as members of the board or as chairman as may be necessary in any case to give effect to this act.

It and as often as for any reason the prescribed number of members of the board is not duly elected or the prescribed number of members of the court is not duly recommended, as provided by the principal act, the governor shall, by notice in the Gazette, appoint as many fit persons to be members of the board or court as may be necessary in order to make the prescribed number. The Gazette notice of such appointment shall be conclusive evidence of the happening of the events entitling the governor to make such appointment. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act 1895.)

Every person appointed by the governor to be member or chairman of a board shall be deemed to be elected within the meaning and for the purposes of section 33 of the principal act. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

This section shall take effect as from the date of the coming into force of the principal act. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

40. (1) No act of a board shall be questioned on the ground of any informality in the election of a member, nor on the ground that the seat of any member is vacant, or that any supposed member thereof is incapable of being a member.

(2) In the event of the period of office of any board expiring whilst such board is engaged in the investigation of any industrial dispute, the governor may, by notice in the Gazette, continue such board in office for any time not exceeding one month, in order to enable its members to take part in the settlement of such dispute, and on the expiration of such month an election of a new board shall be held in the manner hereinbefore provided.

41. (1) Notwithstanding the election of a board under the provisions hereinbefore contained, or where no district shall have been constituted, a special board of conciliators may be appointed from time to time to meet any case of emergency or any special case of industrial dispute. Such board shall consist of an equal number of persons, not exceeding six, all or any of whom may be members of the board of the district, and shall be chosen separately in equal numbers by employers and industrial unions of employers directly interested in such dispute and by industrial unions of workers so interested.

(2) The members of any such special board, together with a chairman, to be elected as provided in section 32, shall, except in respect of the duration of their office, be deemed to possess all the jurisdiction and powers of a board elected for an industrial district.

42. Any industrial dispute may be referred for settlement to a board, either by or pursuant to an industrial agreement or in the manner hereinafter provided:

(1) Any party to such a dispute may, in the prescribed manner, lodge an application with the clerk requesting that such dispute be referred for settlement to a board.

(2) The parties to such dispute may comprise—

(a) An individual employer, or several employers, and an industrial union, trade-union, or association of workers.

(b) An industrial union, trade-union, or association of employers, or an individual employer, or several employers, and an industrial union, trade-union, or association of workers, or several such unions or associations.

But the mention of the various kinds of parties shall not be deemed to interfere with any arrangement thereof that may be necessary to insure an industrial dispute being brought in a complete shape before the board; and a party or parties may be withdrawn or removed from the proceedings and another or others substituted after the reference to the board, and before any report is made, as the board shall allow or think best adapted for the purpose of giving effect to this act, and the board may make any recommendation or give any direction for any such purpose accordingly.

(3) An employer, being a party to a reference, may appear in person, or by his agent duly appointed in writing for that purpose, or by counsel or solicitor where allowed as hereinafter provided.

(4) An association, trade-union, or industrial union, being party to a reference, may appear by its chairman or secretary, or by any number of persons (not exceeding three) appointed in writing by the chairman of the association or union for that purpose, or by counsel or solicitor where allowed as hereinafter provided.

(5) Every party appearing by a representative or representatives shall be bound by his or their acts.

(6) The clerk, on receipt of any application for a reference to a board, shall forthwith lay the same before the board mentioned in such application at a meeting of such board, to be convened by him in the prescribed manner, and, subject to the provisions of this act, shall carry out all directions of the board in order to effect a settlement of the industrial dispute referred to it.

(7) No counsel or solicitor shall be allowed to appear or be heard before a board, or any committee thereof, unless all the parties to the reference or interested in the matter referred to a committee shall expressly consent thereto.

When any industrial dispute has been referred for settlement to a board or the court, any employer, association, trade-union, or industrial union may, on application, if the board or the court deem it equitable, be joined as party thereto at any stage of the proceedings, and on such terms as the board or the court deems equitable. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1896.)

43. Every board shall, in such manner as it shall think fit, carefully and expeditiously inquire into and investigate any industrial dispute of which it shall have cognizance, and all matters affecting the merits of such dispute or the right settlement thereof, and, for the purposes of any such inquiry, shall have all the powers of summoning witnesses, and hearing and receiving evidence, and preserving order at any inquiry, which are by this act conferred on the court of arbitration.

Whenever an industrial dispute involving technical questions is referred to a board or the court for settlement, two experts may be nominated, one by each party to the dispute; and such experts shall sit as assessors with and be deemed to be members of the board or court for the purposes of such dispute. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895.)

If there are more than two parties to any such dispute, one assessor shall be nominated by the parties whose interests are with the employers, and the other by the parties whose interests are with the workers. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895.)

The assessors shall be nominated in the prescribed manner and subject to the prescribed conditions. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895.)

Where an industrial dispute relates to employment or wages, the jurisdiction of the board or court to deal therewith shall not be voided or affected by the fact that the relationship of employer and employed has ceased to exist, unless it so ceased at least six weeks before the industrial dispute was first referred to the board or to the court, if there has been no prior reference to the board. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1895.)

44. In the course of any such inquiry and investigation the board shall make all such suggestions and do all such things as shall appear to them as right and proper to be made or done for securing a fair and amicable settlement of the industrial dispute between the parties, and may adjourn the proceedings for any period the board thinks reasonable, to allow the parties to agree upon some terms of settlement, and, if no such settlement shall be arrived at, shall decide the question according to the merits and substantial justice of the case, and make their report or recommendation in writing, under the hand of the chairman of the board, which shall be delivered to and filed by the clerk in his own office with all papers and proceedings relating to the reference. Such report shall be delivered as aforesaid within two months of the day on which the application was lodged with the clerk.

45. In particular, but without limiting the general power given to a board by the last preceding section, any board may—

(1) Refer the matters in dispute, upon such terms as the board thinks fit, to a committee of their number, consisting of an equal number of representatives of employers and workers, who shall endeavor to reconcile the parties; or

(2) Refer any matter before them to be settled by the court.

46. If the board shall report that they have been unable to bring about any settlement of any dispute referred to them satisfactory to the parties thereto, the clerk, on the receipt of such report, shall transmit a copy (certified by him) of such report to each party to the industrial dispute, whereupon any such party may, in the manner prescribed, require the clerk to refer the said dispute to the court. The clerk shall thereupon transmit all the papers and proceedings in the reference to the court.

(3) The court of arbitration.

47. There shall be one court of arbitration for the whole colony for the settlement of industrial disputes pursuant to this act. The court shall have a seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and impressions thereof admitted in evidence in all courts of judicature, and for all purposes.

48. (1) The court shall consist of three members, to be appointed by the governor, one to be so appointed on the recommendation of the councils, or a majority of the councils of the industrial associations of workers in the colony, and one to be so appointed on the recommendation of the councils, or a majority of the councils, of the industrial associations of employers of the colony: Provided, That if there shall be no industrial associations of employers, then, in their stead, such recommendation as aforesaid shall be made by the industrial unions of employers.

No recommendation shall be made as to the third member, who shall be a judge of the supreme court, and shall be appointed from time to time by the governor, and shall be president of the court, and, in case of the illness or unavoidable absence of such judge at any time, the governor may appoint some fit person, being a supreme court judge, to be and act as president, who shall hold office only during the illness or unavoidable absence of such judge.

(2) The procedure for the purpose of giving effect to this section shall be as follows:

(a) Each such council, respectively, shall, within one month after being requested so to do by the governor, submit the name of one person to the governor, and from the names of the persons so recommended the governor shall select two members, one from each set recommended, and appoint them to be members of the court.

In the event of a majority of the councils not having made recommendations as aforesaid, or in case such majority of recommendations shall not be received by the governor within the period of one month after each council has been requested to submit a name as aforesaid, or in case any person so recommended shall decline to act as a member of the court, the governor shall forthwith appoint such person as he shall think fit to be a member of the court; and such member shall be deemed to be appointed on the recommendation of the said councils, as the case may be.

(b) For the purposes of this section the expression "council" means the governing authority of the association or industrial union entitled to vote, by whatever name such authority shall be designated.

(c) As soon as practicable after a full court shall have been appointed by the governor the names of the members of the court shall be notified in the Gazette.

49. (1) Every member of the court shall hold office for three years from the date of his appointment, and shall be eligible for reappointment, and any casual vacancy occurring in the membership by death, disqualification, resignation, or removal shall be supplied in the same manner as the original appointment was made; but every person so appointed to fill a casual vacancy shall hold office only for the period that his predecessor would have held office.

(2) The governor may remove any member of the court from office who shall become bankrupt, who may be convicted of any crime the punishment of which is death or imprisonment with hard labor for a term of three years or upwards, who may become of unsound mind, or who shall be absent from three consecutive sittings of the court.

50. Before proceeding to consider any case the members, other than the presiding judge, of the court and the officers thereof shall, respectively, make a statutory declaration that any evidence produced before them shall not be disclosed to anyone except as provided by this act.

The statutory declaration prescribed by section 50 of the principal act need be taken only once, and, in the case of each member by whom it is or has been taken, it shall be deemed to apply to all evidence produced before him during his term of office. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

51. The governor may also from time to time appoint and remove such clerks and other officers of the court as shall be necessary, who shall hold office during pleasure and receive such salary or other remuneration as the governor thinks fit.

52. The court shall have jurisdiction for the settlement and determination of any industrial dispute referred to it by any board pursuant to sections 45 or 46, or by reference under section 82, or by petition under section 83, or by industrial agreement, or by either party to an industrial dispute which has arisen in a district where no board has been constituted, and for such purpose may summon any party to an industrial dispute to appear before it.

53. Either party to the dispute may appear, personally or by agent, or, with the consent of all the parties, by counsel or solicitor, and may produce before the court such witnesses, books, and documents as such party may think proper, and the court shall have power to permit any other party who has or may appear to have a common interest in the matter, and be willing to be joined in the proceedings, to be so joined on such terms as it thinks fit.

The court shall have full and exclusive jurisdiction to hear and receive evidence, on oath or otherwise, as may be allowed by law, and to hear and determine the matters in dispute in such manner as it thinks fit, and shall be at liberty to receive any such evidence as it may think fit, whether it shall be strictly legal evidence or not, with full power to adjourn the consideration of any matter, wholly or in part, for any period, or without stating any period.

Formal matters which have been proved or admitted before a board need not be again proved or admitted before the court.

54. The sittings of the court shall be held at such time and place as are from time to time fixed by the president. The sittings may be fixed either for a particular case or generally for all cases then before the court and ripe for hearing, and it shall be the duty of the clerk to give to each member of the court at least 48 hours' previous notice of the time and place of each sitting. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898, in substitution for sec. 54 of the principal act, repealed.)

55. The parties to the proceedings before the court shall be those before the board, and the provisions hereinbefore contained as to the appearance of parties before a board shall apply to proceedings before the court.

At least three days' notice shall be given to each party to the proceedings of the time and place appointed for the meeting of the court, except where a party is added to the proceedings on his own application or with his own consent.

56. The clerk may, at the request of either party, issue a summons in the prescribed manner to any person to appear and give evidence in any matter before the court, and to produce any books, deeds, papers, or writings relating to such matter, and in his possession or under his control. Such books, deeds, papers, and writings may be inspected by the members of the court for the purposes of this act, but the information obtained therefrom shall not in any form be made public. And any person upon whom any such summons shall have been served, and to whom at the same time payment or a tender of his traveling expenses on the scale hereinafter mentioned shall have been made, and who shall neglect or refuse, without sufficient cause, to appear or to produce any books, deeds, papers, or writings required by such summons to be produced, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £20 [$97.33], or in default of payment to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one month; but the payment of such fine or the undergoing of such imprisonment shall not exempt any person from liability to an action for disobeying such summons.

57. Where it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that certain parts of books or documents to be produced in evidence do not relate to the matter before the court, the party producing the same shall be allowed to seal up such parts.

58. Every person who shall be summoned and shall appear as a witness shall be entitled to an allowance or compensation for expenses and loss of time according to the scale for the time being in force and allowed to witnesses in civil suits under "the magistrates' courts act, 1893."

59. Any member of the court or the clerk shall have power to administer oaths or affirmations to all witnesses who shall appear before the court, and all willful false swearing or false affirmation in any proceedings in the court under this act shall be deemed and held to be willful perjury, and shall be indictable and punishable as such; and on any indictment it shall be sufficient to prove that the oath or affirmation was administered by such member or clerk aforesaid.

60. For the purpose of obtaining the evidence of witnesses at a distance the court shall be deemed to have and may exercise all the powers and duties of a stipendiary magistrate under "the magistrates' courts act, 1893"; and the provisions of the said act, mutatis mutandis, shall be applicable to all proceedings in the court under this act to the same extent as if the court were a magistrate's court; and every stipendiary magistrate and every magistrate's court and every clerk of such court shall for the purposes aforesaid have and may exercise all such duties and powers in respect of any matter or thing arising under this act as such stipendiary magistrate or magistrate's court or clerk, respectively, could do or be required to do under "the magistrates' courts act, 1893."

61. The court may sit and conduct its proceedings in open court, and a majority of the members present may decide and finally determine any matters referred to them in such manner as they shall find to stand with equity and good conscience.

62. If either of the members other than the president shall neglect or fail to attend a sitting of the court without good cause shown to the satisfaction of the president, the other member present and the president may, nevertheless, act as fully as if all the members were present.

63. The court may be adjourned from time to time and from place to place in manner following, that is to say: (1) By the court or the president at any sitting thereof, or, if the president is absent from such sitting, then by any other member present, or, if no member is present, then by the clerk; and (2) by the president at any time before the time fixed for the sitting and in such case the clerk shall notify the members of the court and all parties concerned. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898, in substitution for sec. 63 of the principal act, repealed.)

64. If any person shall willfully insult any member of the court or the clerk during the sitting of the court, or shall willfully interrupt the proceedings of the court, or be guilty in any other manner of any willful contempt in the face of the court, it shall be lawful for any officer of the court, with or without the assistance of any other person, to take such offender into custody and remove him from the court, to be detained in custody until the rising of the court, and the person so offending shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £10 [$48.67] for such offense, to be recovered in a summary way as hereinafter provided.

65. If any party to proceedings before the court shall, after notice given to such party, fail to attend or be represented before the court, without good cause shown to such court, the court may proceed and act as fully in the matter before it as if such party had duly attended or been represented. Any person who is a party to any such proceedings may be required to give evidence before the court in the manner hereinbefore provided with respect to a witness.

66. The court may refer any matters referred to it from time to time to a board for investigation and report, where it shall think such board may arrive more easily at a settlement thereof, and the award of the court shall be based on the report of such board.

67. The court may at any time dismiss any matter referred to it which it shall think frivolous or trivial, and any award in such case may be limited to an order upon the party bringing the matter before the court for payment of all costs of bringing the same.

In order to enable the court the more effectually to dispose of any matter before it according to the substantial merits and equities of the case, it may, at any stage of the proceedings, of its own motion, or on the application of any of the parties, and upon such terms as it thinks fit, by order, (1) direct parties to be joined or struck out; (2) amend or waive any error or defect in the proceedings; (3) extend the time within which anything is to be done by any party; and (4) generally give such directions as are deemed necessary or expedient in the premises. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

The powers by the last preceding section [paragraph] hereof conferred upon the court may, when the court is not sitting, be exercised by the president. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

68. The award of the court shall be made within one month after the court shall have begun to sit for the hearing of any reference, and shall be signed by the president of the court, and have the seal of the court attached thereto, and shall be deposited in the office of the clerk of the district wherein the reference arose, and be open to inspection without charge by all persons interested therein during office hours.

69. (1) The court in its award may order any party to pay to the other party costs and expenses (including expenses of witnesses) as it may deem reasonable, and may apportion such costs between the parties or any of them as it thinks fit, and may at any time vary or alter any such order in such manner as it thinks reasonable; and such costs or any other costs ordered by the court to be paid may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction by the party entitled thereto under the award or order of the court as a debt due from the party liable therefor; but no costs shall in any case whatever be allowed on account of any agents, counsel, or solicitor appearing for any party.

(2) The court may also order that the whole or any portion of any such costs as aforesaid shall be taxed by the proper officer of the supreme court, and such officer shall have in, about, and in relation to such taxation all such power, duty, and authority as he would have in any case within the ordinary jurisdiction of the supreme court in respect of taxation of costs.

In every case where the court in its award or other order directs the payment of costs or expenses it shall fix the amount thereof and specify the same in the award or order. Section 69 of the principal act is hereby modified in so far as it is in conflict with this section, but not further or otherwise. (This paragraph was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

70. The award shall be framed in such manner as shall best express the decision of the court, avoiding all technicality where possible, but shall state in clear terms what is or is not to be done or performed by each party or person affected by the decision, and may provide for an alternative course to be taken by any party to the proceedings, or by any person affected thereby; but no award shall be void or vitiated in any way because of any informality or want of form, or any noncompliance with the provisions of this act.

71. In all legal and other proceedings it shall be sufficient to produce the award with the seal of the court thereto, and it shall not be necessary to prove any conditions precedent entitling the court to make such award.

72. Proceedings in the court shall not be impeached or held bad for want of form, nor shall the same be removable to any court by certiorari or otherwise; and no award or proceeding of the court shall be liable to be challenged, appealed against, reviewed, quashed, or called in question by any court of judicature on any account whatsoever.

73. No proceedings in the court shall abate by reason of the death of any member of the court or of any party to such proceedings, but the same may be continued and disposed of by the successor in office of such member or legal personal representative of the party so dying.

(4) Enforcement of awards.

74. Every award of the court shall specify each industrial union, trade-union, association, person, or persons on which or on whom it is intended that it shall be binding, and the period, not exceeding two years from the making thereof, during which its provisions may be enforced; and during the period within which the provisions of such award may be enforced such award shall be binding upon every industrial union, trade-union, association, or person upon which it shall be thereby declared such award shall be binding: Provided, That if the members of any industrial union or trade-union are mentioned generally in any such award, all persons who are members at the date thereof of such award, or may thereafter become so during its subsistence, shall be included in the direction given or made by the award.

75–81. (The following provisions were substituted by the amendment act, 1898, in the place of secs. 75 to 81 of the principal act, repealed.) For the purpose of enforcing any award or order of the court, whether made before or after the coming into operation of this act, the following provisions shall apply, anything in the principal act to the contrary notwithstanding:

(1) In so far as the award itself directs the payment of money, it shall be deemed to be an order of the court, and payment shall be enforceable accordingly under the subsequent provisions of this section relating to orders of the court.

(2) If any party or person on whom the award is binding commits any breach thereof by act or default, then, subject to the provisions of the last preceding subsection hereof, any party to the awards may by application in the prescribed form apply to the court for the enforcement of the award.

(3) On the hearing of such application the court may by order either dismiss the application or impose such penalty for the breach of the award as it deems just, and in either case with or without costs.

(4) If the order imposes a penalty or costs, it shall specify the parties or persons liable to pay the same, and the parties or persons to whom the same are payable:

Provided, That the amount payable by any party or person shall not exceed £500 [$2,433]:

Provided also, That the aggregate amount of penalties and costs payable under any award shall not exceed £500 [$2,433].

(5) For the purpose of enforcing payment of the amount payable under any order of the court (not being an order under sec. 10 hereof), a certificate in the prescribed form, under the hand of the clerk and the seal of the court, specifying the amount payable and the respective persons by and to whom the same is payable, may be filed in any court having jurisdiction to the extent of such amount, and shall thereupon, according to its tenor, operate and be enforceable in all respects as a final judgment of such court in its civil jurisdiction:

Provided, That for the purpose of enforcing satisfaction of such judgment where there are two or more judgment creditors thereunder, process may be issued separately by each judgment creditor against the property of his judgment debtor in like manner as in the case of a separate and distinct judgment.

(6) All property belonging to the judgment debtor (including therein, in the case of an industrial union or trade-union, all property held by trustees for the judgment debtor) shall be available in or towards satisfaction of the judgment debt; and if the judgment debtor is an industrial union, an industrial association, or a trade-union, and its property is insufficient to fully satisfy the judgment debt, its members shall be liable for the deficiency:

Provided, That no member shall be liable for more than £10 [$48.67] under this subsection.

(7) For the purpose of giving full effect to the last preceding subsection hereof the court or the president thereof may, on the application of the judgment creditor, make such order or give such directions as are deemed necessary, and the trustees, the judgment debtor, and all other persons concerned shall obey the same.

(8) The foregoing provisions of this section are in substitution of those contained in sections 75 to 81 of the principal act, and those sections are hereby accordingly repealed.

(9) Nothing in this section contained shall affect the validity of any proceedings which at the coming into operation of this act are pending for the enforcement of any award or order of the court in so far as the same relates to the payment of money, and all such proceedings may either be continued under the principal act or be abandoned and be instituted afresh under this act; but all proceedings pending for enforcement of any award by attachment are hereby stayed, and in lieu thereof proceedings may be instituted afresh for enforcement by penalty under this section:

Provided, That the court when disposing of such fresh proceedings shall make such order as to costs as it deems just, having regard to the costs of the proceedings abandoned or stayed as aforesaid.

PART IV.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

82. The management of Government railways under "the Government railways act, 1887," shall be deemed to be an industry within the meaning of this act; and notwithstanding anything contained in the first-mentioned act, the railway commissioners appointed thereunder may make an industrial agreement with the society now registered under "the trade-union act, 1878," and called "The Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants," and either the said commissioners or the society may refer any industrial dispute between them to the court established under this act, and the commissioners may give effect to any terms of an award made by such court.

The society may be registered as an industrial union under this act, and the commissioners shall be deemed to be employers within the meaning and for the purposes of this act.

The foregoing provisions shall apply to any reconstruction of such society in case of its dissolution, and shall extend to any similar society taking the place of such first-mentioned society and registered under this act.

83. In case the commissioners shall neglect or refuse to agree with the said society to refer any industrial dispute to the court, the society may, by petition lodged with the clerk, refer such dispute to the court to hear and determine the same; and the court, upon such petition, and if it shall consider the dispute sufficiently grave to require it, may require the commissioners to appear before the court and to submit the matters in dispute to its decision; and for that purpose the court shall have all such jurisdiction and authority and may do all such acts and things as may be necessary for such purpose, in accordance with the preceding provisions of this act.

84. Notwithstanding anything in this act contained, no board constituted under this act shall have any jurisdiction in any matter of dispute between the commissioners and the said society.

PART V.

MISCELLANEOUS.

85. Any notification made or purporting to be made in the Gazette by or under the authority of this act may be given in evidence in all courts of justice, in all legal proceedings, and for any of the purposes of this act, by the production of a copy of the Gazette, printed by the Government printer for the time being.

86. Every instrument or document, copy or extract of an instrument or document, bearing the seal of the court shall be received in evidence without further proof, and the signature of the president of the court, or the chairman of any board, or of the registrar, or of the clerk of awards, shall be judicially noticed in or before any court or person or officer acting judicially or under any power or authority contained in this act: Provided, Such signature be attached to some award, order, certificate, or other official document made or purporting to be made under this act.

No proof shall be required of the handwriting or official position of any person acting in pursuance of this section.

87. The governor from time to time may make, alter, or revoke such regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary or desirable to carry out all or any of the following purposes:

(1) Prescribing the forms of certificates or other instruments to be issued by the registrar, and of any certificate or other proceeding of any board, or any officer thereof.

(2) Prescribing the duties of clerks of awards and of all other officers and persons acting in the execution of this act.

(3) Providing for anything necessary to carry out the first or any subsequent election of members of boards, or on any vacancy therein, or in the office of chairman of any board, including the forms of any notice, proceeding, or instrument of any kind to be used in or in respect of any such election.

(4) Providing for the mode in which recommendations of members of the court shall be made and authenticated.

(5) Prescribing any act or thing necessary to supplement or render more effectual the provisions of this act as to the conduct of proceedings before a board or the court, or the transfer of such proceedings from one of such bodies to the other.

(6) Providing generally for any other matter or thing necessary to give effect to this act or to meet any particular case.

(7) Prescribing what fees shall be paid in respect of any proceedings before a board or in the court, and the party by whom such fees shall be paid, and what fees shall be paid to the president or members of the court or the chairman or members of the board. (The clause "or the chairman or members of the board" was added by the amendment act, 1896.)

(8) For any other purpose for which it is by this act provided regulations may be prescribed.

Nothing in any such regulations shall supersede any fees for the time being in force in the supreme court or any other court in relation to any proceedings therein otherwise than as is herein expressly provided.

All such regulations shall be published in the Gazette, and within 14 days after the making thereof shall be laid before both houses of the general assembly if it shall be then sitting; and if not then sitting, then within 14 days after the beginning of the next session of such assembly, and shall have the force of law from the date of such publication.

88. All charges and expenses connected with the administration of this act, exclusive of expenses incurred by industrial unions, trade-unions, or associations under Parts I or II of this act, or of the parties and witnesses concerned in any industrial dispute referred to a board or the court, shall be defrayed out of such annual appropriations as shall from time to time be made for that purpose by the general assembly.

89. The court shall have full and exclusive jurisdiction to deal with all offenses against the principal act, and for the purpose of this section the following provisions shall apply:

(1) Proceedings to recover the penalty by the principal act imposed in respect of any such offense shall be taken in the court in a summary way under the summary provisions of "the justices of the peace act, 1882," and these provisions shall, mutatis mutandis, apply in like manner as if the court were a court of justices exercising summary jurisdiction under that act:

Provided, That in the case of an offense under section 64 of the principal act (relating to contempt of court) the court, if it thinks fit so to do, may deal with it forthwith without the necessity of an information being taken or a summons being issued.

(2) For the purpose of enforcing any order of the court made under this section a duplicate thereof shall, by the clerk of awards, be filed in the nearest office of the magistrate's court, and shall thereupon, according to its tenor, operate and be enforced in all respects as a final judgment, conviction, or order duly made by a stipendiary magistrate under the summary provisions of "the justices of the peace act, 1882."

(3) The provisions of section 73 of the principal act shall apply to all proceedings under this section.

(4) All penalties recovered under this section shall be paid into the public account and form part of the consolidated fund.

(5) The foregoing provisions of this section are in substitution of those contained in section 89 of the principal act, and that section is hereby accordingly repealed.

(6) Nothing in this section contained shall apply to the breach of any award or order of the court or to the penalty in respect of such breach. (This section was inserted by the amendment act, 1898.)

90. No stamp duty shall be payable upon or in respect of any registration, certificate, agreement, award, or instrument effected, issued, or made under this act. But nothing herein shall apply to the fees of any court payable by means of stamps.

91. Nothing in this act shall apply to Her Majesty the Queen or any department of her Government in New Zealand, except as herein is otherwise expressly provided.

CHAPTER 96.

An act respecting conciliation and labor.

SHORT TITLE.

1. This act may be cited as the conciliation and labor act.

INTERPRETATION.

2. In this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(a) "Minister" means the member of His Majesty's Council for Canada to whom, for the time being, the governor in council may assign the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

(b) "Railway" means any railway whether operated by steam, electricity or other motive power, and whether under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislature of any Province.

(c) "Railway employer" means any company or Government owning or operating wholly or to a lesser extent any railway operated by steam, electricity, or other motive power, and whether under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislature of any Province.

(d) "Railway employees" means persons engaged to perform any work or service in respect of any railway, whether operated by steam, electricity, or other motive power, and whether under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislature of any Province.

(e) "Difference" means any dispute, disagreement, or dissension which in the opinion of the minister may have caused or may cause a lockout or strike on a railway or which has interfered or may interfere with the proper and efficient transportation of mails, passengers, or freight, or the safety of persons employed upon any car or train.

(f) "Committee" means the committee of conciliation, mediation, and investigation established under the provisions of this act.

(g) "Board" means any board of arbitrators established under the provisions of this act.

(h) "Conciliation board" means anybody constituted for the purpose of settling disputes between employers other than any railway employer and workmen by conciliation or arbitration, or any association or body authorized by an agreement in writing made between employers other than railway employers and workmen to deal with such disputes.

(i) "Conciliator" means any person or persons appointed by the minister to mediate between an employer of labor and his workmen.

(j) "Lieutenant governor in council" means the lieutenant governor in council of the Province of Quebec, of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick, or of Prince Edward Island. (63–64 V., c. 24, ss. 2, 3, and 4; 3 E. VII., c. 55, ss. 2 and 7.)

TRADE DISPUTES.

3. Any conciliation board may apply to the minister for registration.

(2) The application must be accompanied by copies of the constitution, by-laws, and regulations of the conciliation board, with such other information as the minister may reasonably require. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 3.)

4. The minister shall keep a register of conciliation boards and enter therein with respect to each registered conciliation board its name and principal office, and such other particulars as he thinks expedient; and any registered conciliation board shall be entitled to have its name removed from the register on sending to the minister a written application to that effect.

(2) Every registered conciliation board shall furnish such returns, reports of its proceedings, and other documents as the minister may reasonably require. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 3.)

5. The minister may, on being satisfied that a registered conciliation board has ceased to exist or to act, remove its name from the register. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 3.)

6. Where a dispute exists or is apprehended between an employer or any class of employers and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, the minister may, if he thinks fit, exercise all or any of the following powers, namely:

(a) Inquire into the causes and circumstances of the dispute.

(b) Take such steps as to him seem expedient for the purpose of enabling the parties to the dispute to meet together, by themselves, or their representatives under the presidency of a chairman mutually agreed upon or nominated by him, or by some other person or body, with a view to the amicable settlement of the dispute.

(c) On the application of employers or workmen interested, and after taking into consideration the existence and adequacy of means available for conciliation in the district or trade and the circumstances of the case, appoint a conciliator.

(d) On the application of both parties to the dispute, appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators.

(2) The conciliator shall inquire into the causes and circumstances of the dispute by communication with the parties, and otherwise shall endeavor to bring about a settlement of the dispute, and shall report the proceedings to the minister.

(3) If a settlement of the dispute is effected either by conciliation or by arbitration a memorandum of the terms thereof shall be drawn up and signed by the parties or their representatives and a copy thereof shall be delivered to and kept by the minister. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 4.)

7. It shall be the duty of the conciliator to promote conditions favorable to a settlement by endeavoring to allay distrust, to remove causes of friction, to promote good feeling, to restore confidence, and to encourage the parties to come together and themselves effect a settlement, and also to promote agreements between employers and employees with a view to the submission of disputes to conciliation or arbitration before resorting to strikes or lockouts. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 5.)

8. The conciliator or conciliation board may, when deemed advisable, invite others to assist them in the work of conciliation. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 6.)

9. If, before a settlement is effected and while the dispute is under the consideration of a conciliator or conciliation board, such conciliator or conciliation board is of opinion that some misunderstanding or disagreement appears to exist between the parties as to the causes or circumstances of the dispute, and, with a view to the removal of such misunderstanding or disagreement, desires an inquiry under oath into such causes and circumstances, and, in writing signed by such conciliator or the members of the conciliation board, as the case may be, communicates to the minister such desire for inquiry, and if the parties to the dispute or their representatives in writing consent thereto, then, on his recommendation, the governor in council may appoint such conciliator or members of the conciliation board, or some other person or persons, a commissioner or commissioners, as the case may be, under the provisions of the inquiries act, to conduct such inquiry, and for that purpose may confer upon him or them the powers which under the said act may be conferred upon commissioners. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 7.)

10. Proceedings before any conciliation board or arbitrators shall be conducted in accordance with the regulations of such conciliation board or arbitrators, as the case may be, or as is agreed upon by the parties to the dispute. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 8.)

11. If it appears to the minister that in any district or trade adequate means do not exist for having disputes submitted to a conciliation board for the district or trade he may appoint any person or persons to inquire into the conditions of the district or trade and to confer with the employers and employed, and, if he thinks fit, with any local authority or body as to the expediency of establishing a conciliation board for such district or trade. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 9.)

STATISTICS.

12. With a view to the dissemination of accurate statistical and other information relating to the conditions of labor, the minister shall establish and have charge of a department of labor, which shall collect, digest, and publish in suitable form statistical and other information relating to the conditions of labor, shall institute and conduct inquiries into important industrial questions upon which adequate information may not at present be available, and issue at least once in every month a publication to be known as the Labor Gazette, which shall contain information regarding conditions of the labor market and kindred subjects, and shall be distributed or procurable in accordance with terms and conditions in that behalf prescribed by the minister. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 10.)

RAILWAY DISPUTES.

13. Whenever a difference exists between any railway employer and railway employees, and it appears to the minister that the parties thereto are unable satisfactorily to adjust the same, and that by reason of such difference remaining unadjusted a railway lockout or strike has been or is likely to be caused, or the regular and safe transportation of mails, passengers or freight has been or may be interrupted, or the safety of any person employed on a railway train or car has been or is likely to be endangered, the minister may, either on the application of any party to the difference or on the application of the corporation of any municipality directly affected by the difference, or of his own motion, cause inquiry to be made into the same and the cause thereof, and for that purpose may, under his hand and seal of office, establish a committee of conciliation, mediation, and investigation, to be composed of three persons, to be named one by the railway employer and one by the railway employees, parties to the difference, and the third by the two so named, or by the parties to the difference in case they can agree.

(2) The minister shall, in writing, notify each party to name a member of the committee, stating in such notice a time, not being later than five days after the receipt of such notice, within which this is to be done.

(3) If either party within such time, or any extension thereof that the minister, on cause shown, may grant, refuses or fails to name a member of the committee the minister or the lieutenant governor in council, as the case may be, as hereinafter provided, may appoint one in the place of the party so refusing or in default, and if the members of the committee so chosen fail to elect a third member, the minister or the lieutenant governor in council, as the case may be, may make such selection. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 3.)

14. It shall be the duty of the committee to endeavor, by conciliation and mediation, to assist in bringing about an amicable settlement of the difference to the satisfaction of both parties, and to report its proceedings to the minister. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 4.)

15. In case the conciliation committee is unable to effect an amicable settlement by conciliation or mediation the minister may refer the difference to arbitration

(2) In such case a board of arbitrators shall be established by the minister, under his hand and seal of office, and shall consist of—

(a) If acceptable to both parties, the committee; or

(b) In case of objection by either party to its representative on the committee, or to the chairman of the committee, new representatives in place of the member or members of the committee objected to, appointed in like manner as the original members of the committee, and of such of the committee as against whom no objection has been so made. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 5.)

16. If any member of such committee or board shall die, refuse, neglect, or become incapable to act, a successor shall be appointed in like manner as is hereinbefore provided in respect of the original member of the committee or board, and the appointing authority shall endeavor to appoint only such person as shall not be reasonably objected to by either party.

(2) Before such appointment the name of the person proposed to be appointed shall be submitted to both parties to the difference, and there shall be afforded to each of them an opportunity, within such time as the minister may fix, of making known to the appointing authority whether such proposed appointee is objected to. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 6.)

17. In the event of the establishment of a committee of conciliation, mediation, and investigation, or of a board of arbitrators to deal with any difference between the Government of Canada, in respect of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway and any of its employees, the power to appoint conciliators or arbitrators which otherwise, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, might be exercisable by the minister, shall be exercisable by the lieutenant governor in council whom the minister shall for that purpose in each case of conciliation or arbitration in writing name. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 7.)

18. The third member of the said committee or board shall be the chairman. (3 E VII., c. 55, s. 8.)

19. In case of arbitration pursuant to the provision hereinbefore contained, the findings and recommendations of the majority of the arbitrators shall be those of the board.

(2) In case of the absence of any one arbitrator from a meeting of the board the other two arbitrators shall not proceed unless it is shown that the third arbitrator has been notified of the meeting in ample time to admit of his attendance. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 9.)

20. Forthwith after the appointment of the board the chairman shall promptly convene the same, and the board shall, in such manner as it thinks advisable, make thorough, careful, and expeditious inquiry into all the facts and circumstances connected with the difference and the cause thereof, and shall consider what would be reasonable and proper to be done by both or either of the parties with a view to put an end to the difference and to prevent its recurrence, and shall, with all reasonable speed make to the minister a written report setting forth the various proceedings and steps taken by the board for the purpose of fully and correctly ascertaining all the facts and circumstances, and also setting forth said facts and circumstances and its findings thereon, including the cause of the difference and the board's recommendations, with a view to its removal and the prevention of its recurrence. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 10.)

21. The minister shall forthwith cause the report to be filed in the office of the department of labor and a copy thereof to be sent, free of charge, to each party to the difference, and to any municipal corporation as aforesaid, and to the representative of any newspaper published in Canada who may apply therefor.

(2) Any other person shall be entitled to a copy on payment of the actual cost thereof. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 11.)

22. For the information of Parliament and the public the report shall, without delay, be published in the Labor Gazette and be included in the annual report of the said department to the Governor General. (3 E. VII., c. 55 s. 12.)

23. For the purpose of such inquiry the board shall have all the power of summoning before it any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence, on oath or on solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and produce such documents and things as the board deems requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which it is inquiring, and shall have the same powers to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases; but no such witness shall be compelled to answer any question by his answer to which he might render himself liable to a criminal prosecution. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 13.)

24. On the application of any of the parties or on its own motion, the board may issue summonses to such persons as the board may think necessary to give evidence in the case.

(2) Any witness summoned by the board shall be entitled to free transportation over any railway en route when proceeding to the place of meeting of the board and thereafter returning to his home, and the board shall furnish to such witness a proper certificate evidencing his right to such free transportation. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 14.)

25. The summons shall be in such form as the minister shall prescribe, and may require such person to produce before the board any books, papers, or other documents in his possession or under his control in any way relating to the proceedings. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 15.)

26. All books, papers, and other documents produced before the board, whether voluntarily or in pursuance to summons, may be inspected by the board and also by such of the parties as the board allows, but the information obtained therefrom shall not be made public, and such parts of the books, papers, and documents as, in the opinion of the board, do not relate to the matter at issue, may be sealed up. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 16.)

27. The department of labor shall—

(a) Pay to each member of a committee or board his actual traveling expenses, and also to each of them, other than the chairman, $10 per day for each day on which he shall attend a meeting of the committee or board, or be engaged in traveling from or to his home, being in Canada, for the purpose of attending or after having attended a meeting of the committee or board.

(b) Pay to the chairman such sum as the governor in council deems reasonable.

(c) At its expense provide the committee or board with a stenographer, secretary, and any other clerical assistance that to the minister may appear necessary for the efficient carrying out of the provisions of this act. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 17.)

28. The report of the committee and the report of the board shall be signed by such of the members as concur therein, and may also be assigned by a dissenting member. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 18.)

29. No counsel or solicitor shall be entitled to appear before the board except with the consent of all parties to the difference, and, notwithstanding such consent, the board may, if it deems it advisable, decline to allow counsel or solicitors to appear before it.

(2) The parties to the difference may appear in person or by agents. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 19.)

30. No court of the Dominion of Canada or of any Province or Territory shall have or possess any power or jurisdiction to recognize or enforce or to receive in evidence any report of any board of arbitrators or of any committee of conciliation, or any testimony or proceedings before either such board or committee as against any party or person, or for any purpose whatsoever except in case of prosecution for perjury. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 20.)

31. Where the difference which is being inquired into affects a class of employees it shall not be necessary for them all to take part in the inquiry, but the class may be represented by a limited number chosen by a majority or by agents other than counsel or solicitors. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 21.)

32. If, in any proceedings before the board, any person willfully insults any member of the board, or willfully interrupts the proceedings, or, without good cause, refuses to give evidence, or is guilty in any other manner of any unlawful contempt in the face of the board, it shall be lawful for any member of the board or constable to take the person offending into custody and remove him from the precincts of the board, and retain him in custody until the rising of the board. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 22.)

33. It shall be in the discretion of the board to conduct its proceedings in public or in private. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 23.)

REGULATIONS.

34. The minister may from time to time make, alter, and amend regulations as to the time within which anything hereby authorized shall be done, and also as to any other matter or thing which appears to him necessary or advisable for the effectual working of the several provisions of this act. (3 E. VII., c. 55, s. 24.)

REPORT.

35. An annual report with respect to the matters transacted by the minister under this act shall be made by him to the Governor General, and shall be laid before Parliament within the first 15 days of each session thereof. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 12.)

EXPENSES.

36. The expenses incurred in the carrying out of this act shall be defrayed out of the money provided for the purpose by Parliament. (63–64 V., c. 24, s. 11.)

CHAPTER 29.

An act to amend the industrial disputes investigation act, 1907.

[Assented to 4th May, 1910.]

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Section 13 of the industrial disputes investigation act, 1907, is amended by adding after the word "peace," in the third line thereof, the words "or other person authorized to administer an oath or affirmation."

2. Subparagraph (b) of paragraph 2 of section 15 of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(b) A statutory declaration setting forth that, failing an adjustment of the dispute or a reference thereof by the minister to a board, to the best of the knowledge and belief of the declarant a lockout or strike will be declared, and (except where the application is made by an employer in consequence of an intended change in wages or hours proposed by the said employer) that the necessary authority to declare such lockout or strike has been obtained; or, where a dispute directly affects employees in more than one Province and such employees are members of a trade-union having a general committee authorized to carry on negotiations in disputes between employers and employees and so recognized by the employer, a statutory declaration by the chairman or president and by the secretary of such committee setting forth that, failing an adjustment of the dispute or a reference thereof by the minister to a board, to the best of the knowledge and belief of the declarants a strike will be declared, that the dispute has been the subject of negotiations between the committee and the employer, that all efforts to obtain a satisfactory settlement have failed, and that there is no reasonable hope of securing a settlement by further negotiations."

3. Paragraph (3) of section 16 of the said act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "or, where a dispute directly affects employees in more than one Province and such employees are members of a trade-union having a general committee authorized to carry on negotiations in disputes between employers and employees, and so recognized by the employer, may be signed by the chairman or president and by the secretary of the said committee."

4. Section 51 of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"51. The members of a board shall be remunerated for their services as follows:

"(a) To members other than the chairman, an allowance of $5 a day for a time not exceeding three days, during which the members may be actually engaged in selecting a third member of the board.

"(b) To each member of the board, including the chairman, an allowance at the rate of $20 for each day's sitting of the board and for each day necessarily engaged in traveling from or to his place of residence to attend or after attending a meeting of the board."

5. Section 57 of the said act is amended as follows: By striking out of the third and fourth lines thereof the words "and in every case where a dispute has been referred to a board," and substituting therefor the words "and in the event of such intended change resulting in a dispute"; by substituting the word "a" for the word "the" before the word "board," in the fifth line thereof; and by striking out the words "nor the employees," in the sixth line thereof.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the observations of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I find myself in absolute accord with all he has said about the law in respect to this matter and the constitutional limitations under which we labor. At the same time I have an idea about the situation that is confronting us which I wish to give to the Senate and to the country.

It has always seemed to me that, unless we were going eventually to the Government ownership and operation of the railroads of this country, we must have thorough and complete governmental control and regulation of those railroads. That theory, I think, has been accepted by the country and it has been accepted by Congress. Under that theory the rate-making power has been conferred by Congress upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have not yet gone far enough in our regulation and control of the railroads and that the present situation proves it. The present emergency that confronts this country seems to demonstrate that there are other necessary steps that we must take if we are to solve questions like those that now confront us in peace and for the best interest of the country.

I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have expressly conferred on it the full, absolute, and exclusive power not only to fix freight and passenger rates but also to determine what are just and reasonable rates of wage on these great interstate agencies of commerce; also the hours of service and the conditions generally under which labor is to be employed on these great interstate railroads. Already, in fixing the rates, the Interstate Commerce Commission, I understand, investigates most carefully every detail of expense to which these companies are put, even down to what the bolts cost and what every piece of equipment costs. It is impossible for the Interstate Commerce Commission to correctly fix rates, impossible for it to prescribe reasonable and just rates, for the transportation of persons and commodities through this country unless it also passes, either directly or indirectly, upon what amount is to be paid to the wage earners engaged in the work of these great companies.

It seems to me that it is absolutely essential that in the end the same commission that determines what the income of these railroads shall be shall also determine what their outgo shall be.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the power to fix wages were conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, would the Senator from Georgia go further and enforce the decree by compelling the men to work?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator in just a moment. I intended to come to that, but I would rather not answer the question until I finish what I intend to say on this particular subject. I do, however, intend to cover just that question a little later.

Mr. President, these subjects—income and cost of operation—are closely related. They are interdependent; they can not be separated. The same governmental authority that determines what the incomes of the railroads shall be must eventually determine, unless we are to abandon our present system, what every expense shall be for wages and for everything else. If I had the power to write the law as I think it ought to be written, I would write into the statute a proposition that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine not only the amount of wages but the hours during which labor shall be employed and the terms and conditions under which it is to be employed on railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Interstate Commerce Commission fixes the wages of the railway men, who is going to fix the prices of the things which the railway men must buy in order to support themselves?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, well, Mr. President, I do not think the Senator's question is quite as pertinent as his questions usually are.

Mr. CUMMINS. There has got to be some relation between those things as well as other things.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Government does not fix what they shall pay.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. And, yet, some one must fix what these men are to get in the way of wages. Is it to be the railroad companies themselves, who have got a selfish interest in it, may be, who may want to divert a larger percentage than ought to be diverted to pay dividends on stocks that may be purely or partly water, or on bonds that may be in the same condition, or, it may be, to pay too much for the executive officers or for overhead charges; or is it better to have these wages determined by an impartial tribunal that represents the public?

My proposition is that the same commission, representing the public and all the people, that determines one of these factors that enter this problem, ought to determine them all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, hitherto those questions have been determined, of course, by the conflict of commercial forces; by the law of competition, as it has been modified, or disturbed sometimes by combinations or agreements; but whenever the Government of the United States attempts to fix what a man shall get for his work, it ought also somehow or other to take care of the price of things that he has to buy.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I apprehend that the Interstate Commerce Commission would take that into consideration. By law we fix the salaries of Members of Congress; we fix by law the salaries of many thousands and hundreds of thousands of Government employees; we fix many salaries by statute; we fix many wages by statute; and it is not a new proposition to say that the wages of men who work on public work shall be regulated or controlled in some way by public law.

So I say that the railroads of this country, which are engaged in the performance of a great function of a quasi public character, are in such position, and the position of the country is such in reference to them, that the wages and the hours and the terms of labor are all matters of public concern, are matters that ought to be regulated, not by the railroads themselves alone and not by the men alone, but by a board representing the public.

The Senator from Iowa said just now that these wages had been fixed as the result of industrial forces. Very often they have been fixed in proportion to the relative strength, or more in accordance with the relative strength, of these conflicting parties. Usually, I think, the rate of wages and the terms and conditions under which labor has been employed on these great railroad systems has been fixed more with reference to the strength of the railroad owners or of the railroad men—one or the other—than they have with reference to any inherent principles of justice or with reference to the possible rights of others that may be affected thereby.

Now, it does seem to me as though we have come to the time, Mr. President—and that the country realizes it and this present situation forces it to realize—that we have come to the time when somebody else, some high governmental authority, representing 100,000,000 people in the United States, representing the innocent bystanders in this Republic, who are liable to be injured if either side in a controversy like this proves stubborn and intractable, has a right to intervene in behalf of 100,000,000 people who will be hurt, who will have their industries suspended, who will have their businesses stop, and who will have production and commerce in this country halted unless some permanent system can be devised of getting at a just result in that matter.

Therefore I have thought that, instead of a temporary commission of the character suggested by the President, the great Interstate Commerce Commission—the most expert body; indeed, the only expert body that we have in our governmental system so far as railroad matters are concerned—with their wide knowledge and wide experience in all sorts of railroad matters, ought to have this question also submitted to them for their consideration and determination. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the two things of railroad rates and railroad wages are indissolubly connected; they are interwoven; they are interdependent, and indissolubly so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr NORRIS. The Senator from Georgia is discussing the very question which I asked the Senator from Iowa some time ago, which is one in which I have taken a deep interest. I want to ask the Senator whether or not he believes it would be possible to go a step further and to include in this regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission not only the fixing of the salaries of employees but of the officials as well? As I understand, he would include the officials as well as the employees?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And he would fix the compensation which the financial or fiscal agents of the various railroads should receive?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; that is a necessary part of it.

Mr. NORRIS. So I wanted to say to the Senator that it seemed to me that it is as necessary to regulate the salaries of those officials as it is to regulate the wages of the men.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the presidents, the general managers, the chairmen, the directors, and the other officials of the road are being overpaid, the public is footing the bill. Maybe the railroad men, the men who work with their hands on railroads, are being paid too much in some cases. I would not only commit to the jurisdiction of this great commission the question of the wages of the men who work by the day, but I would include in that regulation the salary of every officer from the highest official of the railroad to the lowest paid section hand who works on the road.

Mr. NORRIS. My question involved, if the Senator will permit me, going even a step beyond that. Railroads in their financial operations pay commissions, and so forth.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think all those things—every factor of railroad expense and every factor of railroad disbursement—should eventually be committed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that this must be done if regulation is to prove efficient.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Georgia is now discussing regulation, and not public ownership of railroads.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. What is the difference between your plan of regulation and public ownership, except that under regulation you leave a certain number of individuals who draw private gain from the industry? If you are going to take over and regulate the rates and wages and regulate the commissions that are paid to financial agents and regulate the salaries—and you must take into consideration all those things——

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. Then, the Senator will agree with me that that is the longest step in the direction of public ownership that has yet been taken.

Mr. HARDWICK. On the contrary, I do not hesitate to assert to the Senator and to the Senate that, in my judgment, it is the most effectual means, if not the only means, of preventing public ownership that I can think of.

Mr. BORAH. When the Government regulates rates, regulates salaries, and regulates wages, some one will have to be found who is willing to put money into railroad enterprises.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is easy enough to answer.

Mr. BORAH. There has been less railroad construction during the last two years than during any two years since the railroads began to be built to any extent in this country. The railroad men claim that the fact that people are hesitating to put their money into railroad enterprises is because they make a much larger percentage in a number of other investments which may be made. It seems to me that if the Government takes the railroads entirely out of the hands of the men who put up the money for them investors will refuse to invest, and the Government must inevitably take possession of the railroads.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator pleases, that is only a question of wise regulation. We have not arrived at perfection yet. It may be that the railroads have not had their rates adjusted properly; it may be that they are not permitted to make as much money as we must allow them to make in order to sufficiently encourage railroad development; it may be that mistakes have been made along some of the lines suggested by the Senator; but that does not prove that the system is unsound; that does not prove that the plan is wrong. If we have made mistakes——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me; I want to proceed to answer the question of the Senator from Idaho a little more at length.

The Senator from Idaho says this is a great step toward public ownership. I do not think so. The worst vice of public ownership would be the operation of the railroads by the public and the fact that the men who work for them, two million in all, in round numbers, who are also citizens of the United States and voters of the United States, would thus be thrown, in a way, into politics, not only to their own detriment but also to the great danger of the general public.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to fix rates and fix wages, the workingmen on the railroads must know that upon that commission they depend for their wages; and therefore they will be just as much interested in the man who shall appoint the commissioners and just as partisan with reference to the appointments as if they were working for the Government and were, therefore, interested in the man who would continue to operate the railroads as President indirectly through the commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all, because there are other forces that will always balance this one. Let me illustrate: Four hundred thousand railroad men want higher wages, but 1,600,000 more of them, who are unorganized, unrepresented in this controversy, will also want higher wages if the present demand be granted. Not only that, but, if the Senator please, there are millions more of men, men who work in factories, in mines, and on the farm, who are also interested in this question, because the tax that is levied for transportation is a tax on the product that each one of them makes, and the larger the percentage of the value of the product each one of them makes that is taken for transportation, the less wages they are likely to get. For instance, it has been estimated—to give the Senator an idea of the thought in my mind on that question—that if this wage increase be granted it would put a tax of something like 50 cents a bale on every bale of cotton raised in the great Commonwealth in which I live, and, indeed, throughout the South. Now, one of the factors that has to be taken into consideration is what effect it will have on the people who produce cotton, on the people who produce grain, on the people who mine, and on the people who work in the factories. Considerations of the character the Senator from Idaho suggests are unavoidable in a republican form of government where all, or practically all men, are invested with the ballot; still the fact remains that railroad employees would not get their jobs from the Government, the railroads would not be operated by the Government, and there would be only regulation.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. HARDWICK. A thorough and complete regulation. Now, let me ask the Senator a question in turn. Is there any more reason for regulating by law, through a commission established by Congress, freight rates and passenger rates than there is to regulate the wages paid to employees?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I do not think there is very much difference between the two propositions. I only regard two steps in the direction of public ownership as more than one step. Let me call the Senator's attention to a proposition. A few months ago the railroads made an application for an increase in freight rates, and after a tremendous propaganda, carried on all through the country by the use of political influence and everything else, freight rates were raised on an average of 5 per cent, which gave the railroads $50,000,000 increase of revenue annually. Now come the employees who ask for wages which the railroads claim will add an additional $100,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Sixty million dollars, I think.

Mr. BORAH. The railroads have estimated it all the way from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 in their written statement, as I read it yesterday. However, I will say $60,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. One hundred million dollars, according to the demands of the men, and fifty or sixty million dollars under the suggestion of the President.

Mr. BORAH. We will not quarrel over figures, because any are large enough. We have, then, I will say, an increase of $50,000,000 in freight rates and a proposed increase of $60,000,000 in wages, and the suggestion made that there shall be a method by which the $60,000,000 to be paid the workingmen shall be met by an increase in freight rates.

Now, if the railroads can raise rates whenever they want to through a propaganda and the workingmen can raise wages whenever they want to through political influence, and all these raises can be charged up, as they must be it seems, to the people, how long does the Senator suppose it is going to be until the man out in the field producing and the shippers and consumers are going to say "We will take this over and run it ourselves. If we have got to pay all the expense, we will take all the benefits." The manner in which the 5 per cent rate decision was brought about, the manner in which it is proposed to take care of this situation, will cause many people to say that the only escape from this perpetual motion in freight raises is to take charge of the roads. Now, Mr. President, reasonable rates must be paid and reasonable wages must be paid, but that reasonableness must be founded upon facts, not upon political influence over the commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. In any event the dangers the Senator suggests are not nearly so great as those involved in Government ownership, and if we are to rely on regulation, then it follows that we must have efficient regulation. That is why I say the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Government, must have jurisdiction and control over every important factor in this problem, or otherwise the day of Government ownership is at hand. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am unable to see any substantial or important or material difference in principle or otherwise between conferring upon this commission the power to fix wages and conferring upon this commission the power to fix freight rates. So much for that phase of the question.

No matter what is done here and now to meet the present crisis and to bridge over the present difficulty, in the end I am just as certain as I can be that the great Interstate Commerce Commission, to be reorganized to consist of nine members, divided into three separate divisions, working independently, according to the terms of proposed legislation, will also have control of the wage question, and I believe that when the bill pending shall pass at least one of the divisions should devote its time for a good while to working out a complete adjustment of railway wages and railway labor conditions throughout the country.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Without expressing my opinion with reference to the merits of the suggestion which the Senator has made that this matter should be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. HARDWICK. No, not exactly that; I did not make that suggestion. My suggestion was to refer such questions permanently to that body; I did not mean the particular matter now in dispute.

Mr. JONES. I understand that; but the Senator contends that the commission should be vested with such power.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think that it would meet, as well probably as it could be met, the problem of the use of political pressure and influence upon the commission if it were composed of men appointed for life?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I am inclined to think it would. I do not intend to commit myself irrevocably to that proposition, but that may be necessary.

Mr. JONES. It does seem so to me. It seems to me that the hardest blow ever directed at the Interstate Commerce Commission was when high political pressure was brought to bear upon it to increase rates and when the suggestion was made in every newspaper in the country, whether true or not, that the President of the United States had assured some of the representatives of the railroads that he would use his personal and official influence to secure an increase of rates; and in order to avoid, in so far as we can, the influence of political pressure, if we are going to leave such questions to the commission, or any other body, it ought to be composed of men who hold their positions for life, so as to free them from political influence as the Supreme Court Justices are freed from such influence.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator's suggestion is valuable and interesting, and I am not sure but that it is sound. I am inclined to the same view of the matter myself, although, as I have said, I would not want to commit myself irrevocably to it, because I have not quite made up my mind on that question; but undoubtedly there ought to be a very long term of office. The danger, of course, about a life tenure is that when you get a bad man in you never get him out. There is a good deal of danger in life tenure in any sort of office, but undoubtedly we ought to do what we can to remove the Interstate Commerce Commissioners from participation in active politics and to put them as much as we can in the position the Supreme Court Justices occupy—to detach them from active participation in all political and partisan squabbles in which this country engages.

Mr. JONES. We ought to throw about them the protection that would deter politicians from trying to influence them, just as we have deterred them from attempting to influence the Supreme Court.

Mr. HARDWICK. At the same time the Senator from Washington must realize the danger that is involved in a life tenure of office——

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. If we get a bad man or a man who looks like he is all right when he starts in, and he goes wrong for some reason or is corrupted in any way, of course it might be said we could dismiss him from office; but it is impossible always to prove acts of that kind, and the danger from life tenure of office along certain lines is so great that I would not want to commit myself irrevocably to the Senator's suggestion, although undoubtedly I am prepared to say now that we ought to lengthen the term of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator think we could accomplish the same beneficent results without taking at least these extra steps toward the field of paternalism, if we would give conciliatory power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and authorize and require them in case of disputes to call before them the shipping interests, representing indirectly the public, the railroad officials, and the representatives of the labor organizations, and then have them pass upon the questions involved, if not in the form of a judgment, at least by way of reporting and recommending rates for labor—its action, I would say, would be confined to that in instances of this kind—that would be just to the shipper, to labor, and to the railroad, leaving it to the conscience of the public as a potent force to secure the result and the acceptance of their report?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is merit in the Senator's suggestion, of course, Mr. President, but in my own mind I am prepared to go much further than that; I am prepared to stand where I stand now, on the sentiments that I have expressed to-day; and I do not regard it as paternalistic, either, because the great railroad companies and their employees of this land are public servants and are engaged in a quasi-public business. While I would be willing to regulate wages by law—for that is what it amounts to when you delegate the determination of that question to the commission—it is simply and solely because they are engaged in a public service. I would not be willing, however, to apply that principle to any form of private industry or to any line of private business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the Senator from Georgia quite understands my position. I do not doubt our authority to create a tribunal—whether you call it a court or a commission or what not—to try any dispute or any controversy that has arisen between employer and employee in interstate commerce and determine the dispute, and if the dispute involves a matter of wages, then the commission or tribunal can determine the wages. Of that I have no question at all; but is the Senator from Georgia quite clear that Congress can confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, as a regulatory measure binding upon the railroad companies, authority to fix the wages of the employees of a railway?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have the very gravest doubt about it. In fact, I am absolutely sure it can not be done.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator and I are in irreconcilable mental conflict if he takes that view.

Mr. CUMMINS. I just want to suggest to the Senator why I do not think it can be done. I think Congress can do it. Congress can fix the wages of all the railway operatives if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just as Congress could fix the freight rates.

Mr. CUMMINS. Congress can fix the freight rates; but Congress can not delegate to a commission every authority that it can exercise.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, Congress has the same power to delegate its power with reference to wages that it has with reference to freights. We would have to have a standard fixed on both subjects. We would have to say "reasonable and just wages."

Mr. CUMMINS. I differ from the Senator from Georgia in that respect, although I am sure we do not differ upon the principle of law. Congress can delegate to a commission the authority to establish a freight rate because it can give the commission a rule to apply.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is speaking in my time, and I want to get in my ideas, too, in connection with his, because I think maybe we can get together if we do. If it sets up a standard like it did on the rate question, why can it not do the same thing in the case of wages?

Mr. CUMMINS. Simply because there is no standard.

Mr. HARDWICK. "A reasonable and just scale of wages." That is all we said about rates—that they should be "reasonable and just rates."

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no such thing as a reasonable and just wage.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then there is no such thing as a reasonable and just rate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes; there is. That had been determined long before we ever thought of creating the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is just bound by narrow precedents, then, if he thinks that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will ask the Senator to tell me why a carpenter should get $5 a day and a lawyer $50 a day? Why is it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, well, tell me why one rate for a shorter distance should be more than another rate for a longer distance.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can tell the Senator why. Because the cost of the service is greater.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, that is undoubtedly so in the other case, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. Whenever you reach the question of determining what is a fair and reasonable compensation for a man's labor, whether it is mental or whether it is physical, you enter a field in which I think there is no standard, and Congress could not prescribe any.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has a peculiar view, I think, in regard to that. It is a standard for service in either case. The rate is for service. The wage is for service. I can not understand the operation of the mind of a man who can see any difference between the two. It might be true, Mr. President, if this is what the Senator has in mind. It might be more difficult to fix a standard; or, once you have fixed exactly the same standard—to wit, a reasonable and just rate or wage—it might be more difficult to apply the standard in the one case than in the other. But the principle is exactly the same, both the principle of law and the principle of public policy—exactly the same. Just as we said to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "We require you to establish rates that shall be reasonable and just," we can say to that same commission in exactly the same terms, in identically the same words that we employed in regard to that question, "We require you to set up a reasonable and just standard of wages." It is for service in either case and in both cases. You can set up a standard or a rule just as securely, just as faithfully, just as certainly, and just as accurately in one case as you can in the other.

I have the greatest respect for the opinion of the Senator from Iowa and for his very great ability, and yet I can not see, to save my life—he has not shaken me at all in that—how there is the slightest difference in principle between the two cases. It may be harder to apply the rule with accuracy and with justice in one case than it is in the other, just as it might be harder to tell the Senator why a lawyer was entitled to $50 for a certain piece of work when a carpenter got only $5 for a piece of work that involved very much harder physical labor than the lawyer ever performed. There is no way of establishing the reasons for those discriminations in compensation that exist except to say that certain education is required, certain training is required, certain mental qualities are required in the one case that are not required in the other, and therefore higher compensation is allowed for the one service than for the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to give him a concrete case, and then illustrate his point on that case?

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall be very glad to have the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose that the commission or the board should think it proper to raise the wages of trainmen who are already, we will say, receiving $4.50 a day, and by raising their wages 25 cents a day it increased the cost of freight so that a laborer working just as many hours, possibly on work that required about the same amount of intelligence, who was receiving but $2 a day, had to pay a dollar more per ton for his coal, and being compelled to purchase, say, 10 tons of coal during the winter, he would be himself paying $10 toward the wages of men who were receiving $4.50, out of his earnings of $2 a day. How would the Senator apply the reasonable-wage idea to the employees of the railway company without taking into consideration the earnings of this laborer and what effect the raise would have upon his expenses?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly the Senator is right. I suggested myself, long before the Senator's question, that all those considerations would have to be gone into very carefully. I will tell the Senator this: It is much better, it is much safer for this country, it is much fairer both for the railroads and for the men to have things of that sort gone into carefully by a great public-service commission that is impartial, not only as between the railroads and the men but that is also representative of all the interests of this country and of every laboring man in it and of every industry in it. That is the reason why I think the Interstate Commerce Commission in the end must regulate wages as well as rates.

Mr. President, I have about concluded what I had to say, except that I want to make this suggestion: I find myself thoroughly in accord, not only with the statement of the law made by the Senator from Iowa this morning, but also with his views about individual and personal liberty, and the sacredness of individual and personal liberty, and the duty and obligation resting on us, as Members of the Senate, to preserve it and not to impair it. We can not and we ought not, under any circumstances or for any provocation, in any situation or for any reason, to enact any sort of legislation that will make men work involuntarily, or will tend to do it. For one I will never vote for such a proposition. For one I will never support such a propaganda, no matter where it comes from nor what the apparent necessities of the moment are. But I say to you that we can and we ought, and it seems to me that the present situation proves that we must, after once we lay the foundations for a just determination of these wage problems, provide that men shall not, in combination and in conspiracy and in concert, tie up the great transportation agencies of this country and halt commerce and industry throughout the country. I am in favor of securing to these men, by any way that can be devised, a fair and just determination of their demands for adequate pay and for reasonable labor conditions. Once we provide such a system—and I believe it will be along the lines of my suggestion whenever we come to its permanent solution—then I would thoroughly favor the enactment of a law making it criminal for any number of men to conspire to impair or destroy the effectiveness or the efficiency of the great interstate transportation agencies.
